In this week's NEWS, for example, we find a story from the Philadelphia territory that tabulates some of the "Eyes of Youth" performances, listing the theatres with a statement of the usual length of run together with the departure from custom in the case of that production. It is only a few weeks ago that we read a story of "Pollyanna" bookings in which a certain number of theatres totaled a surprising number of days' booking.

A number of long-hoped-for events seem to be coming true in this day and date of the motion picture epoch. And it is interesting to note in view of past editorial performance in the NEWS that the happenings are interlocked with the tried slogan, "Fewer pictures, better pictures—and longer runs."

Is Percentage the next addition to the list?

The Small Man's Pet Kick

WHILE exchange managers are congratulating themselves on the fact that exhibitors are willing to forget release dates in order to book worth while productions, we hope that their New York offices are backing them up with good prints.

The subject of prints is one that we seldom see mentioned i the output of the publicity departments. But if there is one matte that every "eighty-per-center" has on his mind all the time this is i

Your "eighty-per-center" may be impressed by the volubl described advertising aids, he may learn to like the word "coopera tion" that he hears so much. He may think your exchange manage is the prince of good fellows, and your productions the best—but he'll swing the bulk of his business to the organization that assure him consistently good prints.

His audiences may forgive a mediocre picture, at the worst the blame it on the producer and not on the local exhibitor. But rainy, patched-up film, frequent break-downs and irritating waits— these are thrown on the shoulders of the manager, his operato and his equipment.

And there is no forgiveness.

Having Their Own Troubles

FROM all the reports we hear distributors are deserving o sympathy, however, for the conditions they have had to fac in the handling of prints since the early years of the wa Prints have not stood up nearly as long as in the previous years.

We plead innocence of technical knowledge, but the explanatio that has been given us for this condition is the scarcity of campho used in the celluloid base. Camphor, so our informant told us, i practically a monopoly of the Japanese Government. In year before the war the "Camphor Trust" made its allotted quotas eac year to American manufacturers, and there was always plenty t go around. But the heavy demands of the war have upset th market, with the consequent necessity of seeking synthetic substitutes.

No one ever gave a thought before to the possibility of Japa having a hand in the control of the bed-rock source of pictur production.

A Treat for Nippon

SUBJECTS on this page just seem to link together this week We were talking about delayed first runs and the conversa sation turned to Japan. Which brings to mind the fact tha we heard a few weeks ago that "The Birth of a Nation" woul soon be given its "first run" in Japan.

Is there any danger that the charm of Griffith's master-work wil be dimmed any for the Japanese by the fact that the "premiere was many years ago? Will "The Little Colonel" be any the les loved, or the surging Klu Klux Klan scenes any the less riotousl applauded?

Not a chance. No more than there is a chance of such productions as "The Miracle Man" failing to come back even in this country years from now to win new laurels.

Good Cheer for All

ALONG with the many encouraging things we have been abl to say on this page this week, we are moved to remark tha the pace shown in advertising this year by exhibitors i cheerful enough to brighten up any pessimist.

The thought is brought to our mind by a selection of "Th Beloved Cheater" clippings that lie on our desk.

Not a worth-while production goes out nowadays that within few weeks does not bring dozens of corking advertising displays t our desk. Original copy and ads built on producers' aids divide th honors. But there are few cities where productions are bein "under-advertised."

Industry to Fight New York Menaces

D. W. GRIFFITH PURCHASES SCREEN RIGHTS TO "WAY DOWN EAST"

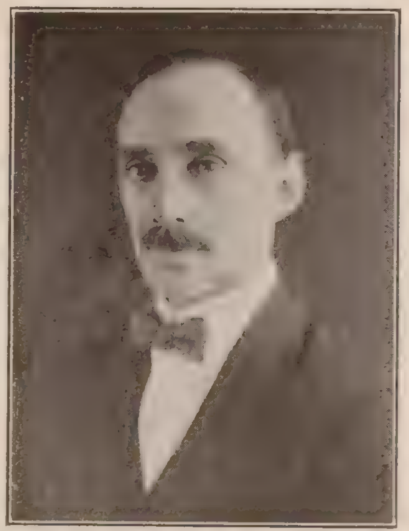
D. W. GRIFFITH is reported to have secured from Wm. A. Brady, at a cost of $175,000, the motion-picture rights to "Way Down East," the world-famous pastoral comedy which for the past twenty-two years has been one of the biggest successes of the American stage.

"Way Down East" was originally produced in New York at the Manhattan theatre, in February, 1898, with a cast including Burr McIntosh, Howard Kyle, Phoebe Davies, Louise Galloway, George Backus, Felix Haney, Frank Lander, John Bunny, Ella Hugh Wood and others whose names have been more or less identified with its success for a score of years.

Lottie Blair Parker's original story will be followed closely in the screen version by Mr. Griffith, who also has been offered the courtesy of the original prompt book used by Joseph R. Grismer, who elaborated and produced the original play twenty-two years ago. Work on the production of "Way Down East" will be begun immediately at the Griffith studios in Mamaroneck, (N. Y.), and it will be released during the coming summer.

Sunday Closing and Censorship Bills Again to be a Topic of Threatening Legislation in Albany; Civic League Pushing Fight

CENSORSHIP and Sunday motion picture bills will be introduced in the New York Legislature of this State during the next few weeks to come, and fought to a finish. This much was disclosed today when it was learned that at the request of George H. West of the New York State Civic League, a bill is now being drafted by the State Drafting Commission for the purpose of repealing the present law which allows each city, through its own governing body, to decide for itself whether or not its motion picture houses shall be open on Sunday. It is not known who will introduce this bill. The Civic League will be behind the measure, and it is claimed by Mr. West, and the Rev. O. R. Miller, that it will have the support of ministerial unions throughout the State.



A. George Smith appointed Goldwyn's general representative for Europe

Action to Come Soon

Two censorship bills are now looming up with the probability that each will be introduced within the next two or three weeks. The Civic League is said to be behind one which will be presented in all probability by Assemblyman John W. Slacer of Buffalo, the introducer of a similar bill last year, which failed to pass in the Senate.

This bill calls for censorship under the direction of the State Board of Regents, and includes the appointment by that board of three persons who shall serve as a board of censors, and to whom descriptions of all films must be furnished. The board will be vested with much authority and its members will be paid handsome salaries.

The second of the so-called censorship bills will be the outgrowth of inquiries now being made by the special committee named by the State Conference of Mayors and which held its first sessions in New York City on January 15 and 16, and which will hold a third session in this city on February 2, and to which the press will not be admitted. Reports of the four sub-committees will be made at that time. Another committee will then be named, which will whip these reports into another report which will be presented by the Conference of Mayors to the Legislature as showing what is demanded by the cities of this State in further regulation of the motion picture.

As majority leader of the Senate, J. Henry Walters of Syracuse, is in a position to wield a vast amount of influence when the bills come up to a vote. Senator Walters is absolutely noncommittal when it comes to censorship in New York State. Secretary Capes of the State Conference of Mayors, while in Syracuse last week, endeavored to ascertain Senator Walters' position on censorship, but was unsuccessful, although the legislature evinced a keen interest when the matter was broached to him, but that interest centered largely on what the State Conference of Mayors proposed to recommend.

Mr. Capes said today that all four sub-committees would be in a position to report at the meeting on Feb-

George Smith with Goldwyn

Widely Traveled Picture Man to Look After Foreign Interests of Company

A. GEORGE SMITH has been appointed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as its general representative for Europe. Charles Lapworth, formerly on the editorial staff of the London Daily Mail, and more recently associated with Charles Chap- n, will co-operate with Mr. Smith in he handling of Goldwyn advertising and publicity in the European field. In engaging Mr. Smith to represent he Goldwyn interests in Europe, this organization feels it has secured a man superbly equipped through years of experience in foreign markets to meet the changing conditions in the distribution of American films abroad.

Mr. Smith's active interest in motion pictures started in 1910 when, located at Cape Town, he became one of the first distributors of photoplays to exhibitors in Africa. At that time here were not more than twenty-five exhibitors to be served, where today here are approximately three hundred.

In 1911 he formed Smith Film Agency, Ltd., which was eventually ncorporated in the African Film Trust, Ltd., in 1913, six companies eing merged in the new organization. Mr. Smith took an active part in the ormation of the African Films Trust Ltd., and was general manaer for the company until October 1919.

Mr. Smith's first visit to America was in 1917, after he had made an exhaustive study of motion picture onditions in the Orient. At the time f his visit, ninety-five per cent of he film business in Africa went to ritish firms in London. One of the bjects of Mr. Smith's trip to this ountry was to see if the business ould not be better handled here. The esult of his investigations was the ormation of the New York branch f the I. V. T. A. and since then, contions have changed so radically that nety-five per cent of Africa's busiess which went to London is today ceived direct by American proicers.

Returning to Africa in 1918, Mr. Smith found conditions so altered that he was forced to visit New York again to arrange for the purchase of films. He came via the East, opening exchanges along his route of travel, and remained in New York as a representative of the I. V. T. A. until his recent resignation to take charge of Goldwyn's interests in Europe.

Mr. Lapworth, one of England's best known journalists, is also widely traveled. A writer on international affairs he lived at various periods in Berlin, in Rome and in Paris.

Another Big Theatre for Los Angeles?

It now develops that Los Angeles will probably have another big theater which will be located on what is at present known as Mercantile Place. This site is 120 x 330 feet, and owned at present by the Board of Education of the city. Sometime ago the information was given out that this had been sold to Ackerman and Harris, owners of the Hippodrome circuit of vaudeville houses on the Pacific Coast, affiliated with Marcus Loew. Since that time, Ackerman and Harris have purchased another site at Seventh and Broadway and Mercantile Place will now be used for a theater by Mr. Raemich, who is affiliated with Ackerman & Harris in a number of their enterprises.

Magnates Reach Coast

Marcus Loew and Richard A. Rowland arrived in Los Angeles on January 26th, prepared to survey conditions at the Metro West Coast producing plant.

Other Coast news briefs tell of the leasing of the Willis and Inglis studios by Charles Ray Productions, Inc. Production will begin shortly on the initial First National release. Richard Willis is manager of production, Wesley Gilmore, studio manager.

Important Shifts in First Run Ranks

Announcement was made this week by Harry Koplar that Koplar and Goldman, of St. Louis, have purchased the Grand Central Theatre in that city. The house has been conducted until now by William Siever, and with its purchase goes an interest in the First National franchise for that territory.

Koplar and Goldman already operate sixteen suburban theatres in the St. Louis district, and have another one in course of construction, the Del Monte. This will seat 2,588. With the first run prestige of the Grand Central the Koplar and Goldman chain looms up with still greater importance.

Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers have purchased the lease on Talley's Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, and with it Talley's First National franchise in which Joe Rickards, of Phoenix, Arizona, was also interested. Gore Brothers operate nine other theatres in Los Angeles, five of them downtown houses.

Theatre Interest Sold

The Raymond C. Cash Co., of Waterville, N. Y., has sold its controlling interest in the Waterville Amusement Co. to Raymond O. Hillette, the Milfred Theatre, Green, N. Y. The change is effective March 1.

Chaos In Ontario--Everything Censored

Farmers' Government Passes Order Providing for Censoring of Posters, Stills, News Ads, Programs, Bills and All Else

THE Farmers' Government of the Province of Ontario, which came into power last October, has thrown a grenade at the moving picture encampment of the Province, with the announcement made by Peter Smith, the new Provincial Treasurer, that an order in council had been passed which provided for the censoring of all moving picture posters, still photographs, newspaper advertisements, periodical advertising, lobby displays, printed bulletins, hand bills, programmes, banners, flags and other material used by theatres in Ontario.

The order provides for the establishment of a special board of censors, and Mr. Otter Elliott of Toronto, chief inspector of moving picture theatres, has been appointed chairman of the new bureau. Mr. J. J. Burns has been named as one of the members of the board and a third member is to be selected shortly. It is anticipated that the third person for the board will be a woman.

Rural Exhibitors' Troubles

Announcement regarding the establishment of the censorship on all moving picture advertising came a short time after the appointment of a woman to the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors at a salary of $25 per week. The news provided a distinct shock for the moving picture interests who felt that they are to be the special target of the Farmers' Party which now holds sway.

Not only will the exchange and exhibitors be called upon to submit all advertising for censorship but they will have to pay annual fees for the pleasure. Film exchanges, according to the order, will be required to pay a fee of $150 per year and all exhibitors will pay $10 per year each. Penalties ranging from $20 to $200 are prescribed for failure to have all advertising matter approved by the new board before it is used.

The exhibitors in cities and towns 200 and 300 miles from Toronto, where the new board will hold sway, are at a loss to know how they can submit newspaper advertisements and special lobby displays, as well as original folders or leaflets, to the bureau for censorship and have them back in time for proper use with booked attractions. The opinion is expressed that the newspapers as well as the exhibitors will suffer as it is difficult to see how advertising copy can be prepared days ahead of intended use in order that the new censors can place their stamp of approval on the copy. The order will also have the effect, it is believed, of discouraging out-of-town exhibitors from using original dodgers and other timely advertising features and it will also tend to discourage the use of special lobby displays. It is also difficult to see how exhibitors will be enabled to take advantage of local developments in order to attract attention for current features.

There has been no word yet that the Ontario Government proposes to establish branch censorship boards in cities which are located several hundred miles from Toronto.

Pageant to Feature in New Equity Picture

A pageant in which two thousand people will participate and in which motion picture players will constitute the entire cast of principals, is to be staged at Riverside, Cal., April 4, Easter Sunday. Clara Kimball Young and her producing organization are to be responsible for the entire pageant, and Miss Young is to be seen in the leading role, it is stated.

Miss Young and her company will stage the pageant on the lawn of the Mission Inn thirty mles from Los Angeles, and the drama pageant will be Sarah Ellis Ryan's story of Southern California, "The Soul of Rafael" in which Miss Young will appear later in a motion picture production for Equity. "The Soul of Rafael", which will be staged, is woven around the missions of the Sunset State, and lends itself admirably to this enterprise.

New Theatrical Corporation Started; Orpheum in Moscow, Ida., in New Hands

ADVICES received recently from the Northwest inform of the organization of a new theatrical corporation, to be known as "The G. and G. Theatre Company, Inc.," in Seattle, with a capitalization of $500,000.

Donald Geddes is president, and Myrtle Geddes is secretary and treasurer. Harry Sigmond is general manager.

Five suburban playhouses have been purchased by the corporation; they are the College Play House, Empress theatre, Ballard, Majestic theatre, and the Fremont theatre. The grounds for the new 'Varsity theatre have been broken and the foundation laid for a thousand-seated house, also purchased by the "G. and G. Theatre Company."

Speaking of the corporation's policy, Mr. Sigmond said: "Our specialty will be the management and ownership of suburban theatres, to give the people in the suburbs as good a service as the downtown theatres give. We will show first-class productions, and h
first-class shows. Besides the five t

'Flu on Decline in Chicago; Theatres Aided

The epidemic of influenza which has been having a depressing affect on theatre and moving picture attendance in Chicago and the surrounding territory, according to statements of Health Commissioner Robertson, has reached its pinnacle, and the number of cases reported daily is expected to diminish from now on.

Moving picture theatres took an active part in the campaign to combat the epidemic by displaying sldes prepared by the Health Department, telling how to prevent and treat the disease, and also generally carried out the orders of the Health Department as to ventlating the houses properly and carrying out the other methods of sanita required. Only four or five exhibi

Associated Exhibitors Opens Career

Newly Organized Group Includes Representative Membership and Is Well Supported Financially; List of Officers and Directors Stated

According to the report issued by the newly organized Associated Exhibitors, the association begins its career with a formidable array of membership, unlimited financial resources and a well defined program of action and basic policies. " The Associated Exhibitors, Inc.," announces the report, " which involves franchise holders representing two hundred and fifty of the leading theatres of the country, and which will have a circuit and other alliances with a strength of eight thousand theatres, was organized this week at a meeting of the most important exhibitors of the country held in New York City. It represents the most formidable combination of theatre owners in the history of the motion picture industry and is devoted to the development and purchase of pictures of the highest standard and the protection of exhibitors against possible pernicious combines.

Messmore Kendall, President of the Associated Exhibitors

Officers and Directors

" At the first meeting of the organization Messmore Kendall, president of the Capitol Theatre Realty Company, was elected president of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. The other officers are: Edward Bowes, of New York, first vice-president; James Q. Clemmer, of Seattle, second vice-president; Saul Harris, of Little Rock, third vice-president; H. H. Wellenbrink, of Newark, secretary; Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., treasurer; and Fred C. Quimby, general manager. The directors of the new organization are as follows: Messmore Kendall, of New York; Edward Bowes, of New York; Harry Crandall, of Washington; Michael Shea, of Buffalo; Dennis Harris, of Detroit; I. NEW YORK INCORPORATES LARGE NUMBER OF FILM CONCERNS YEARLY

The past year has seen approximately 100 concerns incorporating in New York State and entering the motion picture business. There is hardly a week that does not produce from two to a half-dozen new concerns. Among the recent incorporations was the one-million dollar company known as the Poets Photoplays, in which Maurice Adda, Louis E. Cooper and Louis L. Quasha, of New York are interested.

Among the other concerns coming into existence recently was the Shannon Producing Company, incorporating at $52,000, with Samuel Klinger, William Grossman and Nathan April of New York as directors. There was also formed a company known as the Wentworth-Livingston Company, which outlined its purpose as supplying artists as well as directors for motion pictures. This company started business with $5,000 and has for its directors H. H. Wentworth, Beulah Livingston and E. S. Brophy of New York.

Bitter Fight on in Indiana

Ministers of Many Counties Said to be Banded; Wish to " Run " the Theatres

INDIANA harbors within her borders the seed ot one of the bitterest struggles in the industry's history between reformers, who want to close the motion picture shows on Sunday in cities and towns where they now run unhampered and the owners of the houses, who find their Sundays to be their most lucrative days.

In the little towns of Plymouth, Culver, Argos and Bremen, in Marshall county, in the extreme northern part of the state, the seed is beginning to show signs of sprouting. Unless efforts of the theatre owners of the four towns to crush the life out of the seed are successful its outgrowth may cover all Northern Indiana.

The theatre owners got their first warning January 21, when ministers in Plymouth, Culver, Argos and Bremen announced that they have organized to go on the war path against Sunday shows in those places.

Apparently the ministers have been organizing their forces for some time for they announced at the same time that as soon as they are victorious in Marshall county, where the four towns are located, they will wade into St. Joseph, Elkhart, LaPorte, Kosciusko, Starke, Pulaski and Fulton counties. This embraces territory more extensive than that confined by the borders of some states in the Union. Important cities in these counties are South Bend, Elkhart, La Porte, Warsaw and Rochester.

Managers, who contend that they and not the ministers are running their business, expect to have help from other business men in combatting the movement from the start as a result of the following paragraph from the announcement of the ministers of Plymouth:

" The fight is more than a fight against the motion picture theatre. It is a battle to see whether the churches shall or shall not fix the standard of life in the community. The fight against motion picture houses is only the beginning of a fight which will eventually lead to the closing of cigar stores, candy shops and all other places which infringe on the laws of the state."

Membership of California Producers' Ass'n

The Motion Picture Producers' Association, a California corporation, was organized in 1916 for general advancement of the motion picture industry. The present officers are: Chas. H. Christie, president; Wm. S. Smith, 1st vice-president; Wm. Sistrom, 2nd vice-president; Thos. H. Ince, 3rd vice-president; Frank A. Garbutt, treasurer; W. J. Reynolds, secretary. General business of the association is handled through W. J. Reynolds, 1004 W. I. Hollingsworth Bldg., Los Angeles.

The membership consists of the following producing companies: American Film Co.; Robert Brunton Studios, Inc.; Fred K. Balshoffer Studio; Brentwood Film Co.; Burston Films, Inc.; Capital Film Co.; Charlie Chaplin Studios; Christie Film Co.; Douglas Fairbanks Picture Corporation; Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Lasky Studio; Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Morosco Studio.

New Liberty Theatre in Yakima Being Built

Manager J. Von Herberg of Seattle, now in New York City on his annual business trip in company with his partner, Claude S. Jensen of Portland, has received word that active construction work is now under way on the new playhouse which Jensen and Von Herberg are building in Yakima, Washington.

It will be opened, it is hoped, sometime during the summer months and Mr. Von Herberg now is making arrangements for its bookings.

It has been decided to call the new Yakima playhouse " The Liberty." The Liberty in Yakima is being erected on a site adjoining the Commercial Hotel on the main thoroughfare and in the heart of the business district. The initial investment will be about $250,000, it is stated.

In Exhibitor Class

L. J. Frecka has severed his connection with the South Side Engraving Company, of Ironton, Ohio, and has let a contract for a new theatre to be finished April 15. The house will have a seating capacity of 450.

Fifteen More Educational Exchange

Expected Announcement of Expansion in This Country Made; Joseph Lee Goes With Firm and Starts Tour to Establish the New Exchanges

DEFINITE announcement of Educational's Exchange expansion in the United States, a hint of which only could be given last week, is now made. So large has the corporation grown, it has been found necessary to open offices in fifteen of the large distributing points, East of the Mississippi, in order to meet the demand for quick delivery. The acquisition of exchanges abroad, also told of last week, will similarly permit of the best service being given exhibitors of Educational subjects.

This enlargement of the Educational's scope is the net result of E. W. Hammons recent trip to Europe to confer with the group of English interests that are closely allied with Educational. It means further ambitious developments of a branch of the film industry that has been growing in leaps and bounds for the past two years.

Educational's Steady Growth

Five years ago Hammons started to put the Educational output on the screen and met with such serious rebuffs that anyone less persistent would have surrendered and given up in despair. The great majority of exhibitors insisted that the public would not be interested in anything that savoured of the educational. Those were the days of crude thrillers when that element of all development, imagination, was not overly plentiful in the picture world. But gradually Hammons beat down this prejudice and his scenics and wild animal life studies found their way upon the screen. The people liked them and asked for more. Today the world is being photographed in terse units and being brought to the view of the patron in the smallest picture houses in the land as well as the most pretentious ones.

Educational Film Corporation has grown from an experiment into one of the important factors of the film industry. It is backed by unlimited resources both as to finances and intelligent direction of its affairs, so that there is no limit to where it can penetrate with its cameras and its experts who know the value of scenic romance and the thrilling interest there is in wild animal life or the tense joy that lies behind the weird things which nature is producing all over the world.

As Mr. Hammons explained the other day after his return from London where larger affiliations for world conqest were completed, the sky is the limit and the bottom of the sea is to be penetrated before the scope and reach of Educational films is onetenth explored.

"At one of our laboratories we are now perfecting," said Mr. Hammons yesterday, "a camera which will register life under the waves and show the hidden beauties of the deep. In marked contrast to this development will be an aero service with specially outfitted camera equipment for catching bird life on the wing and the only limit is the height to which an aeroplane can be raised.

ASS'T DIRECTORS HOLD ELECTION OF OFFICERS

AT the annual election of officers of the Assistant Directors' Association, held January 16, the following gentlemen were installed: President, George Webster; Vice-Presidents, H. Schenk, William Crinley; Treasurer, Scott R. Beal; Secretary, Fred Tyler; Sergeant-at-Arms, C. H. Mitchell; Chairman of Board, William Dyer.

"Expeditions carefully outfitted by Educational are now in India, Africa, the Arctic regions, South America, the South Sea Islands, Antarctic fields, China and the Far West and the wonders of Europe and America contrasting civilization with every form of wild animal and natural life in the remote places of the world where men have seldom travelled. Here the camera will push in its unerring eye and reveal beauties and conditions which have been known to only the most daring of explorers or the few scientists who have devoted their lives to unearthing the secrets of the unexplored world."

Mr. Hammons naturally was reticent to discuss the part he has played in developing this field for the moving picture industry but no one factor has contributed so largely to this branch of the art as Hammons and his associates. And now from the humble start when men had to be coaxed and cajoled into showing the pioneer scenics and natural life studies he has reached the position where the output is so eagerly sought and is in such demand that a chain of offices is to be opened to facilitate delivery and match up with the ever increasing demand for these delightful subjects. The persistency behind Educational has given it a practical monopoly of the

Hotel Theatre Chain Forme

Ritz-Carlton Hostelries to Present Realart Pictures to Their Patrons

A CONTRACT recently signed by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland of Realart Pictures Corporation with Charles C. Ritz, son of Caesar Ritz, founder of the Ritz-Carlton chain of hotels, discloses an extensive organization, now in process of formation, which will exhibit high-class motion pictures in big resort hotels throughout the United States.

Said to be the first movement of its kind to embrace the entire country, this circuit sponsored by Mr. Ritz will include the houses of the Florida East Coast Hotel Company, the Bellevue Hotel of Bellaire, Fla., the Ormond Hotel, Ormond Beach, the Poland Springs Hotel, Maine, the Mt. Kineo House, Moosehead Lake, Me., and other famous hostelries as far West as French Lick Springs, Ind.

Mr. Ritz says that many experiments along these lines conducted during the past year have met with signal success and have demonstrated that an excellent field for exhibiting good pictures is practically neglected. Contracts signed during recent months and the safeguarding of this fertile idea by other means are said to have brought virtually complete control of the situation to Mr. Ritz and his associates.

"Amusement directors in the big resort hotels of the nation," said Mr. Ritz in a statement, "have come to the conclusion that through neglect of motion picture entertainment they have been missing a valuable business opportunity. The attitude of their guests has been reflected in willingness to patronize motion pictures, even though it meant going to a dingy small town 'movie' and witnessing age-worn relics of the industry's early days.

"Hotel officials are recognizing th progress which the art has made an also its appeal as entertainment. Th demand for hotel shows is tremen ous, and with the possibility of brin ing famous stars in popular works small audiences in out-of-the-wa places by means of the screen th can solve their problem in a most sa isfactory way. Therefore the motic picture circuit which is at present process of formation owes its orig to a definite demand.

"When negotiations are finally co cluded we will show motion pictur in resort hotels throughout the cou try, but only those productions of tl better class. Eventually many of the hostelries will have their own audit riums for the sole purpose of pr jecting motion pictures."

Following arrangements made wi General Sales Manager J. C. Ragla last week, Mr. Ritz will show tl complete Realart programme of phot plays.

Charles G. Branham has resigned as publicity director of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises and may enter the field as an exhibitor if he can find a suitable theatre. He at present is in Chicago looking over the field and renewing old friendships. The snow and even the slush of the loop looked good to Mr. Branham after his long time in the South, the last four months having been passed in Texas where he has been working hard since the consolidation of the Lynch interests with the Hulsey theatres.

"Mickey" still is going strong in the Middle West, and, according to the latest figures, since its return to Chicago on December 15, has been shown in sixty-one Windy City houses to fine crowds. To date more than 250 Chicago moving picture theatres have screened "Mickey," and in every instance it has proved a strong box-office attraction.

F. L. Smith has returned to Chicago after a swing around the circle, which took him as far East as New York and West to Dallas, Texas. Among the things which he accomplished on his trip was the sale of the state rights to the Doubleday Westerns for several territories. C. C. Hite, of Cincinnati, closed up for the Westerns for Southern Ohio and Kentucky; B. & L. of Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Texas, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, and the Merit Exchange of Chicago already had taken over the series for Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Mr. Smith expects to be in New York this week and dispose of the rights for the Empire State.

Many members of the Chicago Southern Club and others prominent in social life, as well as a large number of exhibitors, attended the invitational review of their forthcoming special release, "In Old Kentucky," given by the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, and the favorable comments on the picture left manager Weiss and Seery with a feeling of justifiable optimism over the booking outlook for the big production.

ruary 2, and that meanwhile he had written the authorities of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio and Kansas to ascertain what these states were doing on censorship problems and also if they intended to introduce any new legislation this winter.

With both censorship and Sunday motion picture bills before the Legislature there is bound to be a stiff fight in the coming weeks. The Senate, with the exception of three members, is identical with a year ago when the Slacer censorship bill went down to defeat, after passing the Assembly. The personnel of the Assembly is considerably changed, and there is no line possible on its probable action this year. There is a feeling, however, against any repeal of the Sunday motion picture law.

CINCINNATI

W. Bocklage, former manager of the Myrtle and Evanston theatres, has been appointed assistant manager of the local Hallmark exchange.

Harry A. Shaw has resigned from the Hallmark sales-force to become associated with the First National Exchange, under Manager Roy Haines. Mr. Shaw was a member of the Mutual sales-force at the time that Mr. Haines was the local Mutual manager and served under him for five years.

Manager Lefkowitz of the Standard Film Service Company is planning to give a public screening of the new serial "The Lost City," in the near future, to which the public will be invited.

The First National Exchange is now installed in its new quarters at Pioneer and Broad streets.

The Standard Film Service Company will take over the present offices of the World Film Company about February 1st. This will give Standard the entire fifth floor of the Seventh and Main street building and about five times its present space.

SEATTLE

John Ranz, president of "Adventurous Scenics Corporation," visited Seattle's Film Row for about two weeks. He was forced to leave for his studio at 7874 Santa Monica avenue, Hollywood, California to superintend the completion of the machinery in the corporation's laboratory.

Jesse G. Sill is busy in Wyoming and H. H. Brownell in the Southwest, taking pictures of the "wild and woolly west" for Mr. Ranz.

The "Sun Film Company" has opened its doors for business at 206 Third avenue, Seattle's Film Row. H. H. Huot, formerly in charge of the Realart exchange in Seattle, is in charge of the concern. Offices will be opened in Los Angeles and San Francisco. The object of the "Sun" will be "to rise and set" on serial and state-right short specials only.

Lucian E. Johnson, formerly salesman for the H. A. Johnson Company, is now manager for this concern. Mr. Johnson intends to add more equipment and to introduce additional improvements.

For some time Mr. C. M. Hill, manager of the Portland branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has felt that the Portland board of motion picture censors was too critical and decidedly prejudiced. Mr. Hill has contemplated resignation for some time, and a climax was reached when the local board made eliminations in the Ethel Clayton picture, "The 13th Commandment." Mr. Hill presented his resignation to Mayor George L. Baker, stating his views in a very outspoken letter.

The new Realart theatre has opened its doors at South Tacoma, Wash. with a $10,000 organ and Rex Beach's, "The Girl From Outside," which made a decided hit.

Manager George P. Endert of the Northwest Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and John D. Howard, exploitation representative, have been called to Chicago to attend the convention, which will be held by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the Lasalle Hotel.

SPOKANE

The Universal Film exchange is to reopen offices in Spokane, and reports are current that other motion picture distributing concerns may invade the city. Since June of last year the Pathe exchange has held undisputed sway in Spokane as the sole local office of any motion picture distributing concern. Peter Carroll, Pathe manager of this territory, announces that expansion of business has caused him to arrange for the opening of a sub-exchange in Butte.

David Wark Griffith's latest screen special "Scarlet Days," is coming to the Liberty theatre January 24-27. Another "special" on the Liberty books is "Everywoman," scheduled from January 31 to February 3. Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," had a five-day engagement at the Auditorium and drew big houses, according to reports. "Lord and Lady Algy," the English stage romance and thrilling race-track story, filmed by the Goldwyn Corporation, will be presented at the Auditorium for three days.

SAN DIEGO

Incident to the first showing at the Plaza of the new Mary Miles Minter feature picture, "Anne of Green Gables," the management had the especial pleasure of introducing the popular star to audiences which packed the house. House Manager Russell Rogers found it necessary to ask Miss Minter to appear twice on the opening evening to appease the demands of the crowd. A box was beautifully decorated for Miss Minter and her party, and above it was hung an electric star. A juvenile vocalist, dressed in Lord Fauntleroy costume, sang as a welcome to Miss Minter. The picture proved a very popular one during its engagement.

Mrs. Maude Tichenor has succeeded James M. Black as house manager at the Broadway. Mr. Black has gone to San Francisco to locate. The week's picture at the Broadway was "The Winchester Woman," featuring Alice Joyce.

The new California theatre, the latest addition to the film houses in this city, has been opened by James B. Mason, the proprietor and manager, who reports excellent patronage. The California has a seating capacity of about 800, and is equipped with the very latest apparatus and facilities. Harry Carey in "A Fight for Love" was the opening attraction, together with a 2-act "Joe Martin" comedy, entitled "Monkey Stuff." The house is following a 2-day run for each program, with a continuous show from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. Admission prices are 10 cents for adults and 5 for children, plus war tax.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The Strand theatre on Maple street, Holyoke, Mass., devoted exclusively to moving pictures and catering to an excellent family patronage, has been leased by James Baker to John F. Brown, treasurer of the Lewis-Brown theatre circuit of Danielson, Ct., for a long term of years. The new management controls three Connecticut theatres. This is their first Massachusetts venture.

The Goldstein theatrical interests, Nathan E., and Samuel Goldstein, with headquarters at Springfield, has bought the Majestic theatre on Cottage street, Easthampton, and will add it to their chain of moving picture houses, now located in Springfield, Holyoke and Northampton. The Majestic was built at a cost of about $25,000 and is modern. Manager Beede, who has been in charge for some time, has a lease that extends to a year from next May and, unless special arrangements are made, the Goldstein interests will not assume control until then. The theatre, now seating about 1,000, will be enlarged and remodeled by the new owners.

William H. Cone, formerly of Chicopee, for 14 years past proprietor of the Carleton hotel in Springfield, has bought realty on Springfield street here at approximately $25,000, upon which he is to build a $60,000 moving picture house, work to begin in the spring as soon as the ground can be worked. The Walsh Brothers' property figuring in the transfer is located close to the city library and is considered to be the best site in this city for a moving picture theatre. The block acquired comprises 10 tenements located in a row. Mr. Cone plans to place the theatre where the second tenement from the library stands but will not disturb the other tenements, excepting to paint them up and generally remodel them to accord with the theatre front. Robert W. Warner of Springfield has drawn the theatre plans, seating capacity for 2,000 being provided. The most modern equipment is called for by the plans.

The Chester moving picture theatre, Chester, Vt., located on the second floor of the Hotel Fullerton Building, was this week destroyed by a $60,000 fire that wiped out the hotel, Chester Savings Bank, Chester National Bank and post office. All equipment of the theatre was lost.

While the Grand theatre building, Bellows Falls, Vt., was in flames early Monday morning, swept by fire that caused a loss estimated at between $60,000 and $100,000, H. D. Perry Company, owners of the theatre, rushed new equipment here by telephone orders and that night were showing pictures at the Opera House, having lost but one performance. On the still smoking ruins of the Grand was tacked a sign with announcement that the Grand had moved to the Opera House. Loss to the theatre ownership is placed at several thousands of dollars, reported as being covered by insurance.

NEW ORLEANS

H. W. Oviatt, special representative of the Bray Pictures Corp., is spending about two weeks in New Orleans as a part of a tour of the entire country. Mr. Oviatt is concentrating on pushing the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, released by Goldwyn, and through his efforts, a number of new Bray contracts have been turned in, it is reported.

Much talk is heard in New Orleans of plans for a hotel, devoted to theatrical and motion picture folk, to be built in or near the city in the summer. Over-crowding of hotels and rooming houses has caused much inconvenience and led to tentative plans and discussion. No one, thus far, has come forward, nor been found, who was willing to furnish the funds for construction or underwrite the venture. Some theatrical interests favor the idea, others are opposed and a third faction is neutral.

The largest suburban motion picture house in the South opened in New Orleans January 22. It is the Rivoli and has 1,335 seats on the lower floor and 750 in the balcony. The Arcade Amusement company, a new organization, operating in conjunction with the Sobel-Richards-Shear company, is the builder and operator with Vic Howard, manager.

The Sugar theatre building at Monroe, La., has been sold to the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans and New York for $78,700. It will be remodeled and reconstructed. About $75,000 is to be spent in doing this. It will seat 1,500 when rebuilt.

BUFFALO

Marcus Loew, accompanied by R. A. Rowland, president of Metro, came to Buffalo on January 19 and during their brief stay, had a conference with Henry W. Kahn, Buffalo Metro manager. Mr. Loew announced that he would start work on the new Buffalo house April 1 and that it would be ready to open in January, 1921. The new theatre will be one of the most costly and elaborate in the Loew chain, said the theatrical magnate. It will be located at Main and Mohawk streets.

The Winter Garden, Jamestown's leading motion picture theatre, and one of the finest houses in Western New York, was gutted by fire January 20, causing a loss estimated at $50,000, which is covered by insurance. The Winter Garden is owned by Michael Woods and Marshall Peterson. The elaborate decorations which made the theatre the show place of the city, were ruined. The seats are a complete loss, two projection machines were destroyed and the $10,000 organ damaged beyond repair. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Buffalo may have another theatre in the near future, if the tentative plans set forth by J. J. Shubert of the Shubert interests. who was in Buffalo recently, are carried out. According to the plans, it is probable that the house will be erected directly alongside the present Shubert-Teck. John R. Oishei, manager of the Teck, has resigned. His successor has been named, but no announcement of his identity will be made for the present.

A. L. Barnett, former booker at the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has been appointed assistant to Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro branch. E. M. Saunders, general manager of the Metro company, stopped off in Buffalo enroute for an inspection of exchanges in the Middle West.

Henry E. Wilkinson, Realart manager, is confined to his bed with a serious attack of grip. Mrs. Wilkinson and the two children are also ill. A trained nurse is attending Mr. Wilkinson.

Lieut. John F. Killgrew, formerly with Fox in Cleveland and who spent two years on the U. S. S. America during the war, making 26 trips across the sub-zone, has joined the Buffalo Realart sales staff. Lieut. Killgrew is a graduate of Fordham.

Richard C. Fox, former manager of the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange, is spending a few weeks at the Buffalo Fox office, familiarizing himself with Fox methods prior to sailing February 12 for London where he will assume his duties as sales manager in the United Kingdom.

The Shea Amusement company has become one of the directors in Associated Exhibitors, Inc., according to an announcement by Harold B. Franklin, managing di-ector of Shea's Hippodrome. Mr. Frank-in spent a week in New York and returned o Buffalo with the franchise.

Many local theatres have been sold in he past week. Among the sales are: Majestic theatre, East Ferry street, Kenington theatre, sold to James Cardina, newomer in business; Park theatre on Tonawanda street.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, continues to "pack 'em in," in spite of snow bound conditions in Buffalo. The Elmwood is one of Buffalo's most popular neighborhood houses and nothing short of a tornado will keep patrons away from "Fowler shows."

DETROIT

COMMONWEALTH PICTURES CORP. has changed its name to Equity Pictures Corporation because of its recent purchase of the state franchise for Equity pictures from John H. Kunsky. The company has also just purchased state rights on Dustin Farnum in "The Corsican Brothers."

Jerome Safron has succeeded George De Butte as manager for Robertson-Cole.

The Detroit Board of Film Exchange Managers holds its annual and second get-together-dinner at the Detroit Board of Commerce on Saturday evening, Jan. 31. It will be attended by all film salesmen and department heads.

Fred P. Reynolds and W. J. Mozealous have joined the sales force of Minter-United.

A special matinee for school children was given at the Broadway Strand last Saturday morning, the attraction being "Everywoman." This picture broke the house record for the week.

At the sixth annual profit sharing banquet of Ford Motor Co. heads, the entertainment feature was a showing of the Chaplin film, "A Day's Pleasure."

In staging "In Old Kentucky" at the Madison this week, the theatre has been decorated in carnival attire and the lobby looks like the paddock at a race track. A prologue with a half dozen negro singers and dancers is followed by the picture. When the race scene starts, the screen rises and two trained horses and jockeys are seen speeding their horses on a race track, treadmill apparatus being employed. The Madison has broken all records for business and, for the first time in its history, a film is being held over for a second week.

ST. LOUIS

THE E. C. Peto Enterprises (controlling the state rights of "The Birth of a Race" and "Shepherd of the Hills)—Sam Shurman in the state right game; Floyd Lewis handling the Arrow output, and Earl Lawson, have taken a joint office in the Plaza Building on Film Row. Lawson has the rights for the Equity pictures. G. F. Hennessy is his local representative.

William Fox's Liberty theatre has been doing a phenomenal business consistently. Walter Shaffer is the man responsible for this condition.

Lew Bent, formerly with the American Film Company, has severed his connections with that company and has taken to the road for Pathe. Charles Gregg has succeeded him with the American.

Charles Werner, of the Metro forces, has just returned from an extended tour in the territory, where he reports wonderful business and splendid conditions.

Edward Dustin put over the greatest scoop of the week with a special story on every sport page about his new Pathe serial with Jack Dempsey. Mr. Dustin is Pathe's chief representative in St. Louis and one of the best liked men in the film game.

Jack Abrahms has arrived from New York with a lot of new gossip and brand new jokes. It is whispered that he and Lew Bent may be seen at Loew's Garrick for one week in a vaudeville specialty written by Aaron Hoffman. Mr. Bent years ago was with Dockstader's Minstrels. His clever imitations of birds and animals are wonderful indeed.

Fred Keller, of the Robertson-Cole office, lost a new hat on a wager with Louis K. Sidney of the Pershing and Kings theatres. This makes the ninth hat that Sidney has won this season.

Walter Rudolph, director of the Kings theatre symphony orchestra, has just completed a new selection which he will feature on his program next week.

CLEVELAND

It has just been learned that Frank Nolan, former manager of the Bijou Dream, and E. F. Flanegan, who now controls the Crescent theatre, all of Cleveland, have taken over what was formerly known as the American theatre, on Superior avenue, and are remodeling it completely. The change will also include a change of name, and the house, when finished, will be known as the Terminal theatre. It gets its name by reason of the fact that it is located just west of the Public Square, the proposed site of the new railroad terminal. It is also just opposite the Cleveland Hotel. It will have 600 seats.

The atmosphere of pre-Civil War days is a feature of the new Selznick picture, "The Land of Opportunity," in which Ralph Ince portrays the part of Lincoln

M. Polcar, a prominent Cleveland exhibitor, whose interests include several local photoplay houses, is now building a new picture theatre on Fulton Road to be known as the New Lyceum.

The two big new Loew houses, each with 4,000 seats, are well under way, and will be ready for use early in the summer. The State theatre, a down town house on Euclid avenue, opposite East 14th street, is well past the first story. The East 101st street theatre, as the one on Euclid at East 101st street is now known, is almost that far along. The proposed policy for these two theatres at the present time, is to run pictures only. However, a stage and full equipment for legitimate entertainment is being provided in case of a change.

Artists of the Morgan Lithograph Company had a two-weeks' self-appointed vacation during which time they were on strike, demanding shorter hours. They wanted forty-four hours a week instead of forty-eight hours. A settlement was made the end of the week, but its exact nature has not been announced.

W. E. Lusk, manager of the Cleveland office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, is back at work again this week after an absence of several days. Lusk is somewhat reduced in weight, owing to the absence of tonsils and adenoids, with which he was forced to part company.

A. S. Nathans was added to the Cleveland Select selling force this week. Nathans will beard the northwestern Ohio exhibitors for bookings.

The taking over of the distribution of Hallmark picture by United Picture Theatres has resulted locally in the appointment of W. W. Kulp as manager of the Cleveland Hallmark branch. Kulp formerly managed the local Robertson-Cole exchange. He succeeds C. A. Browne,, who is taking a short vacation before resuming his motion picture activities.

Dave Klein, who steered the Cleveland-Triangle boat until its recent coalition with United Picture Theatres of America, is still faithful to Triangle releases. He will continue to sell them to Ohio exhibitors under the new arrangement.

Paul Gusdanovis, of Cleveland, has been named regional franchise holder for Pathe. Gusdanovis is just back from New York, where he went to attend a Pathe meeting. He says he has not made up his mind just how he will handle the Pathe pictures that will come under his jurisdiction. "I'll probably put a special man of my own out on the road with these pictures," he said, "and let him put all of his time in on the selling end. The Cleveland Pathe office will look after the physical distribution."

A. A. Schmidt, district manager for Universal, is wearing the smile that won't come off ever since he learned that four of the cities in his territory copped off the big Universal prizes. Cleveland took first prize. Detroit, second prize; Buffalo third prize, and Pittsburgh, fourth prize.

"The Great Air Robbery" played the Standard theatre all last week to capacity houses. This week, Tom Carroll, manager of the Standard, received so many requests for the return of the picture that he pulled off his bill on Wednesday and put in "The Great Air Robbery" for the remainder of the week. That's what's called catering to the public and giving 'em what they want.

circuits embraced in it represent many millions of dollars, and before the step was taken they had the practical assurance of the co-operation of more than eight thousand other theatre owners, who will join with them in the purchase and distribution of motion pictures. It is frankly opposed to the interests endeavoring to secure a monopoly on theatres as well as on the making of motion pictures.

"In New York City the franchise of the new organization goes to the Capitol theatre, the largest motion picture theatre in the world. This means that the productions taken over by the organization will have their premiere in New York City at the Capitol. Careful selection has been made of the best theatres in Chicago, San Francisco, and the other large theatrical centers, and the most important theatres in those cities have accepted the franchise for their territory, and will play the premiere showing of the pictures in their respective territories.

"The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is completely an exhibitors' organization, according to the first announcement of its policy and plans. In each territory the franchise holder will sell subsidiary franchises for the territory. Each exhibitor will be protected from competition in the showing of the organization's productions, for he will have the exclusive rights in his territory. But an even more important feature of the plan is that every exhibitor will be assured of productions of the highest class, and will not be left at the mercy of those who are endeavoring to obtain a monopoly on the production and distribution of motion pictures.

"Important as this step is to the exhibitors of the country, it is even more important to the public, for it means the elimination, in so far as the theatres in the organization are concerned, of poor or mediocre pictures. A purchasing committee made up of the best known exhibitors in the United States will pass on all productions when they are bought for distribution and only the very best of motion pictures will be accepted for the theatres.

"The purpose of the association is to bring the producer, star, director, and independent seller of big states rights features into direct contact with the exhibitor. Supplementary to this its object is to prevent, fight, and overthrow any attempt at monopoly. It is thoroughly understood by exhibitors that the control by one concern of the big stars of productions, and of theatres would mean that they would eventually have to turn their theatres over to the dominating element and the formidable organization of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is designed to defeat any move in the direction of such monopoly.

"Dealing directly with the star, director, or producer the exhibitors will be better able to fix the real valuation of a picture and to reward those responsible according to the drawing power of picture production. The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has selected the Pathe Exchange to handle their product throughout the world and this selection was made after a careful analysis of the methods of distribution of other concerns. Pathe has more branch offices than any other distributing concern in the motion picture business, is operated on sound business principles, has a long history of successful operation, and is financially powerful. Another factor in the selection of Pathe is the broad business policy and the square dealing which has characterized its relations with exhibitors."

FAMILY THEATRE, BUFFALO, GIVEN CLEAN BILL ON ADVERTISING

REPORTS originating from Buffalo to the effect that the Buffalo Evening News had refused advertising from the Family theatre of that city because of alleged sensational features contained in it, are not only strongly denied by Samuel Carver, manager of the house, but are found by MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be entirely without basis.

A typographical error on the part of the Buffalo News was responsible for the starting of the story and the holding out of the Family theatre's ad for a day. Trade paper correspondents mistook the facts and the story was regrettably given a place in the columns of the NEWS.

No fault was found with the picture playing the Family theatre at the time of the incident, by the police, nor did anyone legitimately representing the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association register a complaint regarding it.

Capitol to Change Bill Every Sunday

Managing Director Edward Bowes of the Capitol theatre, announces several changes to be effected at that theatre. The motion picture will remain the basic unit of the program. Beginning Sunday, February 1, operatic novelties are to be introduced as the complement to the photoplays. Each production will be limited to a single week, and there will be a complete change of bill every Sunday. It is further stated that the acquisition of adjoining property for studios, workshops and stage purposes makes possible the immediate realization of plans contemplated since the opening of the big house.

F. P.-Lasky Officer Gets Gift on Resignation

The officers and directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on Tuesday afternoon, January 20, presented a beautiful silver desk set to Albert A. Kaufman, who recently resigned his connection with the corporation to enter the field of independent producers. Mr. Kaufman was one of the original officers and organizers of the Famous Players Film Company and a director in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The desk set consisted of thirteen pieces, each piece bearing Mr. Kaufman's monogram, and on the tray was this inscription:

"To Albert A. Kaufman from the Officers and Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in appreciation of his long and loyal service. January 20, 1920."

Thomas Announces Resignation

D. M. Thomas announces the severance of his connections with the United Picture Theatres of America, effective January 31, and further informs of his resignation on January 3 as division manager for Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Dallas. Mr. Thomas concludes his announcement with an expression of good wishes for the continued success of the United.

Goldsmith of United Off on Business Trip

Milton M. Goldsmith, treasurer of United Picture Theatres of America, left on a trip the first of the week. It is stated by the United Picture Theatres that the trip is in the interest of his organization. No details as to the destination or the scope of Mr. Goldsmith's trip were submitted. It is thought likely that a statement from Mr. Goldsmith will be forthcoming either during his trip or immediately after his return.

Releases of California Picture Enterprises

California Motion Picture Enterprises, with offices at 624 Consumers Building, Chicago, will be releasing about the end of February, "Alma Where Do You Live," in the states of Illinois and Indiana. Mr. Ernest Gagnon from Cleveland is being sent to Chicago to take charge of the exploitation in that territory, it is stated.

Pearson Succeeds to Quimby

Pathe's Feature Sales Manager Gets Managership Vacated by F. C. Quimby

FOLLOWING closely upon the announcement of the selection of the Pathe Exchange as the distributing medium of The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and the appointment of Fred C. Quimby as general manager of the exhibitors' organization, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, announces that Elmer R. Pearson will succeed Mr. Quimby as director of Pathe Exchanges. The promotion of Mr. Pearson, who was feature sales manager for Pathe, is in line with the Pathe policy of recognizing the meritorious work of executives within the organization. Philip L. Ryan, who was Mr. Pearson's assistant, is now feature sales manager.

The new Director of Pathe Exchanges is known as one of the pioneers in the distributing branch of the motion-picture industry and is said to have originated many of the exchange methods now the common practice in the important exchanges of the country.

Mr. Pearson's first venture in the film business was as assistant manager of the General Film Company. He held that post in the days when the General Film Company was the power about which the motion picture business in America revolved, and, by his ability, fairness, and tact won a host of friends among the pioneer exhibitors. In 1913 he resigned to join Pathe, and he opened the Pathe branch office at Omaha. He rapidly developed a clientele for the new branch, and one of his achievements there was the use of six prints of "The Perils of Pauline" in that comparatively small territory.

The value of the Omaha territory was made apparent to all of the leading film companies, and Mr. Pearson was called upon to open another branch office there. He organized the Omaha branch office of the World Film Company and remained as the director for it through its early days. His work in Omaha had attracted general attention, and he was one of the first six men selected to open branch offices for V. L. S. E. His headquarters was at Kansas City but he had supervision over the branches at St. Louis, Denver, and Salt Lake City. With V. L. S. E. he originated, it is said, the open booking system which has since become so popular.

In 1916 he was appointed sales manager for Essanay, but after six months was offered the position of sales manager for the George Kleine System, which he accepted. The rapidly developing Western territory merited special attention, and Mr. Pearson concentrated his efforts there as division manager for the West, meeting with continued success. He joined the First National in January, 1918, as manager of the Minneapolis and Milwaukee offices and remained in that capacity until he returned to the Pathe organization as feature sales manager in May, 1919.

In commenting on Mr. Pearson's estimate of the Pathe service, the report from the Pathe office says: "His broad experience with exhibitors throughout the country had convinced him that the Pathe policy of distributing pictures only when they were of a standard of excellence, calculated to reflect the greatest credit on the name of Pathe, was the policy that made for permanence in the exhibitors esteem. In his work with Pathe he has been guided by this idea, and his concentration of effort on Pathe feature is, in a large measure, responsible for the steadily increasing popularity of the notable productions released during the last year."

Tucker Seeks to Enjoin Picture Lithographs

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that the motion by George Loane Tucker for a temporary injunction, restraining the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from issuing lithographs and other advertising matter relating to "The Miracle Man", unless the name of George Loane Tucker was in letters as large as any other type matter, three times as large as the name of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, which produced the picture, was argued yesterday before Justice Platzeck of the New York Supreme Court.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation it is stated showed in reply that they had given Tucker great publicity, and that the teaser campaign which they conducted with the slogan, "'The Miracle Man' is coming" could not be regarded as a violation of any contract. The Court reserved decision.

Agitate Sunday Pictures in Watervliet, N. Y.

Watervliet, N. Y., may have Sunday motion picture shows. The city is situated directly across the river from Troy, N. Y., where motion picture theatres have been open on Sundays for several years, with the result that Watervliet flocks to the Collar City each Sunday. The common council of Watervliet, petitioned by proprietors of motion picture houses in that city, now has the matter under consideration, but is said to be divided. No efforts so far have been made to open the movies in this city on Sunday.

field. Its associations and its output are the contributing causes for its wonderful vogue. Its views and subjects are chosen from the carefully gauged angle of the exhibitor, for these scenes and life studies are not mere photographic achievements, but are selected with a thorough knowledge of the entertainment and dramatic qualities combined because it is never overlooked that the theatre after all is a place of amusement and nothing lives upon the screen that does not possess the dramatic flavor.

Joseph Lee, one of the best known of the present day film hustlers, has just joined Educational and leaves this week on an extensive tour of the country east of the Mississippi River to open distributing offices for the new output in fifteen of the great centres where film exchanges are now flourishing. By the time this trip is concluded Mr. Lee, under the guidance of Mr. Hammons, will have placed Educational's output at the immediate call of the exhibitor and in such a way that these studies will be given the same expert exploitation that is now devoted to a five to seven-reel feature. It is most likely that some of the finer efforts will have special musical accompaniments arranged for the subjects and the advertising specials and illuminating press copy will supply the exhibitor with the same pretentious aid that is now turned out by the biggest presenting forces that handle feature subjects for screen distribution.

Nature's Beauty Places as Caught by Robert C. Bruce

Educational Films Corporation of America, whose new "Scenics Beautiful for 1920" have been placed at both the Rivoli and Rialto (New York) theatres, is showing the first of the series at the Rivoli this week. It is titled "Wanderlust" from the famous poem by Gerald Gould. Shown on this page are some of the scenic beauties the film contains and Robert C. Bruce, creator of this series.

Like the Sacred Bull of Omran—Between Two Fires

BY J. M. SHELLMAN

Photoplay Editor of the Baltimore Sun

Would you like to talk for fifteen minutes with one of the most successful motion picture editors in the United States, who will tell you something mighty interesting about the least known profession connected with this grand old newspaper business If so read this article by J. M. Shellman, motion picture editor of the Baltimore Sun. He tells more about the inside workings of the job of editing a picture section than we ever hoped to get when we began this series of articles. And he proves something. The picture page pays in dollars and cents, and it pays in subscriptions, and that's the answer to the newspaper which can't see the difference between dry goods and the photoplay.

THERE is a fable, which has never been written concerning the Sacred Bull of Omran, which will serve to illustrate the point I wish to make. Like the Sacred Bull, I am between two fires.

Omran was the capital city of the kingdom of Aghfez. The High Priest of Omran lived on the fat of the land, but his happiness was marred by one restriction, and that was that he always had to wear a bull's head mask over his head when attending to his priestly duties.

The population of Aghfez worshipped the High Priest, or the Sacred Bull, as he was known, as the representative of their religion. Endowed with wit and shrewdness, the Sacred Bull had to maintain an equilibrium between the Government and the populace.

The people seemed to have the idea that the Government was not treating them fairly. And the Government was divided into two factions, one favored art and wanted to construct buildings with architectural beauty, while the financial faction was against paying for a building which was just ornamental.

So when the Sacred Bull wasn't arguing with the populace to show them how well the Government was treating them, he was arguing with either the art or financial factions of the government regarding what course was the proper one to pursue in his priestly activities.

But the Sacred Bull didn't worry, for he had the facility of taking everything with a dose of humor and so he lived many happy years during which the Government and the people of Aghfez were happy and his reign was written about in history as the most successful ever known in the kingdom.

In this way it seems that I, as the motion picture editor of the Baltimore Sun, have the same problem as the Sacred Bull of Omran, because I must keep peace and prosperity between the Sun and the exhibitor populace, and then again between the Editorial and Advertising departments of the Sun.

My advent as moving picture editor of the Baltimore Sun came about under rather peculiar circumstances. For about six months prior to the time I took over that section, I had been working as a reporter on the Evening Sun. One day the News Editor called me aside and said he thought there was an opening in the advertising department which would suit me, and outlined the advantages of that department.

The usual antipathy between the editorial and advertising departments exists on the Baltimore Sun as it usually does on all papers. Nothing loath, I had a talk with the Advertising Manager that day and went over with him, in full, the possibilities of a moving picture section with advertising in the Sunday Sun.

Up to that time the feature work in that section had been written by a member of the staff who was also on the Maryland Censor Board. So you can imagine what the exhibitors thought about that. And the rest of the news of moving pictures was taken care of by the Assistant Sunday Editor.

There was no advertising carried regularly in the Sunday moving picture page before December 15, 1918. Pointing out to the Advertising Manager how the page could be brightened up by using features, giving each theatre a fair write up instead of allowing certain theatres to have it all, having snappy layouts and live news notes, pertaining to the trade, he thought my suggestions were worth a try-out and so I was given the job.

Being able to converse with exhibitors on topics nearest their heart enabled me to meet them on an equal basis.

Never shall I forget the first week of my endeavor to run the section through. It seems that in some way the Sun was held as an enemy to moving pictures interests in Baltimore among a number of the film men and on all sides I met the condemnation of that paper by many exhibitors and film men.

The gist of their statements was that the Sun was forever knocking the moving pictures. By the time Wednesday came around I had almost come to the conclusion that I might as well try to pry open a steel safe with a toothpick as to try and get advertising out of the exhibitors.

Sticking tenaciously to my purpose with a grim set smile which was tinged with a dash of humor at how the exhibitors could refuse to come in on the good proposition I offered them, by the end of the week, I had corralled nearly eight hundred lines of advertising, and with this start got together my editorial matter and layouts and the page went through with flying colors.

That Saturday when I sat down to rest a moment at the City Editor's desk and remarked that I thoroughly understood what he and the news editor were up against each day now that I had to go through the same thing each week, he asked how much money I had brought in. When told a hundred dollars or so speaking roughly, he shook his head mournfully and said shortly, "Not enough Shellman."

Oh, well, it's quite different now when the News Editor asks me how much I turn in weekly and I answer quite nonchalantly, "Oh, a thousand or fifteen hundred or so every week. Not so bad, the Sunday Sun at that time was about 124,000 and eh?" and he has to agree.

While I think there must have been somewhere in former days a subtle influence working against the Sun moving picture advertising I thoroughly believe that the Sun never would publish anything that is detrimental to the moving picture or any other industry unless it was to do some good for the community.

When my first moving picture page in the Sun on December 15, 1918, came from the presses late Saturday afternoon December 14, I went into the mailing room to look it over and the business manager who happened to be there, congratulated me on the start I had made.

But on Monday morning the Advertising Manager called me aside and told me that the Business Manager had made a complaint that too many adjectives favorable to productions had been used in the write-ups of the plays and also that he wanted my news notes feature entitled 'Shots From Film Row," which gave short, humorous items about the film men in Baltimore, cut out entirely.

"That is my best drawing card," I said to the Advertising Manager. "And if it is cut out, I might as well stop right now and be done with it."

"Very well, then," he returned, "keep on with it for a while and see how it goes." But he thinks it is too much like a country newspaper."

I appealed to the Managing Editor with my troubles and while he upheld me in my decision to hold the "Shots," he decided that it was bad to place too many adjectives in the write-ups.

It is interesting to note that from that day to this, "Shots From Film Row" have been a regular feature in the page each week and not only can I venture to say that most every film man, exhibitors and salesman alike reads this feature in the Sun every Sunday, but it has also been reported to me by various theatre managers that the public has noticed, and read and inquired about the items. And the salesmen going out on the road say that the managers throughout the State will say, "Oh, yes, I read a shot about you in the Sun recently," when they introduce themselves.

My aim has always been to help the exhibitors and film salesmen and to write articles that will show the public how hard an exhibitor has to work in order to run his moving picture theatre and to help the producers by giving unbiased opinions and views on various topics concerning moving pictures. A number of these articles have been copyrighted by me and they will be used as a syndicate feature service for newspapers throughout the country. According to reports the articles are being read far and wide in the State of Maryland and the City of Baltimore.

One of the most interesting things to watch after I had taken over the page, was how the amusement advertising lineage increased far over the figures of the previous year. And also how the circulation of the Sunday Sun began to climb.

By this statement I do not mean that the moving picture section alone was responsible for the increased circulation of the Sunday Sun, but I am rather inclined to think that it helped the cause to a great degree, particularly as the press run of is now hovering between 132,000 and 133,000.

How Louis K. Sidney, Manager of St. Louis Theatres, Puts Over the Show

LOUIS K. SIDNEY, directing manager of the Pershing and Kings theatres of St. Louis, and who also handles the advertising for six theatres operated under the same management, demonstrated in a clever fashion the exact way to put over a picture when he booked "The Birth of a Race," and broke all records at the Kings and Royal theatres. This in spite of the fact the production was booked for four days preceding Christmas, not the best season of the year for breaking records.

Sidney planned a complete schedule of stunts and advertising well in advance, and three weeks before playing date started his vigorous campaign, which was destined to make those four days the talk of the city.

Thirty-five thousand heralds of six different styles were used for distribution. The opening campaign was started when these heralds were placed in every automobile in the central and downtown sections of the town. The heralds were different every day. Not a car was overlooked.

A card was attached to the steering wheel of every automobile on the streets; a descriptive herald with many scenes of the production was distributed from house to house; a special herald for the school children, calling their attention to the historic value of the picture, was handed out at every school in town.

Every minister and rabbi received a personal invitation to attend the opening performance. City officials were invited; school teachers and principals were also included, with the result that the co-operation of these prominent men and women was used to excellent advantage.

Sidney arranged one of the finest trailers he ever used. Taking the entire matter from the production itself, depicting a short glimpse from the Adam and Eve period throughout the ages up to the present day, the trailer aroused intense interest and proved to be one of the greatest assets of the campaign. The trailer was changed from time to time.

Billposters were then ordered to cover every board in town announcing "The Birth of a Race" and where it was playing. Every window possible to secure was conspicuously decorated with a half sheet, one sheet or window card. Twenty-four sheets were used extensively.

A splendid array of frames was displayed at the 5 and 10 cent stores two weeks ahead. These stores were supplied with wrapping paper which carried an announcement of "The Birth of a Race." This paper was used for each article purchased.

Clever cut-outs were used liberally around the theatre, and a big hand-lettered canvas sign was stretched from one end of the theatre to the other.

A teaser ad, which was a reverse circle of fifteen lines with just the name of "The Birth of a Race," was used in all the papers a week in advance.

Every newspaper in town gave the production the lead in their news columns. A splendid ad was drawn for the picture by Sidney, which, tied up with the advertising campaign carried, was used

Stolte Pulls the Minstrel Show Trick with "Kentucky"

ARTHUR STOLTE is breaking so many records out in that new Des Moines theatre at Des Moines that soon he will need to put an addition on the show shop to accomodate his crowds. His latest successful engagement is on "In Old Kentucky." As usual, too, the story of breaking records is at bottom an exploitation tale.

The Des Moines began its engagement on "In Old Kentucky" on Sunday to the usual Sunday business after a week of good newspaper publicity which promised a real picture.

On Monday Mr. Stolte held what he calls his "big street parade," same consisting of two automobiles with men carrying banners announcing the "In Old Kentucky" showing at the Des Moines, a twenty-piece band tooting away like a circus organization, more banners, a boy leading a fox, then more banners followed by men on horseback representing in costume the jocky, the fox hunters and the night riders of the picture. Being the first thing of its kind ever pulled in Des Moines, it got more attention than would a visit of Barnum and Bailey's circus.

Mr. Stolte was not satisfied, however, in just getting interest. He knew the secret of the good old minstrel troop exploitation: Hold your parade at noon, get 'em curious and then draw 'em down to the shop at night with a street concert. So Stolte held his concert in front of the theatre every evening. People flocked down to hear the music, out of curiosity or for any one of the dozen reasons which makes people stop to listen to music on the street and then flocked into the theatre when the band went inside.

Inside the theatre Mr. Stolte was doing things on the same big scale.

In addition to the picture program, he had a quartette singing the old Southern melodies with a special musical program arranged by the Des Moines director, N. E. Mitchell, and other specialties. The crowds came and went and Stolte smiled and began to plan new exploitation stunts for his other coming attractions, and which we hope to pass along for your inspection in type form.

Mr. Stolte tried to get us some photographs of his "pe-rade," but the photographer was so busy watching the show that he forgot to snap the camera.

He did wake his artist up after the parade was over and we are showing you herewith some of his lobby billing. In the larger cut, if you will look closely back by the ticket office, you will notice a side view of a gentleman with his hat off. This is A. G. Stolte, who originated all these ideas we have been telling you about.

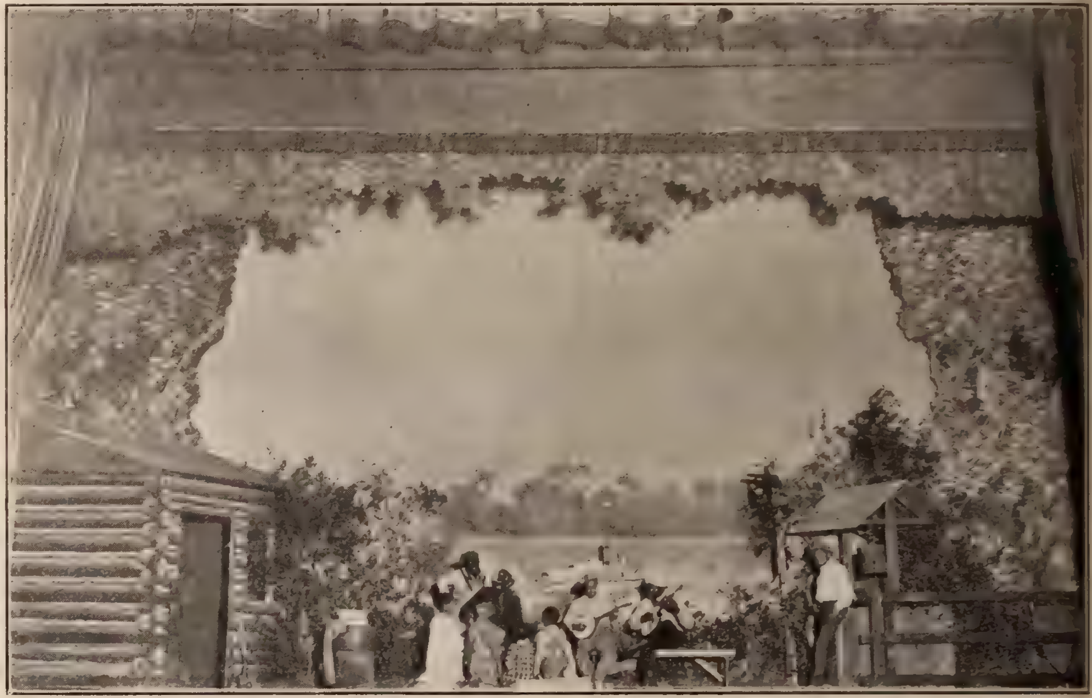
Novelty Prologue Feature of Kinema Bill

Seymore Tally, Los Angeles Showman, Makes "In Old Kentucky" the Talk of West Coast Picture Center



A full stage view of the stage setting and prologue characters of the Kinema theatre presentation of "In Old Kentucky"

A MOST successful campaign of advertising was carried on for the presentation of "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart, for its presentation at Tally's Kinema theatre, and as a result the picture is enjoying a most gratifying attendance with possibilities of the gross receipt records of the house being broken by the two weeks' run.

The picture was booked for showing on the day the Los Angeles races began at Ascot Park, and Manager Seymore Tally and Ed. Rosebaum, Jr., in charge of exploitation on this picture on the Coast, took advantage of every possible avenue of publicity for the picture. By arrangement with the manager of the races, the day was named after Anita Stewart and the second race on the bill was known as Anita Stewart Trophy and the star personally presented a floral horseshoe to the jockey of the winning horse. A colored boy in a costume of a jockey wearing a sign "In Old Kentucky, Kinema," distributed heralds made in imitation of a race program, and the same idea was carried out in the display advertisement in the Sunday morning papers. The herald advertisement reproduced herewith together with picture of jockey and also one of Miss Stewart with winning horse.

After once instilling in the minds of the people the desire to see the screen version of the famous play, the management of the theatre and Mr. Rosenbaum sought to make the presentation a most talked of event of the Kinema theatre, and arranged a program in keeping. A most important feature of this program was the atmosphere creating prologue which was given immediately preceding the presentation of the picture. The intention of the theatre was to give the audience a glimpse of old Kentucky, and they did it by a very handsomely done drop with the Ohio River in the foreground. In front of this was the shanty home of a colored "family." This "family" proved to be banjos, singers and dancers, and they gave a short musical program while the setting has a night lighting and at the conclusion a lighted steamboat of the Ohio River type passes across the stage as a climax.

Following the first few days of very successful business a progressive advertising campaign was begun for the second week's business, in which the management of the theatre very heartily thanked the patrons of the house who had witnessed the presentation of "In Old Kentucky" for telling their friends of the picture. This advertising, it is believed, will be very far-reaching because of the suggestion it carries.

Plays Program of Short Subjects with Good Results

USING a two reel production as a feature without a longer subject to fill out the program is a precedent set among Pittsburg firs run houses by the Columbia. The house di turn away business with Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure," a short western subject, a new reel and a travelogue, making five reels in all The regular scale of prices was maintained, an the shortness of the program gave an opportun ity for an extra showing each day, which en abled the theatre to establish a new house recor for attendance.

Buffalo Sunday Courier Uses Colored Insert of Constance Binney

MANAGER HENRY E. WILKINSON of the Buffalo office of Realart Pictures Corporation, through an arrangement with the Buffalo Courier and Enquirer, was able during the week of January 5 to see Buffalo plastered with Constance Binney one sheets, signs of the star on automobiles, on news stands, in store windows, on the front and inside pages of the two papers mentioned above, and everywhere he looked the face of Constance Binney shone forth.

The arrangement made by Mr. Wilkinson and William J. Conners, Jr., editor and publisher of the two newspapers, was the insertion of the latest photo in colors of every copy of the Buffalo Sunday Courier for January 10, which meant that over 125,000 Buffalo homes were greeted by the Constance Binney insert, strikingly colored and bearing the announcement at the bottom that Miss Binney's latest picture was "Erstwhile Susan," and in one corner readers were further informed that the star was under the Realart banner.

During the week both papers used two and three full column ads, including large cuts of the star, which from a publicity standpoint were worth their weight in gold, especially so because these papers very seldom do anything of the kind; in fact, the Courier has eliminated all special notices for the theatres.

Mr. Wilkinson could not have purchased some of the first page ads he received at any price. He made the arrangement at the psychological moment when the Sunday Courier raised its price from five to ten cents, and was looking for something to "give away," as it were, when the boost in price went over. The Binney insert happened to come up at a dinner attended by one of the Courier officials, who communicated the proposition to Mr. Conners, and Eureka! it was done. Now all Buffalo knows that Constance Binney is a Realart star and that "Erstwhile Susan" is coming soon. It was the cheapest and most worth while bit of publicity pulled off by a Buffalo exchange in several years.

The "Movie Man," is my unofficial title by many in the Sun, and I like it particularly because it is democratic. At the same time I am the Czar of all the Movies on that paper and act as the Grand Mogul for the moving picture section, having charge of the Editorial Work (supervised by the Sunday Editor of course) and the advertising and am responsible for getting up all the editorial copy, features and short stuff, attending to the layouts, designing the art and writing the copy for the ads making up the moving picture section and seeing that everything is ready for the presses on Saturday afternoon. Besides this I have to solicit the advertising and cover all the accounts and make new ones. And it's a great job if you look on the brilliant side, which I always do, especially when some photos of Mack Sennett bathing beauties come in.

The man who tries to hold a job like this without having an inborn love for the moving picture industry would soon find himself bored and overworked. But in my own case, I find it exhilarating to associate with the men in the industry, and love them all for their independence, good fellowship and hearty frankness and their friendship. Each one is likable in his own particular way and even those who are blunt and brusque have their good features.

Their trials and tribulations are as near and dear to me as they are to those who are going through them. It is always my desire to co-operate with the theatres and with the film men to every extent that is within reason, to make the work pleasant for each side. It has always been my desire to bring together those factions which for various reasons might be opposing each other.

If there is any Sunday newspaper in the country that thinks that a moving picture section is not valuable to it, there is only one answer to make: Let them try it out. Actions, on the screen and elsewhere, speak louder than words, every time.

Recently an exhibitor asked me whether the Sun would run a moving picture section if the moving picture theatres cut out their advertising. I told him I would recommend it be cut out entirely providing the other papers in the city would do the same thing. "Then you would hurt your circulation," he said. "Yes," I answered, "and if all the papers in Baltimore suddenly cut out every line about moving pictures, the theatres would soon be running back to them again." "But the exhibitors make the stars popular," he said. "To a certain extent, but the newspapers give the stars the real popularity," I answered.

The advertising and editorial departments should co-operate on the moving pictures, for it is useless for a newspaper to attempt to get advertising from moving picture theatres if they are going to slight the advertisers who continually give the largest space. Of course the write-up about the play at the theatre is considered as news. But it is really not news in the sense that a news item is news and therefore need not be considered in the same light. And for this reason the man having the largest ad should necessarily have the largest write-up, then there is no comeback for kicks about unfair treatment.

One cannot get editorial space in the Sun by buying advertising but as these write-ups are considered news this is a courtesy allowed by the management of the Sun.

Most of the press sheets and publicity matter sent out by the various producing companies is good, and can be used. Without mentioning any particular names I might give this general suggestion. Give the motion picture editors live news about the stars in which the element of news value is predominant and do not load up the item with a lot of superlative adjectives. This advice will also bear on press sheets and I will have to mention the Fox press sheets that they get out on features as particularly bad because they are so overloaded with adjectives that it is next to impossible to get anything decent out of them to publish.

My suggestion for press sheets is to give about five advance notices in various lengths, ranging from two inches to a quarter of a column without any big adjectives and let the editor do his adjective work if he so desires.

Sometimes, when I get stuck for a decent write-up for a play and am in a hurry it is a godsend that I have on hand a file of Motion Pictures News,

Bills Louise Glaum Above Fairbanks

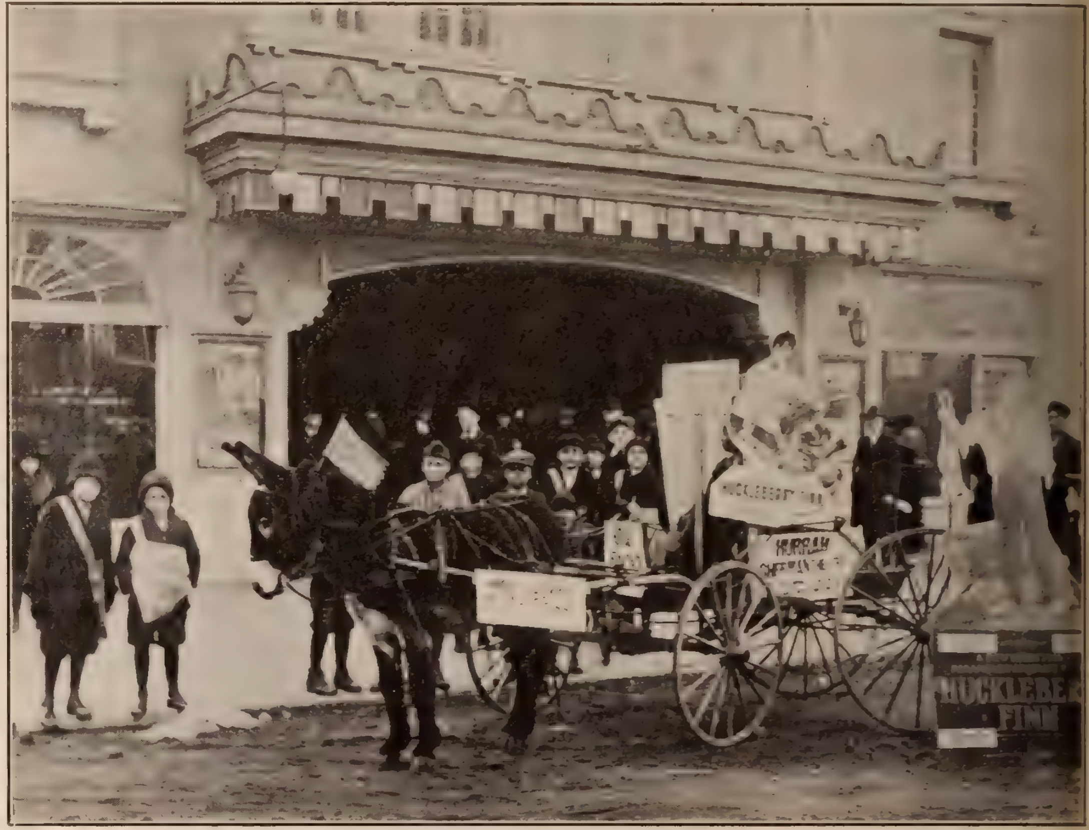
HERE is a story of some unusual exploitation. Whether or not it is the best of exploitation will have to be decided by the manager who knows what his patrons like best.

The Goodwin theatre of Newark played a double bill in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," starring Louise Glaum and "When the Clouds Roll By," starring Fairbanks. Moe Krydell, manager of the Goodwin, billed the Fairbanks picture as secondary to "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," in as much as he wrote his billing to read: "Also Douglas Fairbanks in 'When the Clouds Roll By'." This plan was followed out in all the exploitation and the Goodwin did a lot for this bill.

As the reason for this unusual manner of billing, Mr. Krydell offers the following: "When I first looked at the picture ('The Lone Wolf's Daughter') a few weeks ago I instantly saw its drawing possibilities for the Goodwin and I booked it. I knew the Fairbanks picture would take care of itself for those who like Fairbanks will come to see him and the story doesn't matter so much. That is the reason why I gave the best end of the billing to 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter.' I knew my patrons would like it and at the same time I wanted to impress the public with the fact that we had an unusually big show, worth the fifty cents top we were charging for the two features. Some may say that I was wrong in my theory but I have the one great proof of good advertising, and that is, that we did a whale of a business."

Twain's "Huck" Has Premiere Showing

Sherman Theatre of Chillicothe, Ohio, Plays Pre-Release of "Huckleberry Finn" and Smashes Box Office Records



Ballyhoo for "Huckleberry Finn" used by the Sherman theatre for the "Huck" engagement

CHILLICOTHE, Ohio, a city of 16,000 inhabitants and Riverside, California, a city of some 25,000 souls, are the first to get public view of "Huckleberry Finn" the picturization of Mark Twain's famous story. What was accomplished in the way of exploitation in the California city located some 60 miles from Los Angeles we can not as yet record but the whole story of the Chillicothe engagement is herewith appended.

"Huck," judging from its presentation at the Sherman theatre of Chillicothe, is a feature which is going to get some snappy exploitation. Its possibilities are of course apparent to every live manager, and C. A. Smith who looks after the destinies of the Sherman and Oscar A. Doob exploitation man from the Cincinnati Exchange of F. P. Lasky did not overlook a single bet.

The campaign of exploitation was divided—schools, farmers, city folks. The campaign in the schools was 100 per cent successful. Prof. W. F. Prout, supt. of public schools is a hearty believer in good films and had "Huckleberry Finn" read in the schools prior to the opening of the picture; he had the public library put in extra copies of the book; he had Miss Cremin, clever story teller, give the tale of Mark Twain's boys to the school children as part of the literature study. Then the engagement was announced by all teachers and the children dismissed early on the day of the opening to catch the second matinee. A vivid touch was given to the school work by providing the storyteller with "stills" from the picture. She used these to illustrate her story and the children's interest was srystallized to fever heat. They couldn't wait for the opening. The Rev. Father Halpin of St. Mary's School went even farther than the public schools. He dismissed his school at 1.30 p. m. to march to the theatre for the first opening matinee—the first party in the world to see "Huckleberry Finn."

Father Heintz of St. Peter's school sent his children to the 3.30 p. m. matinee. More than a fourth of all the school children in Chillicothe saw the picture the opening day! And before the three-day run ended virtually every school child had been there—those too poor to buy tickets were provided with them by charitably inclined people. I. L. Bergman, merchant, had the entire orphan asylum as his guests at the second day's showing.

HUCKLEBERRY FINN

Even a policeman (silent) advertised for "Huck" at the Sherman, Chillicothe.

The exploitation man met a unique situation with the newspapers—since a quarrel with the theatres over a year ago. The papers had utterly ignored the playhouses. Not a line of publicity, reviews or any co-operation whatever. To break down this barrier, the advance man tried to impress the editors with the national importance of the premiere engagement; with the civic pride involved, etc. "That is worth one item," was the reply of the editors. So that one item was the first the papers had carried in many, many months! Then a newsboy party was arranged with the News-Advertiser. This secured the hearty co-operation of Mr. June Hunter and H. H. Bennett, manager and editor of the News-Advertiser. Daily stories resulted. These created a public sensation—so unusual was it to see theatre publicity in the paper. Then a new tack was taken. Columbus, Ohio, newspapers have a wide circulation in Chillicothe. The advance man had the Dispatch and Journal of Columbus print stories about the Ohio premiere—a distinction to the state, etc. THE CHILLICOTHE PAPERS REPRINTED THESE STORIES FROM COLUMBUS AS EDITORIAL "CIVIC PRIDE" MATTER. The local Chamber of Commerce was interested and added its efforts to have Chillicothe do justice to the honor of having a premiere presentation. And after the first performance, the News-Advertiser carried an extended review of the picture by Mr. Bennett, the editor—the first review in a long time. The Cincinnati newspapers also carried something about the Ohio premiere—and these reached Chillicothe. With the local papers thus opened, and the big obstacle overcome, the campaign breezed along.

The newspaper advertising was made to play on the premiere and of course on Mark Twain's book. Big space was used.

To reach the farmers, one sheets were sent to all the cross-roads stores. And speaking of one sheets—a novel idea was used. Instead of the routine "date strips," the word "Hurrah" in block type was added to the dates. It was surprising how this one word "jazzed" up the entire one sheet and made it stick out and carried the hilarious nature of all the advertising and publicity. One sheets were sniped about town. As all big stands were controlled by out of town people, good locations were hard to get. At the most prominent corner in town the second floor of a building was vacant. Presto! A mounted 24-sheet was hung out. It was a sensation, being so unexpected. The same tactics were used a block down the street with a six sheet—in the very heart of the business district. People read "Hurrah" smiled and shouted to friends: "Hurrah! Huck Finn's comin'."

Another drive at the farmers was made through an imitation circular letter purporting to be written by Huck Finn himself and invitin' the folks out yonder to come to see him and his maw and no-account pap at the Sherman theatre. These letters went to every farmer on the ten rural routes out of Chillicothe.

Window displays were many. The book store stocked up on the special photo-play edition of "Huckleberry Finn" and made a window tie-up. The music store dug up some of the old popular song records of "Huckleberry Finn" and made a window display and played the record for the customers. The piano roll and the sheet music also were revived. The theatre organist used the snappy old song as his theme and the town was soon humming again the strains of "Huckleberry Finn."

The most spectacular window display was that of the Levy Clothing company. A boy was secured who looked like Huck Finn. He was wigged and clothed and freckled into a real likeness. Placed in the window he caused a crowd where crowds are hard to get in Chillicothe. Going still farther, the store put out big ads in the newspapers advertising "Huckleberry Finn" Days at the store—the days of the theatre run—when tickets would be given to the boys buying "Huck Finn" suits. This store caters to farmers—it brought them to town. Having reproductions of their ads on cardboard, the store put them in the window, adding to the publicity for Huck Finn.

Taking a cut-out of the six sheet, showing Huck holding a gun and rabbit as a basis, a colorful hardware store window was made—right alongside the opposition theatre! A cut out of the one sheet, with a corn pipe thrust into Huck Finn's mouth made a cigar store window tie-up.

On Saturday—the big day in town—a sleepy donkey and miniature cart was dug out and bannered and Huck Finn drove around town with a parade of children following and cheering.

A surprise stunt was pulled when cards were printed to fit on the standards erected at the three principal street intersections. These standards held signs: "Keep to Right" etc. The Huck Finn signs read: "Straight ahead to Huck Finn," "Turn Back to Huck Finn" or with hands pointing in the direction of the Sherman theatre. A 24-sheet board couldn't have attracted more attention. And one of the direction signs was at the corner pointing away from the opposition house!

As a result of the Chillicothe campaign, a national movement to form "Huckleberry Finn War Stamp Clubs" in all the public schools will be launched. W. W. Boulger, chairman of the local WSS committee favored the plan heartily.

Another little stunt was the placing of a classified ad saying that an early edition of "Huckleberry Finn" had been lost by the advance man and offering a reward for return of the book or another edition like it. This got the town digging into the attic for old copies of "Huckleberry Finn." Several were presented but were not of the exact edition lost. This caused comment, and re-reading of the book, creating a demand for the picture.

To each newsboy attending the special party was given a "still" scene from the picture. The boys carried them away, prizing them highly. This helped bring the older folk at home.

This campaign has been outlined more completely than usual because it is the first on "Huckleberry Finn," not to be released until February. It will furnish a foundation for any exhibitor playing the picture. Manager Smith cautions that the grown-ups must not be neglected in the exploitation. The children are bound to come—he never saw such heartfelt, spontaneous interest from the youngsters—and the grownups will come if you urge them to "be young again." Or "you're not too old to enjoy the thrill of youth again" is another advertising line. Nobody wants to admit being old.

on Saturday and Sunday. The effectiveness of the ad stood out in contrast with the white space used.

On Monday, Tuesday and every day of the engagement of the picture the ads were changed, thereby commanding the interest and attention of the people. The picture opened on Sunday and broke all records at the Kings and Royal theatres. The record-breaking business continued throughout the engagement.

Sidney edited the picture himself, eliminating much of the war episode, thereby supplying the picture with plenty of speed and action, and improving the continuity of the play. The musical effects were especially arranged by Sidney and scored one of the biggest hits of the season for his symphony orchestra.

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

At a Total Expense of Twelve Eighty, H. A. Albright, Manager of the American Theatre of Butte, Puts Over a Real Front Page Story

HERE is too good a story to reduce to the deadly humor killing plain statement of facts which as a rule we adopt as a style for describing exploitation. It is H. A. Albright's (manager of the American theatre, Butte, Montana) own account of the way he broke in on the front page of Butte's most conservative newspaper as news at the total cost of $12.80. The stunt which he describes can be put over anywhere once, although it may cost a bit more than $12.80 since Mr. Albright is also an artist in addition to being a live wire showman, a writer of ability and a humorist.

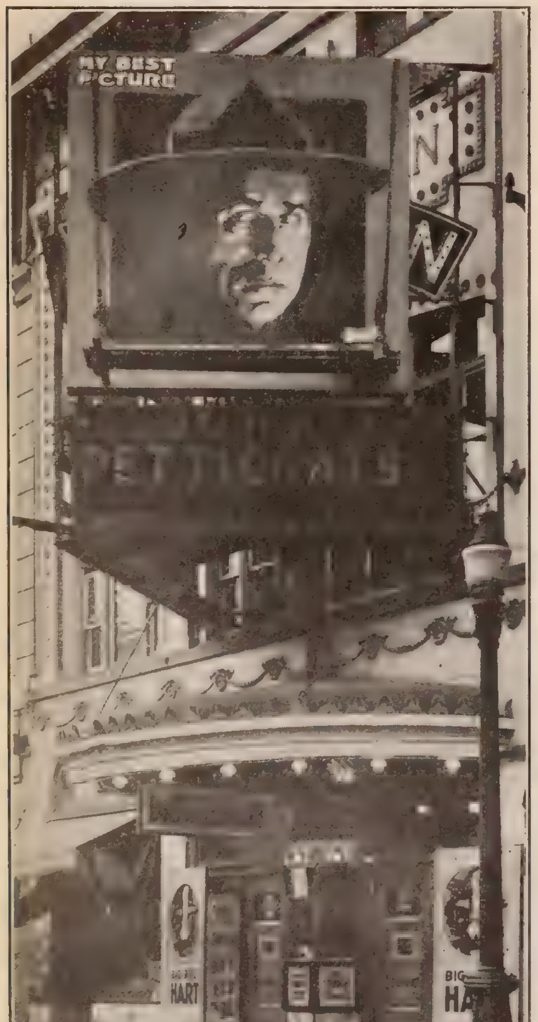
Following is a letter from Mr. Albright:

It has always been my ambition to at some time or other in my career hit the front page. But here at Butte one might as well wish for the moon, or a good smoke from a nickel cigar.

I had it rightly figured out that it wasn't a matter of money that kept ads off page one. That particular page, I learned, was sacred to any newspaper that had hopes of continuing the season.

What I had to do was to manufacture some dog-goned interesting news. A stunt I once saw pulled off at Detroit gave me the idea.

To make it even more difficult and thus add to my personal satisfaction, I chose the Standard, the most conservative paper in the city, a paper that will invariably hook the abbreviation "adv." onto what I might call a perfectly Christian "reader' and, upon the commencement of a new month present a bill for said reader, however damaged it may have been by the company of this tiny but disastrous "caboose."



Here is Albright's picture of Bill Hart after "the woman in red" had completed her job

I can't just figure what sort of expression I had in my eye when consulting the managing editor of this "black-suit-and-grey-tied" newspaper that shrank at the mere suggestion of bunco. Nevertheless, when I'd explained to him the dare-deviltry of the "she-artist" that was going to pop the eyes out of the blood-thirsty crowds, that, by the way, blocked traffic two days in succession, and had presented him with "the papers" from our Mayor Stodden permitting me to jam Park street, he weakened.

Fortunately, I wasn't quizzed too severely as to the identity of the "painter-ess" that was to trip lightly to our theatre-roof's edge and imitate a monkey down a "thread-like rope," land gracefully on a suspended plank and take from several cans of paint the countenance of Big Bill Hart, in liquid form, and spread them in a recognizable mass on a huge area of Compo. board.

After gaining consent from every one concerned, I went about gathering together the necessary material.

The biggest part of getting the material was off my mind, that of securing the "she-artist." Of course that was "I'm." However masculine I may appear in "civies," I was sure I could do a good female, providing the street wasn't too close, and I'll say it was plenty far down.

The next thing was to keep down the cost of this "untamed idea." If the cost was too high it would detract from the pleasure of victory. For proof of the reasonableness of the expenditure made, I will set down the exact figures:

3—4/12 cornell board	6.48
96 ft. ½ lumber	1.44
7 staple bolts	2.80
10 toy balloons	1.00
Much brawn and muscle, long hours and blisters on my own part—no extra charges	.00
Ditto from the door man, Kenneth Mulholland	.00
Red plush from discarded draperies	.00
The manufacture of the above in a really becoming female attire—time donated by the head cashier	.00
One pair of officer's "puts" loaned by head operator	.00
This completes the list with the exception of the perfectly natural and appreciated time spent by my wife in dolling me up the two days and trying to teach me to act "feminine like"—no charges yet presented	.00
There you have it	$12.80

Following is the story which "the-black-suit-and-grey-tied newspaper" gave Mr. Albright. Contained in it is all the information necessary to pull the same stunt:

"Combining a daredevil feat, three stories above the ground, with an artistic performance of a kind that has never been witnessed in Butte, a "Veiled Lady in Red" will appeal to the lover of thrills and the student of art in a display before the American theatre on West Park street at 11.30 this morning and tomorrow.

"Balancing upon a pendulant scaffolding, suspended from the roof of the building, the "veiled lady in red" will paint a picture upon a canvas, twenty feet square, placed in front of the large electric sign fronting the theatre. At 11.30 o'clock this morning she will make a sensational descent over a cable from the roof to the platform bearing the canvas and in plain view from the street will work with attractive poster colors and a brush until 1 o'clock.

H. A. Albright, manager of the American theatre.

"No device will be used to lower her from the three-story building. Without hesitancy and despite the great hazard she will reach the stage by depending entirely upon the strength of her arms to save her from dropping to the sidewalk. Traffic policemen, which have been promised by Mayor Stodden to Manager H. A. Albright, will clear the sidewalk during the spectacular descent and then will safeguard the throngs of spectators who are expected to gather in the street to watch the rare art show.

"At some juncture in her painting this morning the 'veiled lady in red' will pause to scatter a number of toy balloons, containing admissions to any show at the American theater, to the throng below. Filled with air, and being not much heavier, the inflated bags will drift slowly toward the ground and will cause no end of excitement or fun in the scramble that is expected to take place. Scores of balloons and tickets will be thus set adrift.

"Because of her unusual attire the woman artist has appropriately been called the 'veiled lady in red.' Excepting a pair of white tennis shoes, her costume is of scarlet velvet and consists of a smock, jaunty Tam o' Shanter, spiral puttees, red stockings and a red veil. For her demonstration of woman's talent in art, and particularly art upon a large scale, the American theatre has loaned part of the space taken up by its mammoth electric sign for her demonstration."

"Working with the skill of a talented artist she finished the portrait of William S. Hart begun Friday morning. As the finishing touches were applied and the lower portion of his features were brought out, all mystery as to who she might be painting vanished. The picture is one of the most remarkable ever produced in the city under circumstances that were most unusual, every one agreed.

THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE
BLIND HUSBANDS

View of the beautiful California theatre, San Francisco, lobby during the "Blind Husbands" showing

Food for Thought in California Theatre's Experience

THE engagement of "Blind Husbands" at the California theatre, San Francisco, and the picture's wonderful record for business is an example of the fact that the long talked of theory that "the play's the thing" is becoming a reality.

The California of course with its reputation for playing only pictures of merit along with other high standards in presentation, which Eugene V. Roth has adhered to in his conduct of the house, could put over any picture to good business, but "Blind Husbands" did more than that. It ran well in advance of some pictures used at the California which had to use a showman's expression, "everything," star, director, an adaptation of a widely read book and the other box office angles which managers consider carefully before booking an attraction.

When "Blind Husbands" came into San Francisco, Stroheim, the title and nearly everything else about the feature meant nothing to San Francisco people. The California management went after the advertising along strictly orthodox lines, a dignified announcement of the picture's merits.

The electrics read "Blind Husbands" only. There was no attempt to bolster the attraction with something else. The feature opened to good business and after the first performance began to build steadily on the word of mouth advertising of those who saw it. All through the run patronage kept up to capacity, much of which Mr. Roth is willing to concede is the picture's credit.

What Personal Appearances Are Worth If Properly Put Over

FROM the Columbia theatre, Dayton, Ohio, comes a story of some mighty good exploitation which had its greatest interest in the fact that the star of the picture, Aurora Mardiganian, made a peronal appearance at every performance given her picture, "The Auction of Souls," and who also personally assisted in a number of exploitation tunts. Whether Miss Mardiganian's visit to Dayton was responsible for the extraordinary business he picture enjoyed is problematical.

It is a matter of record, however, that her personal visit to the National Cash Register Company, where she spoke to 900 women and girls employed there, created such a volume of word-to-mouth advertising that subscribers were asking favorite dailies for facts about Miss Mardiganian.

The ice once broken, the management of the Columbia specialized on display advertisements in he Dayton newspapers as a means of bringing home to the public the fact that the horrors seen n "Auction of Souls" were really the fate of women of the Near East.

The idea of morning matinees as a method not only to arouse a general interest that always atends an exclusive event, but also to enable many women of Dayton who had evening engagements o see the attraction was hit upon shortly after the picture began its run. At these morning performances Miss Mardiganian went more into deail about the experiences of the women during the turbulent times in Armenia.

Publicity in the news space of all local newspapers came quite easy for the Columbia. Various business men's noon day luncheon clubs invited her to be the guest of honor. The Kiwanis and Rotary clubs heard her story and a number of women's clubs entertained her. Each of these vents turned out to be a gratifying source of publicity.

The news that "Auction of Souls" with the bold xploitation given it by the Columbia had so shattered all previous box office records of that house aused every large house in Ohio that has played the attraction thus far to call for a return engagement.

Previous to the showing of "Auction of Souls" a performance for "ladies only" had never been given in connection with the exploitation of a motion picture. A general curiosity as to how many women would attend the performance and hear the personal story of Aurora Mardiganian's experiences lead the Dayton Journal to send a photographer to get a picture of the ladies in line waiting for the performance to begin. The following day a picture of the long standing line appeared in the newspaper.

This photograph was given a front page position by Dayton newspapers during the "Auction of Souls" showing at the Columbia

"Jinx" Circus Parade Goes Over Big in Marianna, Arkansas

T. E. HOBBS, manager of the Majestic theatre at Marianna, Ark., played Mabel Normand in the Goldwyn picture, "Jinx," for a two-day engagement.

Mr. Hobbs "put on" the kid circus parade which has proved so successful for exhibitors playing "Jinx." He advertised that three prizes would be given to the children who exhibited the best decorated wagon, coaster or carts rigged up to look like a circus float. All the displays were assembled in a big parade, headed by a band.

The Press Book by the Men Who Use Then

A Series of Articles Secured by C. L. Yearsley, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the First National Exhibitor's Circuit.

ANENT these articles on press books which are appearing weekly in the News, we have stories this week by two men who speak right out in meeting. They don't seem to care whose toes they step on. The first story is by Guy Leavitt, motion picture editor of the Omaha World. Now, Omaha is a city where they do some mighty good advertising, especially in the newspapers. Mr. Leavitt says he "grins and bears it," which tells the whole story as he looks at it, meaning his opinion of the average press book. The second is by Tom Carroll, manager of the Standard theatre of Cleveland. Mr. Carroll begins his story with a very plain statement: "I've yet to see the press sheet that was of any use to me." And then he tells why he doesn't use the press book. But read what these men have to say.

By Guy Leavitt, Motion Picture Editor, Omaha World-Herald

EVEN a motion picture editor for a daily newspaper, accustomed to grin and bear it when he encounters an inferior picture and to rave into ecstasies when he sees one that is really good, has his ideas on a press sheet. Especially does he have fixed ideas if his exhibitor friends are accustomed to strolling into the editorial sanctum, flopping a press sheet on the desk, and saying, "You know how to handle that stuff, Guy. There she is."

I get a press book from each of the big downtown motion picture theatres in our city for every picture each of those theatres shows. From this press book I seek to get several things.

First, a comprehensive synopsis; the story told briefly, so I can use it as it is told.

Second—and here is a secret, I suppose, of the trade—a condensed review that I can use as though it were my own.

Third, a few brief newsy stories connected with the picture.

And I have my troubles. I bear them silently Recently one of my very good friend exhibitors said, "Guy, I'll help you out. I'll have my stenographer go over all that junk in the press sheet, pick out what is best, and copy it. Then I'll bring that typewritten copy to you, using the press book stuff verbatim except I'll put in the name of the house and our dates." Alas! Now, in addition to the bunk, I have to struggle with the multitude of errors made by my friend's stenographer. But, as I say, I grin and silently suffer.

Once I found an excellent 150-word synopsis of the story—I believe the picture was "Daddy Long Legs"—that I could clip from the press sheet and use verbatim. Usually I achieve my desire by clipping a paragraph here, and a paragraph there, from the press sheet. Some press sheets I have learned by experience to ignore utterly, and thus save time. An invariable fault I have to find is that the first paragraph of the overworked press sheet must include about half a dozen things: Name of star, the director, the producer, the distributor, sometimes the author, the scenario writer, occasionally the name of the play itself, and a scant, forced place for the name of the theatre. I have yet to use the first paragraph of a press sheet story except, as I said, that one on "Daddy Long Legs."

Secondly, why cannot our press sheets supply us, the poor struggling editors, with a review which the reading public could not tell, at the first glance, was unadulterated bunk? It ought to be easy. The reviews in our press sheets, I find, are also cursed with that overworked first paragraph that tries to tell a lot of stuff the public would dodge, rather than read. We editors try to fool the public into believing we have seen the picture. Of course we couldn't visit every theatre and write a nice, lengthy review for Monday morning, but we try to fool the public into thinking we do. We'd have a fat chance, wouldn't we, if we tried to use any of that superlative-burdened mush placed at our disposal?

Exhibitors tell me they find the First National press sheets the best for writing advertisements. I find the Paramount and First National press sheets by far the best for newspaper purposes. It actually appears to me, away out here in the middle west, far from where things happen, that the First National is purposely trying to get out a press sheet that will be useful. I don't make this allegation without reservations, mind you, but I would suggest that the motion picture trust look into this. If the matter isn't taken up soon, one of these days we'll get a press sheet we can use. These are desperate words. But I mean 'em.

I remember when Nazimova was thrown across the stage nine times and sprained something trying to get realism into "The Brat." I clipped the story from a trade paper. Then it came with a gob of mimeographed stuff from Metro. Then, when the picture came to our town, here it was, word for word, offered me again.

When "The Hoodlum" came to Omaha, I wanted some good little Mary Pickford stories; a good one that I could use on the Sunday section, along with a comprehensive synopsis, and some short ones I could use occasionally during the week's run. I found them in the press sheet. I don't say this to boast of my powers as a sleuth. But any "Movie" editor will realize what I accomplished.

And some of the old-old stories sprung in press sheets! Awful. The one about a detective guarding the jewelry laden star, f'r instance! 'N these autobiographies of our stars! The fans are interested in home life stuff, but the fans or anyone else isn't interested in wornout fakes.

There's lots of good, newsy stories about the studios. Every star has nice, brief, little stories of interest, without getting letters from Japan and China, either.

Please, Mr. Press Sheet Writer, I'm only a poor little middle western motion picture editor, happy and hopeful. Won't you use your noodle and shoot me something I can use?

Thanks, old top.

By Tom Carroll, Manager The Standard Theatre, Cleveland. Downtown First Run House

I'VE yet to see the press sheet that was of any use to me.

Words, that's all they consist of. As to ideas. They're nowhere in sight.

Probably you'll recall what Victor Hugo said. It was, "My ideas, everything. My words, nothing."

And that sums up the value of all press sheets in my mind. Please to bear in mind that I am not directing my remarks against any one company in particular. That's my opinion of them all. I know what's in a press sheet before I look into it. namely:

About six samples of ads, each one stating this is the greatest picture ever made.

Three samples of post cards to be sent patrons stating this is the greatest picture ever made.

Ten or twelve stories to be given local papers, which incidentally no local paper would ever publish, stating this is the greatest picture ever made.

And exploitation ideas. They generally take this form: Plaster the town with one-sheet posters. Distribute five thousand handbills.

Now I think the whole press sheet could be su planted with a typewritten letter of suggestions.

For example, in putting over the picture "T Little Brother of the Rich," we got a stock tick and put it out in front. We had it arranged so th it printed advertisements for the show instead quotations. People passing saw the ticker in oper tion, stopped to look at the tape, and in a large pr portion of cases came into the theatre.

In exploiting a picture of Mrs. Charles Cha lin we made a cut-out of Chaplin's body, shoe cane, etc., and put Mildred Harris' head on t of it. People stopped to look at it and talked abo it. Incidentally that advertised the show a brought us a crowded house.

The same thing applies to the posters now g out by film companies.

The men who make the posters seem to thi the only sort the public are interested in are tho which show a man and a woman in each othe arms.

Examine the set of posters with most any fe ture, other than dare-devil, and nine-tenths of t posters are of the sort I just mentioned.

Originality is utterly lacking.

A poster can never be made into a cutout ju as it is. Usually we have to combine two or thr different posters and then call in a local artist a last resort.

And newspaper stills. I've had local photop editors ask me so many times why companies do put out printable stills that words fail me.

In conclusion, let me repeat my original conte tion. The exhibitor wants ideas, usable practic ideas.

The way the Muse advertises its serial pictures

Giving the Serial Precedence Over the Feature

LAST week we told you what T. M. Wooters, advertising director of the Sun-Moon and Amuse theatres of Omaha, could originate in the way of novelty exploitation for pictures. This week it is a little story of how this enterprising publicity director advertises his serials.

Mr. Wooters' idea is that if you are going to play a serial at all give it something besides a perfunctory "also the thrilling 'steenth episode of So and So." His theory is that either serial is an attraction worth good billing or it should not be on the program.

With this idea in mind he plays up the serials which are used at the Omaha equally with the feature.

In the accompanying photograph you will note the way he is billing "The Adventures of Ruth" with a twenty-four sheet, while in the case of the feature he is contenting himself with smaller paper.

This was not a just "happen so" thing with Mr. Wooters. When he booked the Ruth Roland serial he determined to get out all the people who like serials and Ruth Roland. To do that he had to let them know that the Amuse had booked the picture and when it would be run.

For this purpose he chose the billboard, since he argues that those who like the average serial production are not the people who can be easily reached with newspaper display. They have to be appealed to with a "flash."

As Mr. Wooters puts it: "Appeal to them with letters four feet high. Make them read your announcement, which you can't do in newspaper display."

So it is that this big glaring ad looks out from over the portchaine of the Amuse the last three days of each week. It is a reminder that it is time to make plans for getting around to the popular Omaha playhouse for the next episode.

Personal Appearance of June Caprice Great Success for St. Louis Theatre

ONE of the first real exploitation ideas of the film business, back in the days when they made one reelers, was the personal appearance of a motion picture star. It was a success always, but some way the practice sort of languished for a few years, only coming into vogue again to any great extent within the past year. That personal appearances have lost none of their drawing power is evidenced by every instance we are able eo record of this form of exploitation.

As an example of what can be done in this line, we are able to record for you the experience of Arthur Moscowitz, the manager of Loew's Garrick theatre, St. Louis, who has recently entertained June Caprice at the Garrick.

One sheets, threes and sixes were posted all over town in addition to several hundred quarter sheet cards, all in the same color combination, black on yellow, announcing the personal appearance at Loew's Garrick theatre.

Mr. Moscowitz made a special announcement from his stage at each performance preceding the opening day of the engagement. He also arranged to present Miss Caprice in one of her Pathe pictures, "The Love Cheat."

Every newspaper carried a special story of her personal appearance. On the opening day, Sunday, the police reserves were called to help handle the crowds, and this record breaking business continued throughout the four day engagement. At the opening performance, Miss Caprice was welcomed by Hon. Henry W. Keil, the mayor of St. Louis, who presented her with the key of the city.

After the successful opening day's business Mr. Moscowitz continued to exploit Miss Caprice to keep up the interest of her appearance in town. Mayor Keil escorted Miss Caprice about town in his automobile showing her the various institutions of the city. Monday night she attended a local boxing match, where she made a speech.

Tuesday she appeared before the Chamber of Commerce and gave a very interesting talk before that body. Wednesday she appeared before the Women's Club and the Wednesday Afternoon Club, two of the most prominent organizations in town. She was royally received by these organizations.

The High Lights of Broadway's Shows

Timely Tips on Short Subjects

Refreshing Riviera

Prizma—Republic—One Reel

THIS is a Prizma offering which has a lot to recommend it over the usual scenic. It is a real travelogue number showing the "high lights" of one of Europe's most wonderful resorts with a delightful array of the flowers of the section caught in full bloom. The picture has a nice exploitation angle. This was one of the "rest towns" for the A. E. F. while in France and the chances are that you have quite a lot of "doughboys" in your city who have been there.

Don't overlook this exploitation angle if you book the reel. Some great views of the Mediterranean sea with its wondrous blue water are caught, as are also of the ancient churches and castles. On the bill at the Capitol theatre.

The Wanderlust

One-reel Scenic—Paramount Post

WITH lines of the famous poem by Gerald Gould and explaining the longings of restless souls to wander used as titles, scenic bits fitting to the description of the poem are fitted about the verses.

Mountain, river, hill, vale, sea, river, "the earth beneath and the sky above" caught by the camera in its most beauteous moment are shown. The beauty of the poem itself adds to the distinct scenic values of the reel. Quite an unusual offering of its kind, very artistically served. On the program at the Rivoli.

The Mad Woman

Stage Women's War Relief—Universal

THIS is distinctive only from the fact that it brings a notable cast including Nance O'Neil and Tyrone Power to the screen in roles which permit of some very good emotional acting. The story concerns a Russian nobleman who marries a peasant, later becoming tired of his wife and taking his son away to live in the castle, leaving the mother alone. The woman becomes mad, but finally regains her reason and is reunited with her husband and son. Two reels. Reviewed at the Capitol theatre.

All Lit Up

Snub Pollard—Pathe

SNUB POLLARD and his "gang" have managed to keep this going fast and furiously enough to register some good laughs although there isn't anything really funny contained if the action gave the audience time to digest what is happening. Pollard resorts to his favorite style and appears in his usual make-up. About an average for this comedian's productions. Being shown on the Broadway program this week.

Presidential Possibilities—Pathe

VIEWS of the leading, and some who are following, statesmen in the United States who may be chosen as candidates for the presidency this summer. Among those whose features are shown are Governor Collidge of Mass., Hiram Johnson of California, Champ Clark and William J. Bryan. We saw this strip in two Broadway houses and in both theatres Mr. Bryan's picture was received with a laugh which would do credit to a comedy. Coolidge and Johnson seemed to be favorites with both audiences.

Thrills Aplenty—International

FOR the first time before the camera, a man changes from one aeroplane in flight to another. This was taken at Durant Field, California. The stunt is thrilling but loses a great deal of its effectiveness when transferred to the screen for the reason that it is a long shot and the details of the transfer are barely discernible. Possesses unusual advertising possibilities. Part of the weekly at the Rivoli and Capitol.

What You Need To Drive a Car Around the Globe—Pathe

AN interesting array of automobile licenses from many countries including the Orient. A novelty with an educational slant. Secured at Albany, N. Y. The state capitol. Rivoli theatre.

Riding the Sea With the Atlantic Fleet—International

MORE good views of the Atlantic fleet in Cuban waters where it will stay for some time at target practice. Some good views of the sea in rough weather are caught showing the water piling over the bow and sweeping the decks. The strip also has a decided scenic value. Rivoli and Strand theatres.

The Yellowstone Trail—International

VIEWS of Yellowstone Park in winter. Nothing unusual but a nice feature to add variety to a weekly. Some good comedy in a deer which gets curious about the motion picture camera and pokes her nose into the lens.

Niagara Falls Dons Winter Robes—International

ONE of the first subjects for the picture machine was Niagara Falls. Since that time it has been a favorite spot for the camera man but never has anything quite so beautiful scenically been achieved at this favorite resort. The majesty of the falls is fully brought out against the background of snow and ice with the trees along the banks beautiful with their coating of ice formed by the freezing mists from the waterfall. The tintings of the film also add to the scenic beauty. A very choice strip that has never been surpassed in all the film taken of the Falls.

Testing the Nerves of Uncle Sam's Flyers—International

OF distinctive educational value in that it shows the strange contraptions used to train the aviator in his profession and to determine whether or not he can qualify as a member of the craft. Should be of interest to every one and especially to the younger generation.

P. Deschanel Elected President of France—Gaumont

FIRST view of the French Republic's new president. Interesting only that it gives people an idea of what the man looks like.

Along the Florida Coast—Gaumont

FOR some "summer stuff" to relieve the almost universal scenes of snow and ice whenever an exterior is shown, this is worth while remembering. Shows the Florida colony bathing, flying about the sea in power boats and having a lot of fun.

IN our wanderings up and down Broadway during the past week we have bumped into Mary Pickford's "Polyanna" three times. The first time we saw the picture we joined in on the general chorus of "laughs and cries" that the feature was generating. The second time we sat in on "Pollyanna" we also contributed with our smiles and tears. The third time we caught "the glad game" picture we found we could still chuckle over its whimsicalities and couldn't help getting the same old lump in our throat over its pathos, all of which is a long way of saying that this is some picture.

There isn't any use of telling you to book it, for those who can, will or have and those who can't will be sorry that they couldn't. We can tip you off two things, however. Primarily "Pollyanna" is a "glad" picture. We have seen it operate on three audiences, and it registers for more comedy than most productions which bear this title. Don't overlook the comedy angle in billing it. The second tip is to make sure that your playing engagement is long enough so you can take care of all the people who will want to see the feature. If "Daddy Long Legs" held up for a week play this one two, for if "Pollyanna" doesn't bring 'em in on the double quick for double time, then there is something wrong with your exploitation. The fault won't be with the picture.

Did you know that nine out of ten people enjoy the clowns of a circus the most of anything even three rings provide in the way of entertainment? They do, and at the Rivoli is a Christie comedy which registers for all the world as does a clowning act. "Save Me, Sadie," is about the "foolishest," funny thing of some time.

It is going over at the Rivoli, where they cater quite a lot to the "high brows," even to the staging of entire scenes, with scenery and costumes, of grand opera compositions.

Speaking of this grand opera feature of Dr. Reisenfeld's at the Rivoli leads us to render the opinion that people in New York are taking to it more than kindly. The scene from "Faust" on this week's bill brought forth a round of applause which we seldom witness in a Broadway theatre. We couldn't help but notice the difference in the way the number was received in comparison with the attention and hand the usual vocal selection at this same house earns. There is ten times the interest in the opera rendition, notwithstanding the fact that the singers are the same people who have appeared at this theatre time and time again. We try to do a little figuring on the "why" of the show business, and the thought which suggests itself to us in this connection is that the chances are that nine of ten people who attend the picture theatre, at prices around ten bucks per seat, have never heard "Faust" sung (present company included). It is a novelty as well as a musical treat and doesn't cost ten iron men, which in itself is something to be joyful about, since we never could see how anyone could pay ten dollars for any show and come away feeling right.

Anyway, Dr. Reisenfeld's staging of bits from the famous operas is making New York sit up and take notice, which is quite some job, so you can decide for yourself if you want to take a try at it.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

Photograph Contest Which Helped Several Theatres and Several Productions

HE contest to find the "double" of a well known film actress is not startlingly new ny more. But it is still good and has many things to recommend it as a publicity stunt.

A photograph contest carried on by the Kentucky Post of Covington, Ky., second largest ity in Kentucky, had the merit of not only being a big boost for the star involved, but also proved a direct benefit for at least two theatres and several productions in which the star appeared.

The contest, as conducted by the Post, in cooperation with the exploitation of the Cincinnati Exchange, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, an an entire month; with a two to eight column head story on the first page EVERY day!

The star was Vivian Martin.

Max Cook, editor, and J. R. Currie, advertising department, desiring to pull a moving picture stunt, secured the co-operation of a leading ocal jeweler. He donated a $75 watch as a prize to the Kentucky girl whose photograph most resembled that of Vivian Martin.

Of course, that meant that Vivian Martin photos in many sizes and poses were run at irst to get things started. The Famous Players exchange furnished the photos with alacrity. Then the girls began to send in their pictures! Mr. Cook, the editor, expected about fifteen at most. Before the contest ended he had more than 100 girls who looked—or thought they did—like Vivian Martin. The contest was the talk of the city.

And right there the exhibitors came to bat. The Rialto and other theatres of Covington, Newport, Bellevue, Latonia and neighboring Kentucky towns, knowing the value of the Vivian Martin publicity, arranged with the Cincinnati office of Famous Players to book that star's pictures. They advertised that the girls of the town must see the picture to learn all the characteristics of the star in her various moods. The theatres booked "The Third Kiss" and "His Official Fiancee" and other Vivian Martin productions and "cleaned up" on them.

The mayor of Covington was chairman of the judges selected to award the prize, which went inally—after thirty days of publicity—to Miss Margaret Fisher, who really does resemble the Paramount-Artcraft star.

This "stunt" is made especially interesting as it is an example of the latest phase of motion picture exploitation. With exploitation men at he various exchanges the planning of stunts has recently taken on the nature of "wholesale publicity." That is, planning something that will provide publicity not only for one picture and one theatre, but for a group of pictures or for a number of theatres in the territory which the exploitation man serves.

Again this stunt is interesting because it shows how the newspapers are awakening to the possibilities of moving picture feature stories. The Kentucky Post, through Mr. Cook and Mr. Currie, gave a lot of space, time and thought to making the contest a success.

Cincinnati Experts Hook Up with Public Schools

THE esteem in which the educational value of the moving picture is held was demonstrated his week when, as the result of a number of conferences between Randall J. Condon, superintendent of Cincinnati schools, and E. P. Weisner, director of exploitation of the local Universal exchange, the Cincinnati Board of Education contracted for the showing of the Universal Screen Magazine and the Universal Weekly in a number of Cincinnati schools. Once per week the entire student body of these schools will be assembled in the auditoriums to see the pictures, which will supplant the time-honored "current event" classes. At the present time the service will be installed in the nine Cincinnati grade schools and three high schools which have projection machines, and as soon as the other schools are equipped with machines the service will be extended to them.

As far as is known, Cincinnati is the first city in the country to inaugurate this policy, and the results will no doubt be eagerly watched by educators throughout the land. Should the plan prove a success, it will mean not only a moral boost for the moving picture industry, but will greatly extend a field for the sale of projection machines and educational films.

Added significance is given to the inauguration of the experiment by Superintendent Condon, as he is one of the most widely known educators in the country and has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for the proposed "Chair of Education" to be established in the President's Cabinet.

Supporting Players Receive Votes for Popularity

W. FRIEDMAN, manager of the Metropolitan theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has made a curious discovery through an effort to learn the favorite stars of the majority of his patrons. The discovery lies in the fact that a great number of the patrons of the Metropolitan have favorites among the lesser lights on the screen, and for this reason Mr. Friedman has adopted an advertising policy of running the cast in connection with every picture used at the theatre, as far as possible.

For a week the patrons of the Metropolitan were handed cards with a request to name three favorite motion picture actors or actresses to be used as a guide by Mr. Friedman in booking productions. Fully one-quarter of the cards that were turned in did not contain the name of a star either as first, second or third choice, but did contain the names of actors and actresses who have done splendid work in the support of stars. A great majority of the remaining cards contained the name of at least one who has never been starred, so that Mr. Friedman learned that almost three-quarters of his patrons had screen favorites who had not yet reached stardom.

As a result of this discovery the entire advertising campaign for Anita Stewart in "Her Kingdom of Dreams," which was booked for the Metropolitan two weeks later, was changed. The complete list of principals appearing with Miss Stewart was used in every bit of advertising.

Cleveland Gets Expert Exploitation Aid

ACCORDING to our Cleveland correspondent, Bert Adler of the Realart exploitation forces has been buzzing around the Forest City during the showing of "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Euclid theatre, working up all manner of new and strange publicity features.

Among the stunts pulled off, the one which was entirely new to Cleveland, and which proved the most successful, was a private showing of the picture to an invited audience comprised of the officers of the federated women's clubs of Cleveland.

There were approximately 180 women present at the screening, which is said to have been the first time in the history of the Better Film movement that a delegation representing the federated women's clubs, sat in judgment of the merits of a film, before recommending it to its membership, instead of accepting a list issued by state club authorities.

The federation sponsored the showing through Mrs. Alvord Biship, president, who said that if the method proved popular here, it is expected to be adopted by the other federations elsewhere. In connection with the screening, Mr. Adler received the following telegram from Miss Etta V. Leighton, Americanization secretary of the National Security League:

"Congratulate Cleveland Federation for their original move in interest of this movement. Cleveland, first in so many things, am not surprised to see it first in this. Predict that city federations throughout the country and better film committee will change their methods of aiding approved films when they know Cleveland experiment."

Following an address by Benjamin Karr, editorial writer for the Cleveland News, in which Karr emphasized the value of motion pictures as a medium to preach Americanism, and an informal talk by Ernest P. Wiles, director of the Cleveland Americanization Council, explaining the work of the organization, the ladies of the federations were asked to deliver their unbiased, unprejudiced opinions of "Soldiers of Fortune." Several of them were incorporated in the advertisement which appeared in the Plain Dealer the following morning.

This method of exploitation was entirely new in Cleveland.

One of the principal reasons for the unusual success of the "Soldiers of Fortune" was the manner in which the newspaper advertising was handled. In every publicity item put out by M. A. Malaney, who handles the publicity for all of the Loew theatres in Cleveland, the love theme of the picture was emphasized, and the adventurous side was suppressed. It was exploited, not as a melodrama with a little love thrown in, but as a love story with the action thrown in. The effect was just what was expected. It brought crowds of women to the Euclid who, if the thrills of the play had been given preference, would never have felt drawn to see the production. It all depends when and where a picture is shown, what angle shall be emphasized, but Malaney exhibited judgment when he realized that a leading house, which caters to the best audience, does not respond to the blood and thunder melodrama that goes so well in some localities.

What the Exchange Experts Are Doing

Formerly Ohio Grew Presidents—Now It's Publicity Men

EDDIE CARRIER, Select's publicity expert, who is covering the northern Ohio territory, tells how super-exploitation "puts them over" to capacity business.

It would look like a great task to some people if they had a duty to perform in putting two pictures in the same city over the top to capacity business at the same time, but with a real exploitation expert it is a mere "do it," as explained by Eddie Carrier, in charge of the Cleveland branch of Select Pictures.

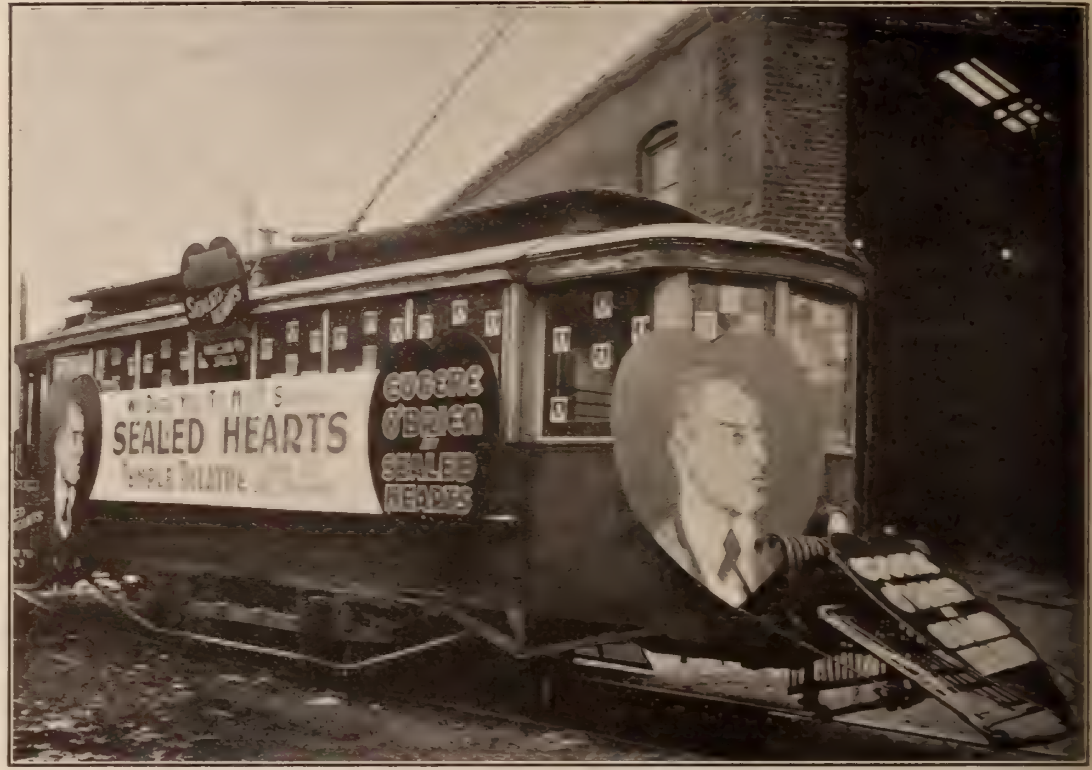
Toledo, a city of some two hundred and fifty thousand, has three wide-awake newspapers, all of them favorably inclined to the motion picture industry. So, with the co-operation of these papers secured, and pitting the left hand against the right, the battle was on with Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl" at the Colonial and Eugene O'Brien in "Sealed Hearts" at the Temple.

The unique exploitation of "A Regular Girl" received extensive advance publicity, due to the fact that General Pershing visited Toledo ten days before the picture opened. An effort was made by Mr. Carrier to get Elsie Janis to come to Todelo to assist in the official reception of the General. At first it was arranged that Miss Janis would appear in Toledo for the affair. Manager Abe Horwitz, of the Colonial theatre, worked with the newspapers on the proposition, and for several days the Toledo Blade carried a front page story about Elsie Janis, her prospective visit to Toledo, and her connection with the photoplay about to be shown. Front page advertising is about the rarest bird in the exploitation field, but Horwitz got plenty of it for Elsie Janis and "A Regular Girl."

The failure of Miss Janis to appear, due to illness, in no way lessened the effect of the campaign. In fact, it was quite the opposite. The Toledo papers again resorted to front page stories, contradicting their former statement anent the popular star's appearance.

The Janis publicity was followed up on the arrival day of General Pershing by the distribution of five thousand Janis-Pershing cards among the thousands who waited for a glimpse of the General. The get-up of this card was a photo of General Pershing on one side and of Elsie Janis on the other. The crowds snapped them up eagerly. Several thousand more were distributed by trucks which followed in the wake of the Pershing parade, decorated with banners bearing various greetings, such as "Jobs for Soldiers Endorsed by Elsie Janis" among others.

The above campaign was followed by a "Regular Girl" essay contest, conducted with the co-operation of one of the newspapers. The best essay received a prize of $10; second prize brought $5 to the winner, and $2.50 was awarded as the third prize. The next best one hundred aspirants received a pair of passes to see "A Regular Girl" at the Colonial theatre during the week of December 28. This contest was a winner. It resulted in the receipt of thirty-six hundred essays, and proved cheap advertising for the exhibitor. Other exploitation feats employed in putting "A Regular Girl" over in regular style were one thousand assorted half-sheet teaser cards used as tack and window cards, variously worded, "Are You a Regular Girl?" "Jobs for Soldiers Endorsed by Elsie Janis," "Wives, Beware, your husband has a date with a Regular Girl!" "Husbands, you have a date with a Regular Girl, ask your wife if she'll object," etc., backed up with the posting of thirty-two twenty-four sheets, teaser ads and a prize Regular Girl dance wherein Elsie Janis donated a silver loving cup to the most gracefully dancing couple. This cup was on display for a week in the leading jewelry store, where it was purchased. The dance stunt was worked in co-operation with a popular dance hall, and resulted in extensive Janis publicity among the younger set, which helped to secure packed houses.



This street car paraded over every mile of track at Toledo during the showing of "Sealed Hearts," at Toledo, Ohio

On the other hand, Eugene O'Brien, at Eddie Zorn's Temple theatre, playing at the same time that "A Regular Girl" was playing at the Colonial theatre, enjoyed widespread publicity through a carefully planned but totally different exploitation policy that was carried out. The novel feature of this campaign was a street car which was rented from the Toledo Railway Company at a very nominal figure. This car, decorated with banners and cut-outs of Eugene O'Brien, and clever copy on "Sealed Hearts," toured the streets of Toledo for two days—the day preceding and the day following the opening of the engagement. The local High School Band was engaged to travel with the car and rendered a musical program while en route. In addition, seven thousand sailor heart-shaped cards were distributed by boys from the car platform all along the way. A large photograph of Eugene O'Brien was the prominent feature of the advertising on one side of the car, while pertinent copy on "Sealed Hearts" covered the reverse side of the car.

The entire cost of this stunt was not in excess of $60, but it did the business. It sure did make 'em stop, look and listen, and it brought the people flocking to the Temple theatre, which, after all, is the real test of the value of any publicity stunt.

How Aschmann Won His Prize

HOOKING up the exchange manager's personality to the picture and making it help sell the general public is the stunt worked out by Bill Aschmann, manager of the Milwaukee branch of Pathe. He is doing this in a number of snappy ads boosting the showing of Harold Lloyd at the Strand theatre. The first ad carried a cut of "Smiling Billy" Aschmann and his personal recommendation of the first of the new Lloyd comedies. In addition to this, he personally offered a reward for the best criticisms of the comedy.

The result was that hundreds of people called him at his home, stopped him on the street and came to his office to either thank him for his tip to see the comedy or to say that they were going to the Strand to see it. "I am very well known in Milwaukee," said Mr. Aschmann, "and I was really surprised to see how many people I know or who at least knew me. The stunt is working big. The next ad will carry a copy of the best criticism and an 'I told you so' statement from me." Much of the success of this new departure is due to the cooperation and interest being taken in it by Frank Cook, manager of the Strand. Though the Aschman ad was one of the smallest in the Saturday and Sunday papers, it was the most talked of one in the entire amusement sections and brought thousands to the Strand theatre.

Live News from the Producers

Sylvia Breamer Has Been Signed by Mayflower

Sylvia Breamer has been engaged by Mayflower for its series of film versions of the Robert W. Chambers novels to be made by Sidney A. Franklin Miss Breamer formerly played opposite William S. Hart and Charles Ray for Thomas H. Ince. These parts were followed by "Missing," in which she was featured by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton; and a leading part in Cecil B. DeMille's production, "We Can't Have Everything."

Realart Finishes "Judy of Rogues' Harbor"

Mary Miles Minter has completed her second Realart offering, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," adapted from the novel by Grace Miller White. The story is characterized as "a classic of American girlhood," by the Realart Corporation. Miss Minter in the role of Judy, a golden haired country lass, is said to be provided with varied opportunities to employ her youth and charm with effectiveness.

One of the outstanding characterizations of the photoplay is declared to be the role of Pop Ketchell, depicted by Theodore Roberts. Herbert Standing, as the governor of the state, is said to be remarkably convincing. Frankie Lee plays the part of the maltreated four-year-old Denny. Allan Sears plays the part of Jim Shuckles, a brutal farmer.

United's Ad Offices Are Moved to New Quarters

The advertising and publicity department of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and the United Picture Productions Corporation moved last eek to 1457 Broadway. This was ade possible through United taking ver the Triangle Exchanges.

R. W. Baremore, United's publicity nd advertising manager, is now located on the eleventh floor of the rokaw Building from which office the nited publicity and advertising will be andled in the future.

Metro Gets Director Dallas FitzGerald

Dallas M. FitzGerald has been engaged as an addition to the Metro taff of directors, and will be located t the company's studios in Hollyood Cal. Herbert Blache, John nce, Henry Otto, Ray C. Smallwood, rthur D. Ripley, Rex Ingram and V. A. Howell comprising the present Metro staff, are all busy on new roductions, and in consequence Mr itzGerald's first assignment has no een made as yet.

Goldwyn and Bray in Alliance

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION now holds a controlling interest in the Bray Pictures Corporation, whose product it has been distributing since September, 1919. Coincident with the announcement that unlimited resources are placed behind the Bray organization, it is stated that the scope of the Bray Corporation's production will be substantially increased along entertainment, educational and industrial lines. The first move will be the launching of a new weekly release under the title of Goldwyn-Bray Comics, in addition to the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, which at the present time is being widely circulated.

At a meeting last week the following officers and directors were elected: J. R. Bray, president; Francis A. Gudger, vice-president; J. F. Leventhal, vice-president; Moritz Hilder, treasurer; Gabriel L. Hess, secretary; Erich Schay, assistant secretary, assistant treasurer; and Watson B. Robinson, assistant secretary. Executive Committee consists of Francis A. Cudger, chiarman; J. R. Bray and Samuel Goldwyn. Board of Directors is made up of J. R. Bray, Francis A. Gudyer, E. Dean Parmelee, Duncan A. Holmes, J. F. Leventhal, F. J. Godsol, Max Fleischer, Moritz Hilder, Watson B. Robinson, Gabriel L. Hess.

In making the Goldwyn-Bray Comics a novel departure in single-reel films, the producers will have the backing of the extensive resources of the Leslie Judge Company, publishers of Leslie's Weekly, a pioneer in the field of national weekly magazines, Judge, and other magazines with a countrywide circulation. The comics will contain one of Bray's famous animated cartoon subjects and a compilation of paragraphs selected and edited by Leslie's, and going under the general head of Penpoints.

Big Expansion in Production to Follow As a Result

Samuel Goldwyn, President of Goldwyn Pictures Corp.

In referring to the educational and industrial departments of motion picture work, which the Bray Company intends to develop. Mr. Bray spoke of the steadily increasing demand for instructive subjects coming from schools and other institutions. The Bray Company controls patents that make it possible for instructive drawings to be perfected to the highest point, and the same processes may be utilized in conjunction with straight photograph in making industrial films. The founder and president of the Bray Company believes that the possibilities of these two fields have scarcely been touched.

Another important step in the progress of the organization is the sending of cameramen to all parts of the world to secure travel and scenic subjects in far-away countries. Several expeditions already have been sent out, and others are planning to leave soon, it is stated.

As an indication of the steady growth of the Bray Corporation, officials point to the fact that it has recently increased its capitalization from $10,000 to $1,500,000, to provide for the expansion of its business. Now, with unlimited financial backing and the support of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Bray Pictures Corporation will be able to develop fully the educational and industrial fields and to create films of an even finer quality than heretofore for the theatrical market.

Schomer-Ross Films "Non-Censorable"

"Non-censorable" pictures is the aim of the Schomer-Ross Productions, and it is claimed the first release "The Sacred Flame" lives up to this object. The second production, now in course of preparation, and all succeeding pictures, will embody the same idea.

Robertson Cole Has Big Release

Extensive Campaign for "Who's Your Servant" is Announced

"Who's Your Servant?" the film drama of the day, has been secured for release by Robertson-Cole from L. L. Hiller, who controlled the world rights to this production penned by Julian Johnson. This special feature is said to have attracted the attention of hundreds of exhibitors in all parts of the country, owing to its exploitation possibilities and timeliness of subject.

This picture of refined entertainment with a hundred advertising and exploitation angles is based upon a stage play that had a continued successful run at the Princess theatre in New York City. The plot lays bare the astonishing conditions prevalent in many homes owing to the confidence which is harbored in the bosoms of many trusted servants.

In connection with its new acquisition, Robertson-Cole states:

"Statistics compiled by Mr. Johnson show that every city in the country at the present time is having its own troubles in settling the servant problem. Murder, theft, fire and a wave of crime that astonishes society can be placed directly at the door of the servants, and in Mr. Johnson's masterpiece, he shows how these evils have their origin and methods of bringing peace and quiet into the home via the servant route.

"There is a tieup for every exhibitor in the land in this picture. The police approve of it and as Mr. Johnson's theme is true to nature, exhibitors will receive all kinds of assistance to put this picture over with a bang. It is a big picture with a big theme and contains a wealth of exploitation possibilities.

Lois Wilson who has a principal role in "Who's Your Servant?" to be released by Robertson Cole

"Robertson-Cole is always in the market for pictures that have entertainment and real box office value. We want our pictures to please the exhibitor and profit him as much as they please the public. It was with this end in view that we shall release 'Who's Your Servant?' Its originality and uniqueness together with its selling value will put this picture over in keeping with the quality of the production.

"When Julian Johnson wrote the plot for this masterpiece he wrote another chapter of success in the motion picture world. A picture cannot be a 'Special' unless it carries a new theme enacted in an elaborate manner. 'Who's Your Servant?' is a play that carries events of the day; a story around which the newspaper columns are filled; deeds which keep the police on the alert and a subject that hits right into the very homes of Americans.

"It is exciting from start to finish. It grips and is the sort of a production which compels audiences to hold the chairs. Those who saw the picture wanted it and the purchase of this great production by Robertson-Cole is another coup that will be a real box office attraction.

"No matter what the exhibitor wishes to feature in his exploitation—whether it is his lobby, stunts, advertising tie-ups or window displays—he will find his problems all solved when he books 'Who's Your Servant?'

"The campaign book and the Special Publicity Supplement cover every possible angle involved in selling the picture to the public. Besides these there is a long list of accessories that range from a tiny sticker to elaborate four color designs for postals and window cards.

"Special attention has been devoted to the development of ideas that will enable the exhibitor to build up his advertising in co-operation with public service corporations, merchants and others. This plan gives the theatres the benefit of whole page newspaper advertising at a no greater expense than he customarily spends on an ordinary production."

Busch Sees Biggest Year Ahead

President of Republic Distributing Corp. Makes Statement

PREDICTING that the next five years will be the biggest ever experienced in the motion picture industry, Briton N. Busch, president of Republic Distributing Corporation, expressed his satisfaction at the start already made by 1920, in an interview this week.

"Never in the history of the motion picture industry has the demand for pictures been as great as at the present moment," said Mr. Busch. "Reports received from our exchanges scattered throughout the United States inform me that the motion picture theatres are experiencing an era of prosperity that knows no parallel. One difficulty that confronts the exhibitor is to secure enough pictures to supply the needs of his program, but pictures of the right sort. If there ever was a moment when the independent producer can find a ready sale for his products it is now. An opportunity is afforded the man who has sufficient ability to produce first-class features, together with a keen sense of picture value in stories, plays and novels, to reap a harvest.

"The company confining itself to the physical distribution of pictures and not combining with its labors the arduous task of producing at the same time, affords the independent producer the medium whereby his merchandise can be sold with the maximum of results, because such distributing companies are not influenced in neglecting the other man's product in order to get the greatest returns on such pictures as he makes himself.

The lady with the big hat and winning smile is Edith Hallor, who is appearing in Lawrence Weber Productions to be distributed by Republic

"The Republic Distributing Corporation of which Mr. Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director with me, has had an experience in the distribution of 'When Bearcat Went Dry,' the gross takings of which are as large as those obtained by a feature made and distributed through the most important companies in the industry. This shows that the organization specializing on distribution and not producing can give to the independent producer results that he cannot hope to obtain by putting his pictures with such organizations which have their own list of stars, whose features must be sold regardless of contracts made by the man who turns out one or two, or even a half dozen pictures a year.

"The next five years will be the biggest years in the business, and it behooves every man who is especially adapted or trained in making feature pictures, to bend every effort to turn out first-class merchandise in order to supply a demand that is not being met."

"Wonders of Nature" Set for Release

"Wonders of Nature," the single-part nature series, as compiled by Prof. W. L. Brind, the Naturalist-Cinematographer, have been definitely scheduled for release on the Tyrad program of February 1. The first subject entitled "Small Tropical Fish," graphically and entertainingly illustrates a trip up the "River of Doubt," made famous by the late Theodore Roosevelt, its accredited discoverer, in search of small tropical fish. It is the first of a series of fifty-two subjects to be released weekly by Tyrad Pictures, Inc.

First of New Selznick Pictures Started

The wheels started to turn January 22 on the first of the new stories which Lewis J. Selznick, of Selznick Enterprises, purchased for production during 1920. "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" is the name of the first of the stories to be started. With Elaine Hammerstein as star, this piece went into actual production at the Fort Lee studios, with George Archainbaud directing. Elaine Hammerstein's latest Selznick picture is "The Woman Game," announced for release on February 23.

Lacking Hotel Room, Wm. Farnum Buys House

If you cannot obtain a room in a hotel, buy a $200,000 home. That's what William Farnum did in Hollywood, according to a report from the William Fox offices. Advices recently received at the home offices of Fox Film Corporation are said to have stated that the star, disgusted at the crowded condition of Los Angeles hotels, bought a twenty-room mansion atop Santa Monica Mountains, overlooking Los Angeles.

New Members of United Picture Theatres

New exhibitor-members of the United Picture Theatres of America include: O. W. Newton of the Rialto theatre, Hillyard, Wash.; Fred Mercy, Empire theatre, Yakima, Wash.; Marck McManus, Opera House, Smyrna, Del.; Walter Warren, Mutual theatre, Yerington, Nev.; Benjamin Shindler, Auditorium, Cramer Hill, N. J.; Enterprise Amusement Corp., Kenyon theatre, N. S., Pittsburgh; W. A. Blue, Best theatre, Millvale, Pa.; J. B. Julius, New Orpheum, Webster City, Iowa; H. B. Cagle, Masonic theatre, Albany, Ala.

"Pinto" Is Said to Be Scoring Big Hit

As an instance of the overwhelming success attending the Mabel Normand picture, "Pinto," Goldwyn sets forth the following statement from a telegram received from A. G. Talbot, manager of the American theatre, Denver, Col.: "Necessary to close box office at two-thirty and several times later in day. Picture praised by all, and Mabel is making another tremendous hit."

J. Gordon Cooper, who is directing the Benny Leonard serial, "The Evil Eye," for Ascher Enterprises and Frank G. Hall

Selznick Cutting Rooms Keeping Busy

The Selznick cutting rooms at the Fort Lee and Bronx studios are scenes of unusual activity. Cutter Mansfield at Fort Lee is working on the Ralph Ince production, "His Wife's Money." "Footlights and Shadows" is being put into shape by Mr. McCoy, and Mr. Gardener is cutting "Greater than Fame."

The Bronx cutting room contains the Owen Moore production "Sooner or Later" and the two-reel classic, "The Land of Opportunity," in which Ralph [illegible]

Millhauser Takes Up Directing

Bertram Millhauser, for several ears scenario writer for Astra and George B. Seitz, during which time he collaborated on all of Pearl White's Pathe serials, has abandoned the typewriter in favor of the directorial megaphone. His first venture long this line is the direction of Juanita Hansen's first Pathe serial, "The Mad Talon," which is being produced under the supervision of Mr. Seitz.

Vaudeville Comedian Is with Goldwyn Cast

"Scratch My Back," a comedy by Rupert Hughes, which Goldwyn is producing at its Culver City studios, as had an addition to its cast. T. Roy Barnes, vaudeville and musical comedy tar, will be numbered in the company which already includes Cullen Landis, who distinguished himself in "The Girl from the Outside." T. Roy Barnes s one of the best-known variety entertainers in the country.

Universal Sales Contest Winner

Cleveland and Detroit Lead; Successful Bids By Others

WITH an average of over twenty per cent. increase in bookings for a three months period, Universal has just announced the results of its recent "big business drive." The salesmen and the office force of the Universal's Cleveland Exchange have been mailed a check for $2,500 as an award for winning first place in a three months' sales contest which closed on the first of the year. The Cleveland Exchange increased its film sales by 55.57 per cent. over the sales made during the three months immediately preceding the contest.

Detroit was second with an increase of 54.61 per cent. Detroit's check was for $1,300. The third Universal Exchange to come in the money was the Buffalo branch, which captured third place with an increase of 44.7 per cent. and won a check for $700.

Besides the main awards in the lively sales contest, the most efficient salesman in each of twenty-five exchanges received a check for $100. J. A. Daly, publicity manager of the Charlotte N. C., Exchange, received $50 as an award for the best and most consistent publicity during the contest. A second publicity prize, $25, was given to Dean Collins, of the Portland, Oregon, Universal branch. These prizes are in addition to the provisions made for publicity men in the big contest.

So spirited was the drive that the Universal sales machine, as a whole, averaged an increase of over 25 per cent. during the months of October, November and December, as compared to the months of July, August and September of last year.

The contest was known as the $6,000 Prize Contest, that amount of money being set aside to be divided among three leading exchanges and among the twenty-five top salesmen. Other prizes were added during the competition, until the total amount awarded as a result of the drive was more than $7,000.

The remarkable increase gained by the various exchanges is all the more unusual due to the fact that the results were compared with months in which a previous sales contest was running at full steam—the Universal Anniversary Contest, which lasted for two months, last summer. The winners in that contest were Pittsburgh, San Francisco and Cleveland, with percentage increases of 24 per cent, 22 per cent and 20 per cent respectively. In the previous contest, Detroit was fourth with 18 per cent and Buffalo was almost at the bottom of the list, showing a loss.

The $6,000 contest was equitable for all. It was as fair for the smaller exchanges as it was for the larger ones, and vice versa. As instances, Chicago with 43.88 per cent, was fourth, and the New York exchange, with an increase of 32 per cent, was seventh.

The percentage of increase in business of the leading exchanges for the three months of the contest follows:

Cleveland, 55.57 per cent; Detroit, 54.61 per cent; Buffalo, 44.7 per cent; Chicago, 43.88 per cent; Milwaukee, 38.02 per cent; Pittsburgh, 35.96 per cent; New York, 32 per cent; Des Moines, 30.34 per cent; San Francisco, 27 per cent; Seattle, 26.06 per cent; Sioux Falls, 24.96 per cent; Los Angeles, 20.25 per cent, etc.

As will be seen from the above figures the Chicago office, with 43.88 per cent, came within a fraction of one per cent of getting third place. This is a remarkable record considering the fact that the Chicago office has the second largest quota of business in the country.

To spur salesmen on to greater individual efforts, prizes of $100 were offered for the top salesman of each branch exchange. In this way every exchange had at least one man who benefitted directly by the contest. In Chicago and New York, because of the size of the exchanges, two $100 prizes were offered. An interesting angle of the drive is that at Sioux Falls, Universal's only woman sales representative topped the list.

On the new Jewel drive, started by Universal, the figures hung up by the various exchanges during this drive are to be the basis of future computation, so that there will be no letting up or resting on past accomplishments by any exchange, but continued pressure for bigger business.

Exchanges Transferred Orderly

United Exchanges Taken Over Without Cessation of Business

QUITE remarkable was the ease with which the change of offices of the various organizations concerned in the United-Triangle-Hallmark-Lynch deals were consummated. Without the loss of a minute of business time, United's exchanges were transferred to the Triangle branches and to the Lynch offices in the Southern district. In the same manner, the Hallmark managers and their forces lost no time in settling themselves in the newly-acquired United Exchanges, and business went on without interruption.

When one considers just what these changes mean, the fact that it actually meant the transferring of books, records, films, etc., from one location to another, it can be seen that it was quite a feat to make them without loss of time and without causing any inconvenience to salesmen or other employees connected with the various companies involved.

G. A. Smith, formerly of Triangle and who was appointed general manager of United Exchanges by President J. A. Berst, personally attended to the taking over of the Lynch Exchanges located in Atlanta, Dallas, Kansas City, St. Louis, New Orleans and Omaha. Mr. Smith spent the greater part of last week in the South in connection with the taking over of the Lynch exchanges.

In the territories covered by the other United Exchanges (formerly Triangle) United and Triangle managers combined in giving the transfer their attention, and so excellent was the co-operation that business was not interrupted for even a moment. Hallmark's managers were able to go right ahead with their bookings, and were as one in their high praise of the manner in which the transfer had been made.

The list of United Picture Exchanges and which are controlled by the United Picture Productions Corporation are now as follows:

Atlanta, Ga., J. W. Hanlon, manager; Boston, Mass., A. W. Smith, Jr.; Buffalo, N. Y., Jas. B. Kelly; Chicago, Ill., J. E. O'Toole; Cincinnati, Ohio, W. O. Fuchs; Cleveland, Ohio, Syd Rosenthal; Dallas, Texas, Albert Russell; Denver, Colo., C. F. Parr; Detroit, Mich., M. H. Starr; Kansas City, J. R. Levy; Los Angeles, Cal., C. J. Marley; Milwaukee, Wis., L. F. Thurwachter; Minneapolis, Minn., W. C. Lestico; New Haven, Conn., M. H. Rabanus; New Orleans, La. (manager to be announced later); New York, N. Y., Jack Levy; Omaha, Neb., Geo. A. Richardson; Philadelphia, Pa., H. W. Given; Pittsburgh, Pa., C. Bronstetter; St. Louis, Mo., Samuel Shurman; Salt Lake City, W. C. Ritter; San Francisco, Cal., W. J. Citron; Seattle, Wash., R. R. Nave; Washington, D. C., J. A. Bachman.

Special representatives include D. G. Rodgers, B. L. Hadfield, Ira Aronson, R. A. Bertachy, Ralph Myerson, Alfred Tanzer and S. T. O'Brien. H. C. Arthur is special representative for the Northwestern territory.

Republic Reports Three Important Promotions

Three important branch office changes and promotions in the Republic Pictures Corporation were announced this week. George R. Meeker, sales director of the Republic organization, has announced the appointment of Paul Bush as manager of the Chicago office of Republic.

Fred Salinger, former manager of the Pittsburgh branch of Republic has been made manager of the New York exchange according to the announcement. E. J. McCurty, formerly a salesman at the Pittsburgh office, has been appointed as manager of that office succeeding Mr. Salinger.

Charles Ray Affiliates With Arthur S. Kan

Popular Star Will Produce for Arthur S. Kane Corporation; Releases Through First National

CHARLES RAY is the first big asset which the newly formed Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation presents to the motion picture industry.

The news of the tie-up between one of the most prominent figures in the producing business and one of the most popular stars of the screen follows closely the proclamation last week of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, at 452 Fifth avenue, New York City.

By the arrangements with Mr. Kane, all the pictures of this star will be presented by the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation for First National release. Through a deal made a year ago, the distribution of the Charles Ray pictures following the completion of his contract with Thos. H. Ince was placed for a long time to come with the First National organization.

The Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation will handle Mr. Ray's business with the releasing concern and will supervise every New York activity of the star. Books, plays and other screen material to be purchased for Mr. Ray's use will be contracted for through the Kane offices.

With such a remarkably strong acquisition as its first card, it is freely predicted on the Rialto that Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation will duplicate the phenomenal rise which has characterized other enterprises which Mr. Kane has formed and handled.

Already the offices of the Kane Corporation on Fifth avenue are being showered with telegraphic messages from members of the film industry throughout the nation, congratulating Mr. Kane on his new venture and wishing him the success which, they declare, he richly deserves. The opinion is current by leaders in the industry that with hundreds of firm friends among exhibitors standing behind him, the possibilities of the new producing company are virtually unlimited.

The news of the union of Charles Ray and Arthur S. Kane this week received distinctly favorable comment from shrewd observers of the picture business. Great things were freely predicted from this unusual combination of talents, and the coincidence was pointed out that the lovable character which Charles Ray has established on the American screen is typified in the industry by the character and record of the producer who will henceforth sponsor his work.

The new affiliation of Charles Ray has brought to attention the remarkable position which this star has created for himself in the industry. Mr. Ray is commonly accredited as being one of the very biggest actors on the screen today and indications are that his phenomenal growth as a box-office attraction will establish him more and more in the very front rank of universally known motion picture personalities.

In aligning his interests with this fast moving young luminary and big box-office asset, it was considered that Mr. Kane had accomplished a masterstroke at the outset of his enterprise. Others pointed out that the thing worked both ways and that henceforth the business acumen and judgment of Charles Ray must command respect, because of the perspicacity displayed in interesting a man of Mr. Kane's standing in his affairs.

It is learned that negotiations to bring the former president of Realart and the First National star together were started weeks ago. It was expected to close arrangements in New York about December first last. It was finally considered best to settle matters in personal conference and this was the principal reason for Mr. Kane's five weeks' trip to the Coast starting December 7th and ending January 12th, during which he visited many exhibitors. Almost every cause was given by wire and letter to the press for the New York man's presence in Los Angeles except his real mission to see Ray. He was alleged to there for the purpose of dickering wi the Big Six and various other sta and directors. It turns out that t object of his visit was bigger than mo persons guessed.

"I am more happy than I can tel said Mr. Ray in a statement given him in Los Angeles. "For years have watched Mr. Kane and his stea climb to the pinnacle of our indust I know the high regard in which is held in all sections of the count I look forward to the most pleasa years of my career in the associatio now beginning. Mr. Kane stands the forefront among the business m of our trade. With him interested my affairs I feel secure. First N tional men are more than wonderf as I have learned from my associati with them in Los Angeles. I c promise my most earnest efforts to t exhibitors and the public. Do y blame me for feeling good?"

Mr. Kane, in a statement, said:

"There is not a person in moti pictures whose association I wou prize more than Mr. Ray's," he sa "He is a wonderful artist, a top m among stars and a power at the b office. His appeal is universal. So stars are highly popular in certain s tions but not in such great demand others. A few are liked everywhe Charles is one of the universal ki The appeal of his humaneness is wide as humanity itself. And he's g ing up. To cap it all he is a very r man. I am honored to have so gr an artist for this new concern a equally proud of the association w such a high type of man."

All of which looks rather good f the Ray First National pictures a the infant Kane corporation.

Fox to Revive Big Production

IN announcing its revival of six former big pictures, the William Fox Film Corporation has issued a detailed statement telling about the various exploitation helps to be submitted to the exhibitor in connection with these renovated productions. The statement follows:

"With every accessory, all paper, press sheets and other exploitation aids prepared and ready for distribution, William Fox makes known that Fox Film Corporation is planning a monster revival of six big special productions which have been found surpassingly popular as box-office drawing cards throughout the world.

"These six de luxe specials comprise 'Les Miserables,' 'Salome,' 'The Honor System,' 'A Tale of Two Cities,' 'Cleopatra' and 'A Daughter of the Gods.' Nothing whatever has been said about this move of the producer until the present time. Now it is learned from the Fox executive offices that a sufficient number of these prints, renovated and absolutely the same in every respect as when first introduced to the screen, is on hand to cover the entire country from coast to coast.

Six Former Releases Are to Be Reissued, Owing to Previous Hits

"The reason given for reviving these big special Fox successes is that exhibitors in all parts of the world have reported them to possess such unusual drawing power as to justify their periodical use, on the same plan by which the speaking stage revives its acknowledged successes.

"In bringing out these revivals Mr. Fox has caused to be published a complete and efficient press sheet for each production, designed on the most up-to-the-minute lines and prepared to aid the busiest theatre man in his advertising and exploitation. There is a profusion of splendid cuts, mats, ad copies and stunt suggestions and a powerful array of paper.

"With everything new—prints, paper, accessories and suggestions—the entire Fox organization is clearing its decks for action. A big national campaign will take in every Fox exchange in North America. February is the month in which William Fox will release these specials.

"Reports from the nearby Fox e changes, including the New York E change, which incidentally is enla ing its quarters in the building at West 46th Street, indicate a mar for these revivals. Many metropoli exhibitors and suburban theatre m have closed with the exchange February showings, and each o shows new business listed against o or the other of the six big picture

Fun, Fast and Clean, New Christie Comics

A new mark for wholesome ent tainment is said to be established the recent one-reel Christie Comed According to reports, the fun is f and clean, and the stories are hig amusing. Three of the new sir reelers are the directorial work of V liam Beaudine. They are "Kids a Kidlets," "Fair But False" "Watch Your Step—Mother." list includes also a single reeler by Christie, "Should Husbands Danc and "Nearly Newlyweds," by J McDermott.

"Bringing Up Father" Film Ready Soon

It is announced that the "Bringing Up Father" comedy which has been in the making at the Christie Studio for the past five weeks, will be ready for screening soon. Everyone who has watched its progress is predicting a riotous success for this two-reeler. Lavishly designed and dressed sets, fully in keeping with the ambitions of Mrs. Jiggs, have been used, and Mr Jiggs comes to grief in most of them.

The "Bringing Up Father" direction was in the hands of Al Christie and Reggie Morris, who share honors as co-directors.

Johnny Ray, as "Jiggs" easily has the premier honors in the comedy, although "Maggie," played by Margaret FitzRoy, comes in for a goodly share, and the "Nora" of pretty Laura La-Plante leaves nothing to be desired. Well known comedians, who appear in support, are Ward Caulfield, Jack Henderson, Eddie Baker, George George, Gus Leonard and others.

Louis Burston Is Host to Serial Actors

In celebration of the completion of the fifteenth and last episode of the newest Louis Burston serial, "The Hawk's Trail," Louis Burston last week gave an informal little party in Los Angeles to signalize the end of the strenuous production period of the latest King Baggot to-be-continued-in-our-next thriller.

Among Burston's guests were, of course, the star, King Baggot, his leading woman in the serial, Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell, George Seigman, Harry Loraine, Fred Windemere and Stanton Heck.

Za Su Pitts Signed Up with New Syndicate

Geo. H. Callaghan, special representative for the R. C. P. Smith Syndicate of Los Angeles, announces that the syndicate, which has recently entered the motion picture field as a producer, has signed Za Su Pitts, now a Brentwood Star, to a long-term contract. Sara Mason, who wrote Miss Pitts' starring vehicles, produced under the direction of King Vidor for Brentwood, will write specially for Miss Pitts under her new contract.

Balaban and Katz find corking lobby display use for the console of the new Barton Pipe Organ they are installing in Central Park Theatre, pending the placing of the big keyboard in its permanent position

New Model Barton Organ Scoring

Balaban and Katz Installing One in New Theatre

BALABAN & KATZ, owners of a string of big Chicago theaters including the Riviera, and Central Park and who are erecting a three million dollar house in the loop, have built the foundation of their success not only on good pictures but have always given their patrons good music and know that the public is interested in a fine organ, as part of the equipment of a first class moving picture theater. They at present are installing a new model Barton organ in their beautiful Central Park theater and pending the placing of the Console in its permanent position it is on exhibition in the lobby of the theater so the crowds can get a "close up" of the key board of the splendid instrument which soon will be a feature of this house.

The Barton Organ has recently been placed on the market by the Bartola Musical Instrument Co. of Oshkosh, Wis., and many claims of superiority are made for it. It was designed by Mr. Dan Barton, the Inventor of the Bartola Orchestral Musical Instrument which is now being used in a great number of the finest theatres in the country. Mr. Barton states he has realized for a long time the possibility of improving theater organs. Mr. Barton has spent more than three years in the development of this new Organ and states the improvements are based on a careful study of the present day needs of an exhibitor. The claims made by the inventor are that it is an organ with a wider range and greater scope of playing possibilities, that can be played daily over a long period of time without becoming in any way monotonous or tiresome. To accomplish this result without materially adding to the cost the Divided Manual was originated. This makes possible thousands of entirely new and original musical combinations of great beauty.

Without doubt the greatest claim for the new Organ is the fact that any organist can play this instrument without special instruction or schooling. This gives the exhibitor every organist in the country to choose from. It is claimed that some of the best organists in the country are barred from motion picture theaters because a great many theatre organs are played by a different method than the playing method used in church or cathedral organs. Organists who have mastered the instrument on the principles of standard organ playing will not change to the new methods introduced.

The console or key desk of the new Barton organ attracts special attention because of its massive appearance and the fact that all models, even in the smaller sizes, have three manuals or keyboards. A pipe organ is usually judged by the appearance of the console as well as the musical rendition and the worth of the instrument is figured by the average observer by the number of manuals or keyboards. In this the Barton Organ has the advantage of having three manuals on an organ that normally would have only two as ordinarily built. With the present day arrangement wherein the details of the theatre interior are given every attention to impress the clientele with the fact that personal comfort, high class music, etc. are given first thought by the management. The appearance of the organ console is of great importance.

The Bartola Co. is noted for the beautiful tone quality of the Bartola orchestral instrument and Br. Barton states this feature has been carried into the new Barton Organ. The tone quality is soft and beautiful rather than boisterous, yet solid volume is attained for the reason that many individual sets of pipes are used and no unified stop-borrowing or duplexing is used.

The claims made for the new instrument appear to be well founded, based on the fact that Balaban & Katz, one of the largest and most progressive concerns in the country think so well of the instrument to have one placed in their half million dollar Central Park Theatre.

Burston in Serial Combine

New Arrangement Intended to Increase Production Efficiency, It Is Reported

INSPIRED by the hit made by his latest serial, "The Hawk's Trail," Louis Burston has just concluded arrangements with four other independent producers of big serials whereby the group of which he will be the head, will be able to give serial states rights buyers a wide choice of excitement episodes as well as better prices by reason of confining purchases to the one combination.

As lined up, Burston is now prepared to give buyers serial material for fifty-two weeks in the year, if desired, but wishes it made emphatic that any serial of his group may be had singly without necessarily affecting the cost of any of the others.

The combination will lift production efficiency considerably, according to Burston, in the value brought to it by exchanging ideas, avoiding similarity of play material, in the enhanced quality of the advertising, and other details of serial production.

Burston reports unprecedented interest among state rights buyers in the latest King Baggot episodic, and credits the admirers of this novelty, "The Hawk's Trail," with his new plan of syndication, the proposal coming, in large measure, from buyers that the serial producer equip himself to supply consumers with a year's program, if the speed, grip and general excellence of "The Hawk's Trail" could be approximately maintained in all future releases.

Dates Are Set for Reissues

Triangle Reissues, Featuring Lillian Gish and Chas. Ray, Handled by United

J. A. BERST, president of the United Picture Productions Corporation, announces that two new Triangle recreated productions will be released through the United Picture Exchanges.

On February 15, "Tiger Girl," featuring Lillian Gish with Roszika Dolly, will be available to first-run exhibitors. "Tiger Girl" is an adaptation from "The Lily and the Rose" by Granville Warwick, and was directed by Paul Powell. "Tiger Girl" contains a theme of unusual dramatic appeal, and permits Miss Gish to portray the kind of role by which she gained her greatest success.

On February 29, Charles Ray will be seen in "The Hick," a Triangle play, recreated from "Plain Jane," by C. Gardner Sullivan. Bessie Barriscale heads a good supporting cast. This Triangle production was directed by Charles Miller and supervised by Thos. H. Ince. "The Hick" is the story of a small town college life, and gives Charles Ray the opportunity to play the part he likes best, that of an unsophisticated, love-sick lad. Mr. Sullivan describes a romance of a poor young student, and a much poorer "slavey" in a wretched boarding-house, and both Charles Ray and Bessie Barriscale are said to give excellent interpretations of these sympathetic roles.

Next Cuckoo Comedy to Be Ready Feb. 15

The next release of the Cuckoo Comedies will be "Ball Bearing But Hard Running," starring Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston. It will be ready for public presentation on February 15 and will be distributed through the United Exchanges.

Why Picture Cost Has Rise

E. S. Manheimer Declares Every Detail Has Been Affected by Price Increase

IN a statement just issued from the offices of the Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., E. S. Manheimer, of that organization, describes at some length the reasons for the increased cost of territorial rights on motion-picture productions at the present time. The statement follows:

"There are many state rights buyers, independent exchanges and others in the industry today who are not yet sold on the idea that because of the extraordinary rise in costs of talent, materials, and other necessary productions, that the cost of making pictures has gone up tremendously. Some seem to forget that picture-making three, two or even one year ago is vastly different than the cost of the same character of productions today.

"As a result many are surprised at the supposedly increased costs of territorial rights, but all such costs are based entirely upon the present-day production expense. Where 'extras,' for example, used to secure a decidedly small remuneration for their services, they now receive four times the amount. Where electricians, carpenters and others were paid what w considered a good wage, they have d manded and are now receiving unusu increases.

"Everywhere right down the lin not excepting one item in the makir of pictures has been spared the 'boos The salaries of stars, as every fil man knows, have risen to a coloss figure when compared to but a sho period ago. Leading men who receive what was considered a star's salary few years ago are today getting mo than those same stars used to receiv In the necessities such as printin posters, engraving and a thousand ar one sales accessories the price has bee boosted skyward.

"Doesn't it stand to reason, ther fore, when every detail of the pictur production has been raised double ar triple, that the prices for territori rights must be advanced? If we ha to sell state rights territory today the prices we received three or fo years ago, all independent produce would have to quit, and the same a plies to every producer, independe or otherwise."

Ray Gallagher to Be Starre

After an Absence of Two Years from Screen Returns Via Supreme Comics

ROBERTSON - COLE announces that another name has been added to the list of stars appearing in the Supreme Comedies, released by that organization. Ray Gallagher, for many years a juvenile leading man on the legitimate stage, will shortly be co-starred with Molly Malone, who also recently joined the Supreme Comedies.

Mr. Gallagher returns to the screen in Supreme Comedies after an absence of two years, during which time he toured the world with the Melies Company. Mr. Gallagher is not unfamiliar to movie fans, for he played in many Christie Comedies when th Christie Company was organized thr years ago.

"Artistic Temperament" will be th first comedy in which Mr. Gallagh appears opposite Miss Malone, ar this clever bit of satire on our "ten peramental friends," is said to affo Mr. Gallagher an unusual opportuni to inject his personality and manne isms.

Another Supreme Comedy which w shortly be released is "Her Nov Idea," in which Teddy Sampson ar Harry Depp play the leading role These plays have become favorites.

New Honors Conferred on Alice Lake by Metro

"Alice Lake is now a Metro star in her own right," says Metro. The New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation issued an announcement to that effect immediately after the receipt of a telegram from the big studios in Hollywood, Cal., where Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, arrived last Friday in company with Marcus Loew.

"This young screen celebrity, who triumphed overnight in 'Should a Woman Tell?' will have as her first starring vehicle, a picturization of the great American play, 'Shore Acres,' by James A Herne," is the message conveyed in the Metro statement.

Ministers Use "Pollyanna" in Sermons

The following message was received by Hiram Abrams of United Artists Corporation from one of the Company's representatives in Los Angeles, Cal.

"Three different ministers here yesterday took 'Pollyanna' as their text for sermons. Ran first reel of picture in one church. Picture breaking all records at Clune's Auditorium."

Ince Title Is Changed to "The False Road"

Enid Bennett's latest Thomas H. Ince production, announced previously under the title of "The Man in the Moon," has been changed to "The False Road." It will be released through Famous Players-Lasky exchanges as an Ince-Paramount-Artcraft feature.

Ruth Roland Begins on Another Serial

Immediately upon the completion of her current Pathe serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," Ruth Roland, producer and star, started work on the second offering of Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., which has the title, "Broadway Bab."

Like "The Adventures of Ruth," "Broadway Bab" will see Miss Roland in the capacities of producer, star and supervising director.

Metro S-L Series Start Soon

Five Pictures with All-Star Cast Planned for Production in the West

ARTHUR SAWYER and Herbert Lubin announce that the first of the five S-L productions with all-star casts to be made during 1920 for distribution through the Metro system of exchanges, will be started within the next two months. The plans of S-L Pictures, Inc., are being completed rapidly with the object of getting this first picture under way at the studios of Metro Pictures Corporation in Hollywood.

Choice of the California studios as the best available place for production of the first of the S-L specials was dictated by the fact that the Metro plant on the West Coast is amply large enough for the accommodation of one or two companies in addition to those of the Metro stars already actively engaged there.

Meanwhile, the S-L officials have opened negotiations for photoplay material. They state that they have two big Broadway stage successes under consideration. Selection of one or both of these vehicles will be made after Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have consulted with Richard A. Rowland. They expect to be able to announce the titles of the two plays under consideration in a few days.

Evelyn Brent Incapacitated by Heavy Cold

Henceforth "The Northwoods Dramas," the two-reel features being made in the logging camps of Maine by Edgar Jones Productions, Inc., and distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation, will have to be enacted with a leading ingenue other than Evelyn Brent, who played opposite Edgar Jones in the first eight features, for Miss Brent is completely hors de combat for the present, as the result of a severe cold.

Benny Leonard Has His Hair Mussed Up

Last week, at the Hallmark Studio, West 38th Street, J. Gordon Cooper, directing Benny Leonard in the serial called "The Evil Eye," staged one of the big fight scenes called for by the McCardell script. For this encounter more than fifteen amateur boxers of New York are said to have been engaged. In disposing of this bunch Benny, for the first time, it is asserted, had his hair mussed in a fistic encounter.

Strong Cast Scheduled in Republic Release

"The Gift Supreme" will be released through Republic. It is a C. R. McCauley Photoplays presentation with an all-star cast. O. L. Sellers directed the picture.

The cast is now announced as including: Melbourne, MacDowell, Bernard Durning, director and player; Seena Owen, Lon Chaney, character actor who scored personal triumphs in "The Miracle Man," where he had the part of Frox; Eugenie Besserer; Scott McKee; Jack Curtis; Anna Hernandez; Harry Lonsdale; Claire McDowell, and Tully Marshall.

"The Kentucky Colonel" Nearing Completion

The film version of Opie Read's classic of the old South, "The Kentucky Colonel," is now in the final stages of production at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America. According to I. Bernstein, production manager, the New York review of the National's first 1920 production will be held about March first.

S. A. Lynch Circuit Will Play "Twelve-Ten"

As an example of the popularity of the Republic release "Twelve-Ten," it is cited that the S. A. Lynch circuit of fourteen theatres has booked the production for sixteen days of showing during January and February. This production, which was directed by Herbert Brenon and which stars Marie Doro, has been booking solidly over the country and has been one of the most satisfying sellers Republic has ever had.

Selznick Pictures Sold for South America

Lewis J. Selznick of Selznick Pictures, announces that his export department, in charge of Louis Brock has closed a contract with Max Glucksman, whereby the latter takes Selznick, Select and National Picture Theatres productions for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile. This contract, it is made known, is to run throughout 1920.

Flynn Detective Series to Have B'way Run

William J. Flynn series of two-reel motion pictures, from incidents in the career of the detective, will have a Broadway run.

This announcement was made this week from the offices of Republic Distributing Corporation, which organization is distributing the series of eight pictures. The Capitol will screen the pictures.

Stars in New American

Margarita Fisher is the star in American's new super-feature, "The Dangerous Talent," in which she has the role of a young girl facing the struggle for bread and butter alone in a big city, and matching her wits against the wiles of worldly-wise and unscrupulous tricksters.

Barriscale Vehicle Indorsed

Film Version of the Kathleen Norris Novel Secures Approval of Authoress

WITH the release of "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," Robertson-Cole is giving to the exhibitor a film, starring Bessie Barriscale, which has the indorsement of American publishers, who claim Kathleen Norris as the best fiction writer of to-day. Miss Barriscale, by her work in her 1919 productions, earned additional plaudits to her long list of successes, and in the current release, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," she is given a part which will make her a better bet for 1920, announces Robertson-Cole.

Bessie Barriscale, considered one of the best screen actresses in the film world to-day, is prophesized as a real find for 1920 by Kathleen Norris, after she saw the film version of her popular novel. Exhibitors throughout the country have taken advantage of the purchase by Robertson-Cole of Kathleen Norris' stories, and are using the prestige obtained by them in exploiting the current Barriscale release.

The scenes of this photoplay are laid in a typical small town in the northern part of New York State, and in New York City. Miss Barriscale is supported by Niles Welch, who was her leading man in "Beckoning Roads." Other parts of importance are taken by Dorcas Matthews, William Mong, Rosetta Marstini, George Hall and Boyd Irwin.

Pathe Good Will Exemplified

Many Unsought Tributes from Exhibitors Reported by the Home Offices

THE first month of the new year has been marked in the Pathe offices by the receipt of hundreds of letters of congratulation from exhibitors all over the country on the quality of Pathe productions and by pledges of continued good will and patronage. Many tributes were received, and the following from Charles F. Gorton, of the Star and Lyric theatres of Shreveport, La., so well summarizes the opinions expressed in all of them that Pathe decided to make it public.

Mr. Gorton writes:

"As you know, I have been using your features, as well as all your serials and short reels, in both of my houses for the past two years; and now that another year has started in, I feel constrained to write you of my pleasure in being able to continue our always pleasant relations; also in being able to continue to show Pathe pictures to our patrons.

"I have always found your features to be uniformly excellent, the stories consistent, clean and staged with a lavishness that compels the admiration of every one who sees them.

"Our patrons have learned that when they see the name of Pathe on an advertised production, they are going to enjoy a first class entertainment. I consider your output, especially for the past year, to be a distinct advance in the art of making pictures, and as such, compels the appreciation of a discriminating public. And that they are discriminating, is in my experience, a thoroughly well established fact."

Barrymore in Stevenson Role

Author's Collaborator Views Screen Version of "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde"

ONE of the most interested spectators during the filming of the Paramount Artcraft picture, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," was Lloyd Osbourne, step-son of Robert Louis Stevenson and collaborator with him on several stories. As the guest of John S. Robertson, the director, it was seldom that a scene of any importance was filmed that he did not occupy the chair directly behind the camera. During the intermissions in which John Barrymore was changing his make-up Mr. Osbourne told many interesting stories about Robert Louis Stevenson.

"Richard Mansfield was the greatest Jekyll and Hyde of his generation, without a doubt," declared Mr. Osbourne, "but John Barrymore has gone him one better. It is doubtful whether there shall be another such portrayal in either this generation or the next. While Mr. Mansfield was great in the part, he accomplished the effects by purely theatrical devices. Barrymore's idea of the roles is quite different. Here we have a shrewd psychological merging of personalities which not only thrills as did Mansfield's, but convinces as well.

"'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is unquestionably Barrymore's greatest contribution to the screen, and will do more to advance him as a serious artist than anything he has yet done. There is no criticism that I could make of either the adaptation of Miss Baranger or the direction by Mr. Robertson, as both did excellent work in preserving the story as it was written by Robert Louis Stevenson."

Bennett Plans Prologue for "Capt. Swift"

Chester Bennett, who will direct the Australian bush scenes of the prologue of "Capt. Swift," which Earle Williams will make in California upon his return to the West early next month, has found an ideal location near San Diego, it is stated. Mr. Bennett was also fortunate in securing certain Australian types for the open air scenes.

Simplex Notes

One of the finest examples of non-theatrical Simplex installations is that contained in the Green Briers Hotel, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., according to Mr. John Krulish of the Equipment Department at the Simplex factory.

White Sulphur Springs is one of the best known summer resorts in the South, numbering among its clientele men and women of international prominence. Green Briers Hotel, which is ideally located, is regarded as the last word in American hostelries. There is one item in which the Green Briers management has gone their Metropolitan brethren one better and that is in the matter of amusement for guests through the installation of three complete Motor Driven Simplex Projectors in a large and well equipped projection room which latter is located in the balcony of the hotel ballroom.

Here every evening are run the first-class features in a manner that outdoes many good sized city theatres. These performances are witnessed by Green Briers' guests without charge and precede the dancing which is a part of the program every night.

Mr. W. B. Hines, under whose management the motion picture program is given, is a most progressive hotel man and went thoroughly over the projection field before placing the Simplex order with the Hollis-Smith-Morton Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., who equipped the projection room at Green Briers.

The onward march of the motion picture projector carries it indeed into places that but a year ago did not dream of such invasion, but a glance at the monthly machine reports received at the Simplex factory shows that in New England the Simplex Projector in one instance stepped right over the prostrate form of John Barleycorn and ensconced itself onto the recently vacated throne from which the said Barleycorn had directed his thousands of worshippers in the famous New England community of Lynnfield, Mass.

Sauntaug Lake Inn was an automobile resort known throughout the country and Harry Mansfield, its lately deceased owner, was equally known and beloved among the thousands that have been entertained at Sauntaug where food and drink and music were always of the finest. Foreign diplomats and well-known international figures have been taken from Boston to Sauntaug, there to be entertained by host Mansfield and his crew of gloom dispellers.

One of Mr. Mansfield's most talked-of traits was that of presenting to each of the townspeople each year a Christmas gift, and in his will which was read last week provisions have been made for the receipt by every member of the town of Lynnfield of a substantial remembrance.

Mr. Mansfield is also remembered for the famous "Toodles" case, which same was a breach of promise affair that occupied the public mind some two years ago and in which the jury returned a verdict in favor of Mr. Mansfield.

Immediately following the prohibition edict which came almost simultaneously with Mansfield's death, Mrs Eggleston, a well-known Massachusetts exhibitor, purchased Sauntaug Inn and added same to her chain of theatres along the North shore, and today two Simplex Projectors installed by the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company are furnishing entertainment to the habitues of the Inn. The projection room, which is located upon the automobile shed, is thoroughly equipped to comply with Massachusetts regulations and pictures are projected from one of the windows of the historic Inn.

Besides reporting the Sauntaug installation the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company also included among the month's Simplex business the Town Hall, Middletown, Mass., Union Square theatre, Summerville, Mass., Rialto Brockton, Mass., and Strand theatre Lynn, Mass., where in each case two machines were installed.

"Slaves of Pride" is Alice Joyce's newest contribution to Vitagraph's program

"The Dangerous Talent" Called "Human" Tale

"The Dangerous Talent," the latest "Flying A" drama, is stated to be a very "human" sort of story, which the enthusiasm of Margarita Fisher vitalizes and brings close to the experience of the spectator. Harry Hilliard, playing opposite the star handles the role of a wealthy young bachelor and philanthropist with understanding and finesse. Harvey Clark that make-up wizard, is the tricky butler.

Other roles of importance are interpreted by Neil Hardin, as a good for nothing "sponge"; George Periolat as a crusty and suspicious lawyer; and Mary Talbot, as a park-bench derelict

Picture Story Will Run First in Magazine

In order to provide a big special feature production for Vitagraph, Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester are now writing a full-length novel—"The Son of Wallingford." From this novel the scenario for the picture will be made. The novel will be published in serial form in one of the leading magazines. Simultaneously with the publication of the final instalment of the serial, the big Vitagraph special production will be released.

uthor Renders "Empty Arms" High Praise

Everett McNeil, author of several ccessful historical novels, was this eek a guest of Lester Park and dward Whiteside at a private showg of their forthcoming feature, Empty Arms," written by Willard ing Bradley and starring Gail Kane, hom Director Frank Reicher surunded with a powerful cast, includg Thurston Hall and J. Herbert ank.

After the final scene, depicting, inead of the typical cinema "clinch," exquisite stained-glass window by arles Lamb, the noted ecclesiastical tist, showing Christ and the Little ildren, Mr. McNeil said:

"Divested of its Mansfieldian and selike portrayals, superb direction, gnificent 'sets,' wonderful lighting d brilliant photography, 'Empty ms,' to me, would still be an unal picture.

"Its theme—the glorification of otherhood—is the biggest in the unirse. It is life itself."

Face to Face" Feature Has Been Completed

Harry Grossman announces that the ture, "Face to Face," has just been npleted at the studio of Grossman tures, Inc., at Ithaca. This is the ond of a series of eight pictures be- made by the company with Marrite Marsh as the star. Coit Altson is seen as the leading man in port of Miss Marsh.

Universal Launches Sales Drive

Two Weeks' Concentration on "Jewel" Pictures to Open Campaign

CLOSE on the heels of Carl Laemmle's hint to "Watch Universal", comes the announcement of a concentrated sales drive, scheduled by that film company for February 1st, on Jewel pictures. It has been frankly admitted by Universal officials that their company is out after a three million dollar increase in business for 1920.

The drive is probably the first step taken to launch the campaign for extra business. For a long time, exchange managers were aware that something was in the wind and were momentarily awaiting its breaking. The $6,000 competition is over and the prizes are being distributed. A $100 lobby display exploitation competition has just been inaugurated. It was known that this activity was not without reason.

The word has just gone forth to concentrate fire with Universal's big guns—Jewel pictures—for a period of two weeks, commencing February 1st. The sales-offensive will be backed up by a simultaneous advertising and publicity campaign, also concentrating on Jewel productions, it is stated.

"Jewel" will be the only word heard around Universal offices for the two-week period. In the two weeks of the Jewel drive every department of the Universal organization will be straining its power to push these pictures. It is expected to be the biggest drive ever attempted by a film concern. The drive will include everything under the Jewel name, the most recent releases, future productions and the older pictures.

Hope Hampton as she appears in "A Modern Salome," to be released through Metro

Appearing in the Universal serial "The Moon Raiders" in support of Art Accord is this talented artist Mildred Moore

The advertising department will prepare copy exclusively "Jewel" for the drive. Every line of advertising that appears in any trade paper during this time will be exclusively "Jewel." Efforts will be made to have as many Jewel pictures featured in newspaper advertising as is possible by concentration. The publicity department will work hand in hand with the rest of the Universal organization in helping along the movement. The numerous press agents scattered about the country will pay particular attention to getting "Jewel" pictures extra prominence, while the home office will conduct a general campaign.

As this is primarily a sales drive the burden of work will fall on the salesmen. All other pictures will be pushed to the background for the fortnight, while the salesmen are concentrating their efforts on "Jewel" bookings. They have been instructed to pay no attention to any other pictures whatsoever, for the period. They are to talk and sell "Jewel" and nothing else. This does not mean that if a customer asks particularly for any one of the Universal pictures other than a Jewel, that the request will be ignored. It does mean that the salesmen will not mention any other Universal picture of their own accord. Their instructions for the drive are, "Don't do anything else, but eat, sleep, dream—and sell Jewel pictures for the two weeks commencing February 1st!"

Author Says "Tong Man" Represents Facts

Clyde C. Westover applauds the work of Sessue Hayakawa in "The Tong Man," a Robertson-Cole release. The author declares "The Tong Man" to be one of the most interesting pictures of the year.

Several weeks ago, Chinese Six Companies of San Francisco tried to hold up the showing of "The Tong Man" on the Pacific Coast, claiming that the picture misrepresented the work of the Chinese colony in this country.

As soon as Mr. Westover learned of this fight, he wired for full particulars. After reading over their grievances, he decided that the Chinese were misrepresenting the picture, and declared that the scenes filmed in "The Tong Man" were patterned after real Chinese life.

Universal Starts "The Girl in the Mirror"

Work on the latest Universal production, "The Girl in the Mirror" has just been begun. "This will be an elaborate production," says Universal. Frank Mayo will take the leading role.

Jack Ford will have charge of "The Girl in the Mirror." The cast will include such prominent players as Harry Hilliard, Claire Anderson, Elinor Fair, Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Robert Bolder, Arthur Hoyt and "Bull" Montane.

Walsh Will Occupy Long Island Studio Soon

R. A. Walsh will occupy the new Municipal Studios to be erected immediately at Long Island City. Mr. Walsh, who has been elected vice-president of the new concern, returned to New York City last week after a short trip upstate.

Under his recent contract with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in which he is to make super-features for Realart distribution, Mr. Walsh will require larger facilities than are at present available in the East. This accounts for the investment in the projected Municipal plant.

Northwest Police Aid Making of "Cyclone"

Screen entertainments have been woven 'ere now around a central character who was a member of the Canadian Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Fox Film Corporation has contributed its share. But never, it claims, in staging a production dealing with this world-famous force of men, has the research department of the Fox studios acquitted itself with the distinction just evidenced by the showing of "The Cyclone," starring Tom Mix, "the man who never fakes."

After rending much red tape, the full co-operation of the Northwest Mounted Police officials was obtained in making the picture.

Will M. Ritchey at Head of Scenario Staff

Will M. Ritchey has been promoted to the position of head of the scenario department at the Morosco Studio, where he will have entire charge of this branch of activities at the Occidental Boulevard plant for Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Ritchey has to his credit such productions as "Everywoman," directed by George Melford, and "The Fighting Chance," which Charles Maigne is directing for Paramount Artcraft at the present time.

"Rio Grande" Complete

Word has just reached the Pathe executive offices that Edwin Carewe has finished the picturization of the stage play written by Augustus Thomas, "Rio Grande." The film is now on the way to the East for delivery to Pathe.

How Dempsey Entered Films

Frank Spellman, Instrumental in Closing the Deal, Tells Interesting Story

HOW I steered the world's champion heavyweight into motion pictures might be made the title of an interesting story if Frank E. Spellman, well-known showman and promoter, cared to write it. Spellman is the man who first suggested to Jack Dempsey and his manager, Jack Kearns, the possibility of making a motion picture star of the champion.

Here is how Spellman tells the story:

"When I proposed that Jack Dempsey become a motion picture star, his manager, Jack Kearns, thought a moment about it and then replied:

"'Frank, can you imagine the champion in a love scene with a good-looking blond? The first thing we would have to contend with would be a damage suit for a few broken ribs.' I said: 'Everybody at some time in life has to make love and we might as well bring Jack inside the ring now.'

"This happened in Cleveland. Later the subject was broached to Dempsey at luncheon at the Hotel Winton. I asked Kearns what he thought of my proposition and he replied that it was O.K. Dempsey then asked what he had to do, and when told that he had to do many things, one of which was to make love to most beautiful blonds, the champion almost spilled the oysters. He protested that he was being matched up with something with which he was unfamiliar. 'I would never do as a lover. The referee would declare me out in the first round, and I don't think I could qualify as an actor,' said Jack.

"I told Dempsey he would get along all right once he got started. So with Dempsey and Kearns won over to my argument, I was immediately faced with the gigantic task of raising one million dollars in sixteen weeks.

"We did not remain long in Cleveland, but made for New York, where we received one hundred and thirty propositions for the appearance of Jack Dempsey in motion pictures. After sorting them all out there remained about twenty whose offers reached the million mark. We had about decided to come together on terms with a syndicate of five men when we received an offer from Mr. Fred. Quimby, Director of Exchanges for Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"The fighting, aggressive manner in which Quimby and Pearson appeared for their organization was inspiring. From the moment we saw them until we left them, the thing which most impressed Mr. Kearns and myself was that never, in any of their conversation, did they knock a competitor, and that was one of the closing punches which we considered in becoming affiliated with the Pathe organization."

Nazimova Said to Have Won New Zealand

The motion picture editor of the Christchurch, New Zealand, Sun in a letter to the home office of the Metro Pictures Corporation states that Nazimova has established herself as one of the most popular picture artists among the film fans of New Zealand, and this despite the fact that only two of her pictures have thus far reached the island's audience.

This contention is borne out, it is stated, by the overwhelming popularity of the Russian actress that followed her appearance in two of her best known productions, namely, "Revelation" and "Eye for Eye." The people of New Zealand were instantly captivated by Nazimova's art in the former of these, it is said.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" in Big Houses

Talbot's America Theatre, Denver, and Tally's Theatre, Los Angeles, are the leaders among the larger first-run houses of the country that reported to have booked and given immediate play-dates during the past week to J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second big W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," starring Louise Glaum.

"Sustaining the judgment of careful exhibitor buyers is the judgment of S. Barrett McCormick in Indianapolis and a dozen other exhibitors, controlling local theatres, whose policies and bookings are watched closely by many other exhibitors within their zones of influence," announces the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Schertzinger to Direct Mabel Normand Again

The success of Victor Schertzinger in directing the last four Mabel Normand pictures for Goldwyn has led Samuel Goldwyn to place Mr. Schertzinger in complete charge of all forthcoming productions for this popula Goldwyn star. Her latest picture, th record-breaking "Pinto," was writte especially for Miss Normand by Vic tor Schertzinger as well as directed b him. Her next picture is from th story by Robert Shannon published i Munsey's Magazine under the title o "The Girl With the Jazz Heart."

Universal Sales Staff "Gets Together"

The sales staff of the Universal New York Big U Exchange is just recovering from a rousing get-together meeting recently held at Murray's. The luncheon was planned by Charles Rosenweig, sales manager for Universal feature subjects, and had as guest of honor E. H. Goldstein of the executive sales staff of Universal.

A review of the film business for 1919 was discussed and the expected increase for 1920 dwelt on by the speakers, among whom were: George Uffner, W. C. Herrman, manager N. Y. Exchange; Phil Hodes; Fred E. Baer, publicity manager; Nat Goldberg; L. I. Kutinsky and J. Weinstein.

Among the other guests were: E. DeCosta, Dave Brill, J. W. N. Holden, George Hoffman, Charles Timin, C. A. Gordon, Herman Goldman, L. B. Sherwood, S. A. Rogers, M. B. Fisher, Leo Abrams, S. Abrams, Arthur Gould, Sidney Schwartz, L. Jacobs, Joe Friedman and Phil Winnick

Director Sidney Olcott Now with Goldwyn

Sidney Olcott, who started directing at the very beginning of motion pictures, has been placed under contract by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. He will be assigned immediately to the making of one of Goldwyn's big feature productions.

Mr. Olcott has enjoyed a long and successful career as a director of motion pictures, starting with the Kalem Company after he had profited by considerable stage experience in this country and Canada. "From the Manger to the Cross," a multiple-reel production that still remains a classic of its type, was made by Director Olcott with a company of players that he took to the Holy Land in order to secure the proper settings.

Hobart Henley Modifies Plans Somewhat

Modifying his original plan not to produce pictures featuring a star, Hobart Henley is in search of strong plots suitable for an all-star cast.

Mentioning his reasons for making the change of plan the other day, Mr. Henley said: "When I first started, my intention was to produce pictures which would stand on their own merit rather than the name of a star. While I have changed my plans, and probabaly gone to the other extreme, as some may be inclined to think, I have not altered them from the producing standpoint, because, in engaging an all-star cast, I shall expect each artist to play up to the standard such productions merit."

Tourneur Picture Used to Open New House

The New Richmond theatre, at Richmond, Ind., was opened with Maurice Tourneur's "The Broken Butterfly," a Robertson-Cole release.

"We played to capacity houses at the opening performance and for two days after, thanks to the Robertson-Cole Special, 'The Broken Butterfly,'" writes Mr. Mills.

Lloyd Hughes To Star for Ince

"Wheelbarrow Webster" Will Be Directed by John Wray

THOMAS H. INCE announces a series of big special productions, the first of which started this week with Lloyd Hughes, recently placed under a long-term contract, as the star. Following closely on the heels of "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," the latest Ince special, the forthcoming attraction carries added significance in that it is based on a theme and plot in striking contrast to anything hitherto made in the Ince Studios.

John Wray, formerly director of the legitimate stage, who has joined Mr. Ince as the latest addition to the directorial staff, has been assigned the direction of the first Lloyd Hughes starring special, with Henry Sharp as chief cameraman. The new special, announced under the title of "Wheelbarrow Webster," presents Lloyd Hughes in a character study well calculated to exploit his personality and ability. The story deals with an unsophisticated son of the rural west, who in quest of the supreme happiness, traverses to the paths of a Great City and there beholds and battles the whims and fallacies of life as it really exists.

Julian Josephson contributed the original script and also adapted the story to the screen. Gladys George, another of Thomas H. Ince's recent "discoveries," is cast in the leading feminine role. In support of Mr. Hughes and Miss George is a cast of ability.

Commenting on Hughes' coming role, the Thos. H. Ince report says: "The announcement of Lloyd Hughes' entrance into stardom will be welcomed by exhibitors and picture public. Recruited from the ranks of juvenile leads and promptly placed in support of Enid Bennett in several of her recent Ince productions, Mr. Hughes' inherent talents and uncommon humanness have already endeared him in the hearts of motion picture devotees. His work in the latest Thomas H. Ince special, "Below the Surface," in which he supports Hobart Bosworth as juvenile lead, further establishes him as a talented artist of the first rank.

"Mr. Ince's plans for the production of a series of super-specials are defined along the same practical lines which have won his past productions the unstinted praise of exhibitors, the public, and the newspaper critics. Details concerning the character of the pictures, and the order of their release will be forthcoming at an early date."

"The Topical Editor" in Field

Chas. Fletcher Will Be Editor; Urbach in Venture

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the formation of the Topical Humor Film Company to produce "The Topical Editor," a half-reel made up of the humor of the day compiled from many sources to which is added original comments.

Charles Leonard Fletcher, known for years on the vaudeville stage, and the originator of the idea of discussing topics of the hour and humor of the day on the screen, is at the head of the new company, and will edit the newest thing in this field.

That the new laugh-maker will be far different from any previous efforts in this line, is made clear at the outset by Mr. Fletcher, who will show a few feet of motion pictures to further enhance the feature on the screen.

Associated with Mr. Fletcher in the new company is Lawrence Alvin Urbach, who for several years was a member of the advertising staff of Exhibitors' Trade Review, and prior to that on the staff of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Definite announcement of a plan for release of the "Topical Editor" will be made shortly.

When Mr. Fletcher was a young man he became a reporter on the Boston Globe, where he remained for seven years, during two years of which time he was an expert court stenographer, and "covered" many famous trials.

He then went on the stage, playing with the great actors and actresses of the day in Shakespearean repertoire, but after six years he went into vaudeville, in which field he remained twenty-one years as a headliner, billed as a monologue comedian. He played the Keith time, and made two world tours.

In 1916, Mr. Fletcher presented as an original idea in vaudeville an act called "Silent Comments on Timely Topics." In 1917-1918 Mr. Fletcher plunged into war work with the Y. M. C. A., abandoning every other consideration. Late in 1918 he revived his screen topics, and from May, 1919, to January, 1920, he edited The Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day" for Timely Films, Inc. Mr. Fletcher resigned from Timely Films, Inc., on January 17, last, and at once formed his new company.

Mr. Urbach is one of the best known advertising men in the film game, and has a wide circle of friends in the fraternity. He was with Exhibitor's Trade Review when it was founded, and only recently severed his connection with this publication, to go into business for himself.

Dorothy Davenport Returns to Screen

After some three years or more absence from the screen, Dorothy Davenport returns via Paramount Artcraft as Leila Mortimer in "The Fighting Chance," directed by Charles Maigne and scenarized from Robert W. Chambers' notable novel by Will M. Ritchey.

Other members of the cast include Conrad Nagle, Anna Nilsson, Clarence Burton, Herbert Pryor, Ruth Helms, Bertram Grassby, Maude Wayne, Frederick Stanton and William H Brown. Miss Davenport is said to wear some attractive gowns in the production.

"Pollyanna" Making Hit in the Middle West

Adding to the impetus that "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's first United Artists' release, has received in the Middle West, comes the interesting announcement that the Euclid Theatre, the largest of the Marcus Loew theatres, in Cleveland, Ohio, has booked the production for a run of three weeks.

All through the Middle West "Pollyanna" is said to have been making a big hit. In Chicago, Toledo, Columbus and other large communities in that section, the critics, exhibitors and fans have been one hundred per cent for the picture, it is stated.

Wide Showings for "The Lone Wolf's Daughter"

Following its run at the Capitol theatre, New York, and at Tom Moore's Garden theatre, Washington, for two weeks of capacity business, and another two weeks' presentation at the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J., "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," the latest Louise Glaum production, is now playing engagements in Columbia, S. C., at the Rivoli; the Majestic, Tulsa, Okla.; the Broadway, Los Angeles, Cal.; the Palace, New Orleans, La.; Phillips Egypt, Fort Worth, Tex.; The Majestic, Columbus, O.; the Isis, Kokomo, Ind.; the Isis, Lynchburg, Va.; the Columbia, Erie, Pa.; and the Columbia, Dayton, O.

Community Centers Pick Realart Productions

The Newton Catholic Club of West Newton, Mass., is one of several nonprofit making social organizations which have contracted for Realart Pictures recently. The high standard and wholesome qualities of these films are declared to have led to their use in circles where merit and entertainment qualities are chief considerations.

In addition to the endorsement of the Newton Catholic Club, Realart Pictures have been signed by R. H. Clark, manager of the Town Hall, Weston, Mass., a Community Theatre supported by one of the wealthy men of the town.

Golden Slippers Find a Place in Serial

Violet MacMillan, leading woman with J. Robert Pauline in the new Reeve and Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," recently won the gold slippers at the Futurist Cinderella Ball, it is stated.

She is naturally eager to wear the new slippers in the serial, but, alas, the script offered no immediate opportunity. Nothing daunted and determined to show her jeweled treasures to the public, Miss MacMillan appealed personally to Arthur B. Reeve to help her. True to his statement that the author on the lot can rewrite to meet unexpected conditions, Mr. Reeve made a place in "The Mystery Mind" for the golden slippers.

Loew Interrupts Trip West

Metro Officials Stop Off At Chicago To View Print of "The Right of Way"

IN RESPONSE to a strong personal endorsement by William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, Marcus Loew interrupted his trip west with Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel to examine the first positive print of "The Right of Way" in Chicago. "The Right of Way," a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's master novel of the Canadian north woods, is Bert Lytell's newest Metro-Classic starring vehicle, just completed at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

"'The Right of Way' is one of the biggest pictures of the year. Be sure to see it," was the word to Messrs. Loew, Rowland and Engel the day before the theatre circuit owner, and the Metro president and treasurer left New York for the Pacific Coast to inspect the Metro studios. It came in a wire from Mr. Atkinson.

As Mr. Atkinson was about to ship the first positive print of "The Right of Way" east the Loew-Metro officials immediately altered the program of their 'cross-country jaunt to include a stop-off at Chicago, where, in the projection room of Metro's exchange in the Lake City they examined the print.

Jack Dillon directed the picture. June Mathis wrote the scenario. In the supporting cast are Leatrice Joy, Carmen Phillips, H. Gibson-Gowland, Virginia Caldwell, Antrim Short, Frank Currier, Henry Harmon and Larry Steers. "The Right of Way" is scheduled for early release by Metro.

Kenyon Vehicle Has Big Sets

Background of Gorgeous Character Is Said to Feature "The Harvest Moon"

"AN eye-feast of scenic splendor as a background for the most engrossing and convincing story that has yet come from the pen of Augustus Thomas" is the promise held out to picture fandom by Deitrich Beck, Inc., in "The Harvest Moon," starring Doris Kenyon, a forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, which is rapidly nearing completion at the Leah Baird Studios, Cliffside, N. J., under the direction of J. Searle Dawley.

In describing some of the details of the settings to be found in "The Harvest Moon," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation states that during last week "the stage running the entire length and breadth of the studio, was transformed into a home of wealth, seven rooms and a gorgeous ballroom with a heavily carpeted staircase, that for realism and beauty far outshines anything of its kind ever done for the screen. A striking feature of the well-appointed dining-room was the presence of two rare andirons and a bronze fern centre-dish, valued at $30,000 which for years graced the dining-room of the George J. Gould palace at Lakewood, N. J.

"The gorgeous ballroom set won admiration from the company, George A. Lessey, declaring it the finest bit of workmanship he had ever seen in picture-making, and Marie Shotwell pronouncing it worthy of an Augustine Daly."

Supporting Miss Kenyon in "The Harvest Moon" besides George Lessey and Marie Shotwell are Wilfred Lytell, Stuart Robson, Earl Schenck, Peter Lang and Grace Barton.

"The Westerners" Wins Favor in Home Town

"The Westerners," the W. W. Hodkinson release produced by Benjamin B. Hampton, is a story the main scene of which is located in Rapid City of South Dakota. It was recently given a showing in the South Dakota town that serves as the background for the tale. So successful was the picture in its appeal to the audiences of that locality, says W. W. Hodkinson, that H. W. Derthick, of the Rapid City Auditorium, has announced his intention to repeat his engagement of the production.

Leah Baird and Company Returns from South

Leah Baird and her company of players engaged in filming "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," the Louis Joseph Vance novel for W. W. Hodkinson release, returned this week from Tampa, Jacksonville and Miami, Fla., where they had been for three weeks enacting outdoor scenes. Director Perry Vekroff is said to have succeeded in securing some remarkable marine scenes, after five days of bad weather in Tampa Bay.

"Foot Follies" Released by the Y. W. C. Ass'n

"Foot Follies" is the title of the film released by the Young Women's Christian Association to illustrate the evils of the type of footgear worn by the present generation. This three-reel photoplay presents the absurdities and dangers of the pointed toe and high heel. This film is available, free of charge, to any organization or association which is trying to further the campaign for sensible shoes.

First Three Reels of Dempsey Serial Seen

A print of the first episode of the new Pathe serial, "Daredevil Jack," in which Jack Dempsey is starred, arrived at the New York office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and was screened at a special showing for officials of the concern.

After viewing the three reels which make up the initial chapter of "Daredevil Jack," the heads of the various departments expressed the keenest satisfaction.

M. P. D. A. Notes

Perry Vekroff is cutting the latest Artco production, "Cynthia of the Minute," with Leah Baird and Hugh Thompson in the leading roles.

Last week in an early episode of the Hallmark serial starring Benny Leonard, Director Wally Van started something in Wall Street. Leonard, supposedly a victim of drugs, staged a fight which attracted so much attention, that the crowds around the camera made it difficult for Mr. Van to proceed. After a traffic cop scattered the crowd to some extent and Mr. Van was able to continue his direction, he called sharply to the cameramen "shoot." A cop admitted that he learned something from the director's instructions, since the crowd evidently thought the aim was to be directed at them rather than the players.

Travers Vale, secretary of the M. P. D. A., has gone to Atlantic City to oversee the first performances of a production on the legitimate stage recently produced under his direction.

Robert G. Vignola and members of a company engaged in making his first picture for International, left for St. Augustine, Florida, a few days ago.

Director Sidney Olcott has left for California. He will spend several months in directing the first production he has handled since his return from Europe some months ago.

John S. Robertson, now cutting a Barrymore picture, will shortly direct Billie Burke in her next picture for Famous Players.

William Haddock's picture starring Hans Wagner which was made early last fall, has just been sold and negotiations are under way for eleven additional pictures of the same character.

Roy Sheldon Engaged By Capital

In line with its reorganization of executive officers and its acquirement of splendid new general offices in the Consumers' Building, the Capital Film Company announces the engagement of Roy Sheldon, director, author and actor as director of its special productions which are scheduled for the immediate future.

Mr. Sheldon, who, although young in years, is the possessor of an extended experience in the various branches of dramatic art, brings to his new post as director for the Capital Film Company a talent for directorship which has been amply shown by his work in the motion picture field during the last twelve years.

During that period Mr. Sheldon has been director for the Reliance Film Company, the Sid Alcott International Company, the Jean Gauntier Film Company, as actor, author and director.

Universal Picture Gets Change of Title

Following urgent requests from the past, Universal officials have decided to change the name of Priscilla Dean's latest production to "The Virgin of Stamboul." This picture, which is now in cutting, was formerly entitled, "The Beautiful Beggar."

Small Houses Fly Pathe Banner

Tie of This Class of Showman Breaks Booking Records

WITHIN the last fortnight, several hundred more small exhibitors have come under the wing of the Pathe Rooster, seeking assurance for a continued high class feature, short subjects and serial product. During the first four weeks of the new year, Pathe bookings and collections have touched a spot heretofore only a target for the sales activities of the great distributing organization. This record-breaking business has been brought about in no small measure by the heavy bookings recorded from exhibitors in smaller towns, who, desiring to tie up with an organization worthy of furnishing them continued high class pictures, have taken the Pathe offerings for months in advance.

In the last two weeks, a few of the more prominent small town theatres have booked considerably more than their average share of Pathe pictures, are included in the following list:

Dolores Cassinelli in "A Web of Lies," and Edwin Carewe picture through Pathe.

Loew Houses Play Cody Feature

Robertson-Cole Manager Says Exhibitors All Praise Production

GASNIER'S attraction, "The Beloved Cheater," starring Lew Cody, released as a Robertson-Cole Special, has been booked for the entire Loew's circuit of theatres in Greater New York. This attraction will have its Loew premiere at the Metropolitan theatre in Brooklyn on January 25, 27 and 27. The week of March 8 has been set aside by the Loew management for "The Beloved Cheater" in several of Loew's first-run New York houses. The Lyric theatre, Hoboken, N. J., and the New Rochelle theatre, New Rochelle, will also play "The Beloved Cheater" the week of March 8.

In signing this contract, Robertson-Cole officials were assured by the Loew management that this attraction would be widely advertised in Greater New York. An extensive billboard display in addition to one and three sheets in and about the subway together with magazine and newspaper advertising will be used in obtaining for "The Beloved Cheater" a 100 per cent run in the Loew houses, announces Robertson-Cole.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, commenting on this extended run for "The Beloved Cheater," said:

"From the favorable criticism received from all parts of the country, 'The Beloved Cheater' is, without doubt, the hit of the season. Exhibitors agree that Gasnier has produced a picture at least one year ahead of the times. For beauty and entertainment 'The Beloved Cheater' will be hard to beat.

"When we say, 'ask the exhibitor who plays them,' we are allowing the exhibitor to tell just what he thinks and how he puts over the Robertson-Cole attraction. We believe in the truth, and when exhibitors say that 'The Beloved Cheater' is a sure winner at the box office,' they know what they are talking about and are giving this advice to their co-workers in the industry. To date we have not received one adverse criticism of 'The Beloved Cheater,' and over one hundred letters have been received from exhibitors extolling the worth of this picture and declaring it to be one of the greatest attractions of the year."

"The Beloved Cheater" has played almost all of the first-run houses in the United States, and to meet the demands of the public, exhibitors have found it necessary to rebook this picture, according to reports from the Robertson-Cole offices.

Press Sees Circus Picture

Fox Corporation Gives Luncheon Followed by Screening of Mason Vehicle

MISS SHIRLEY MASON'S first screen production for Fox Film Corporation received its formal introduction to the press on Friday afternoon, January 23rd, in the East Ball Room of the Hotel Commodore in New York. Mingling with the motion picture folk were members of the Barnum & Bailey Circus and Ringling Brothers' Big Show.

The setting for the introductory showing of "Her Elephant Man" was arranged by Wells Hawks, veteran publicity man of the Fox staff. The table was set to resemble the big ring in the main tent, with one end open to allow room for a little toy circus surrounded by palms—this lending a most fitting effect to the whole picture. The floor of the hotel ballroom was covered with sawdust, and there was pink lemonade, and peanuts too. By the time the luncheon was started every diner in the big room had surrendered himself or herself to the spirit of the occasion.

Lew Graham, dean of the circus, who was master of ceremonies, introduced Harry Clemings, circus clown with the big show for the last twelve seasons; Captain George Auger, the Carniff giant, tallest man in the world, standing eight feet six inches, and last but not least, the great and only missing link, Zip, the "What is it?"

The guest of honor was Mrs. Pearl Doles Bell, author of several novels, among which is "Her Elephant Man," the book from which the Fox production was made. The luncheon ended, the ballroom was darkened and the picture, "Her Elephant Man," was flashed on the screen from the Simplex booth installed at one end of the room. From the opening title, the audience followed the screening with great attention.

Republic's List of Releases

Company Asserts that Some Unusually Good Films Are Found on Schedule

WHAT are announced as some unusually good productions are scheduled for release by the Republic Distributing Corporation during the remainder of January and throughout February.

During January, Republic is releasing the Lloyd Carleton production, "The Amazing Woman," starring Ruth Clifford. "The Blue Pearl," featuring the well-known stage star, Edith Hallor, is to be given its first showing, and last on the release chart is the "Trilby" drama. This production has an all-star cast including Clara Kimball Young, Wilton Lackaye and Chester Barnett.

In February the Edward Jose production, "Mothers of Men," will be given its initial showing. Claire Whitney, for years a screen favorite, is the star of this production. One of the famous Williamson sub-sea dramas entitled "The Girl of the Sea" is listed for release. Betty Hilburn and Chester Barnett, two well known players, are featured in this production. Edythe Sterling is starred in "The One Way Trail," which is also scheduled for release in February.

The first of the two-reel screen dramas telling of the experience of ex-chief William J. Flynn, as head of the United States Secret Service, is to be given a release in February. These short detective dramas feature Herbert Rawlinson. Jackie Saunders is the star of the production, "Dad's Girl," which will be released in February.

Lasky Studio Works Steadily

Program of Prospective Productions Gives Promise of Continued Activity

THE Famous Players-Lasky announces that there is to be no abatement of its activities at the Lasky studio for some time to come. Following the completion of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," on which he is now working, Bryant Washburn will begin "The Sins of St. Anthony," a Saturday Evening Post story, for which Elmer Harris is writing the scenario. James Cruze will direct "Meanwhile, 'Mrs. Temple's Telegram' is rounding out in splendid shape and will, it is believed, offer an unusual amount of good humored complications and excellent opportunities for the star," says Famous Players.

Wallace Reid has completed his new Paramount-Artcraft picture "The Dancin' Fool" under Sam Wood's direction, and will very shortly begin work with the same director in the farce comedy, "Sick-Abed," the scenario for which is by Clara G. Kennedy. Bebe Daniels will again appear as leading woman for the star.

George Melford has taken his producing company, headed by Roscoe Arbuckle, the star, to a distant location in the Sierras for exterior scenes of "The Round-Up." The company will secure important cattle-ranch scenes and fight situations in which Apache Indians and cow punchers, as well as U. S. Cavalry are concerned. Tom Forman is author of the scenario and also plays an important role. The much heralded production of the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Held by the Enemy," under the direction of Donald Crisp, will be started next Monday at the Lasky Studio. Among those who will appear in the leading parts are Jack Holt, Wanda Hawley, Lewis Stone, Agnes Ayres, Hobart Cain and Walter Hiers.

William DeMille is in the midst of his production, "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan and a strong cast interpreting the roles. Thomas Heffron has finished "Thou Art the Man!" with Robert Warwick as the star, and will shortly begin work, with the same star on another picture for Paramount-Artcraft entitled, "The City of Masks."

Goldwyn Star in "Trimmed with Red" Is Supported by Able Screen Actors

GOLDWYN'S first production in the East with Madge Kennedy as the star in "Trimmed With Red," a story of New York society life. Hugo Ballin is directing the production, which includes a cast of distinguished players.

Among the women in the cast are: Helen Greene, as Rosamond Mrs. David Landau, as Aunt Carmen; Nellie Beaumont, as Mrs. Finnessy; Ada Shartle, as Miss Driggs, and Dorothy Millette, as Edna. Madge Kennedy's new leading man is Joseph Striker, who has been in motion pictures for the last two years and played the leading role in the stage production of "Turn to the Right."

E. J. Radcliffe plays Mirlin, wealthy society man. Mr. Radcliff won considerable distinction as a actor when he played the part o Theodore Roosevelt, in the scree biography of the great American. Sidney Vaunier is a young Englishma of French descent to whom has bee assigned the important role of Pro Syle, the leader of the radicals wh attempts to win New York society t his cause as well as win the hand o Emily, played by Madge Kenned Others in the cast are Roy Applegat as Alfonzo; Edward Barnard as E stein; George DuBois as Tony, an J. Some idea of the quaintness of the John Fox's famous story, "The Little Shepherd o Kingdom Come" may be gained from inspection of this cut. Jack Pickford is th star. The production is for release by Goldwyn

Mary Miles Minter as she appears in her first Realart picture, "Anne of Green Gables," which, by the way, is scoring a great success wherever shown

American Film Purchases Three New Novels

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., who recently returned to the Chicago executive offices from the "Flying A" studios in Santa Barbara ,announces the purchase of three new novels for future screen adaptation: "The Blue Moon," by David Anderson; "The House of Toys," by Henry R. Miller, published by Bobbs-Merrill Company, and "Their Mutual Child," by P. G. Wodehouse, published by Boni & Liveright.

Bessie Love to Have Her Own Company

A company is being formed for the making of productions for Bessie Love by the same parties who organized the Fred Stone company almost a year ago. Miss Love recently returned to Los Angeles after a vacation of more than a month in the east, and it is stated the work of filming the first subject will shortly be started. Joseph de Grasse, responsible for a number of the Dorothy Phillips successes, including "Hell Morgan's Girl," and who recently has directed Louise Glaum, Edith Storey and Sussue Hayakawa, has been placed under contract by this organization, as has also Mrs. de Grasse, whose screen name is Ida May Parks. The latter will have charge of the preparation of scenarios for the Bessie Love productions.

"Desert Gold" Continues to Get Big Business

Reports from two exhibitors speak in high terms of the successful showing that Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," has had at their theatres last week. W. S. McLaren, proprietor of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Mich., reports record business at his house during the picture's run. Lester E. Matt, managing director of the Strand theatre, Flint, Mich., also announces heavy business during the feature's four-day engagement at his theatre.

"Put Native Stories on Screen"

Realart President Believes National Campaign Will Benefit

MORRIS KOHN, President of Realart Pictures Corporation, has come out of the picturization of national literature as the most effective way in which the industry can make permanent the work of the Americanization campaign launched in New York City last week by Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Kohn believes that the decision of the industry to consecrate the screen to patriotic purposes on Lincoln's Birthday points the way to the more extensive work possible of accomplishment by producers who will depict the national character as portrayed in universally loved American stories.

Mr. Kohn declared that he has become definitely aware of the genuine appeal and patriotic value of this type of picture from the reports of exhibitors throughout the nation who are in a position to judge the response of representative audiences.

"There is a real opportunity for the producers of the United States," says Mr. Kohn, "to dedicate motion pictures to the higest type of patriotic and educational work without converting them into an uninteresting medium of mere propaganda. To present a series of moral principles, however worthy, to write national statutes across the silver sheet or to wave the flag in blatant fashion is to fail utterly in making a permanent impression on the average mind. This type of educational work gets us nowhere, for not only is it unconvincing and insincere, but it definitely lowers the status of a medium which can put across its message by more effective, more artistic, more entertaining and more human methods.

"In the libraries of the nation is a wealth of national literature which waits for adaptation to the screen. These books and plays, known and loved, hold the most convincing arguments for America, and portray in the most easily understood manner the true American character. This is the message which we Americans should be trying to get across to thousands of people among us, but not yet of us. Propaganda can never adequately convey this message as can the stories of America, lived and written by American authors, and permanently established as national classics. 'The Birth of a Nation' was such a picture. So was the 'Crisis,' and there are others, such as 'Evangeline' which might be mentioned.

"Realart is fortunate in having among its releases 'Soldiers of Fortune,' the typically American story by Richard Harding Davis, which was adapted to the screen so admirably by Allan Dwan.

"There are any number of similar novels and plays," concludes Mr. Kohn. "Which would become eloquent appeals on the screen. There is no comparing their value as patriotic education with obvious propaganda. The pictured story of the American character is the greatest moral lesson, and the more entertaining the art, the greater will be the impression."

Increased Runs Rule on Equity

"Eyes of Youth" Given Double Length Bookings in Many Towns

AN extraordinary demonstration of the readiness of the average exhibitor to play a feature for a longer period than is his usual wont—is seen in the vogue of Equity Pictures' first release "Eyes of Youth" in Philadelphia and surrounding cities.

As it is the custom to play a feature in one house on Market street, the Stanley Company has already booked the Young feature in the Palace to follow its big week at the Stanley.

Other week stands in the heart of the city, are Alleghany Theatre, Colonial Theatre, Great Northern Theatre, Locust Theatre and Majestic Theatre. At the last three named houses, the usual run of a film is three days, which policy also obtains at the Colonial, Germantown, where "Eyes of Youth" is to play an entire week.

Below follows a table compiled by the Equity Pictures Corporation of Philadelphia, showing the houses in that city and suburbs, at which "Eyes of Youth" is being given extended bookings, the extra days and the usual run policies of the various houses:

Theatre	City	Usual run	Run of "Eyes of Youth"
Colonial	Philadelphia	3 days	1 week
Great Northern	Philadelphia	3 days	1 week
Locust	Philadelphia	3 days	1 week
Majestic	Philadelphia	3 days	1 week
Model	Philadelphia	1 day	3 days
Liberty	Philadelphia	1 day	2 days
Fairmount	Philadelphia	1 day	2 days
Orpheum	Bethlehem	1 day	2 days
Lawrence	So. Bethlehem	1 day	2 days
Valentine	Mt. Carmel	1 day	2 days
Hippodrome	York, Pa.	3 days	1 week
Third Street	Easton, Pa.	3 days	1 week
Hamilton	Lancaster	3 days	1 week
Hippodrome	Allentown	3 days	1 week
Colonial	Reading	3 days	1 week
Washburn	Chester	2 days	1 week

These details from one territory only, comprising Eastern Pennsylvania. This condition obtains throughout the entire country with "Eyes of Youth," and plainly illustrates the susceptibility of the average exhibitor to policy change if the attraction justifies.

Worthington to Direct for Beck

William Worthington, organizer of the Haworth Company, and who has served as director of the first twelve Sessue Hayakawa productions since the organization of this unit, has given up the direction of the Japanese star for a time, and left for New York to direct the filming of an Arthur F. Beck production. Mr. Worthington retains his interest in the Haworth Company of which organization he is President.

Marshall Neilan and his troupe just before they climbed into the Western Rockies for exteriors of "The River's End"

Neilan Picture in a Tie-Up

Heavy Advertising for Novel Expected to Aid Exhibitor to Exploit Picture

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial independent production, "The River's End," is an adaptation of a novel widely advertised during the past two months. The book, by James Oliver Curwood, is now stated to be receiving a record exploitation in newspapers and magazines throughout the country, and the film will be released when the crest of this publicity has been reached, according to reports.

The Marshall Neilan publicity department has effected a tie-up with the publishers whereby the latter will include in all advertising copy concerning the book, a prominent mention of Mr. Neilan's film. In addition to this an initial order of 100,000 book marks is now in work. These book marks present a cut of Mr. Neilan with an advertisement on the photoplay and will be included in the daily shipments of different books issued by the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation. These book-marks will also be supplied gratis to exhibitors, who can imprint them on the back and use them as souvenirs or in connection with local book dealers, public libraries, etc.

Recent advertising placed by the publishers include full page advertisements in seventeen of the largest newspapers in the country, quarter page advertisements in a half dozen important papers and full page advertisements in the largest national magazines including Good Housekeeping, Cosmopolitan, Harper's Bazar, Hearst's, and the Red Book, it is stated.

It was pointed out by the Neilan publicity department that this tie-up is more effective than the usual book-film arrangement in that it is right up to the minute and comes at a time when the book and the film attain their greatest publicity. "The book is not a dead issue which has long since been forgotten," said the Neilan publicity man, "but is before the public now and at this minute is being read in thousands of homes."

Completing "The White Moll"

This Will Serve as the First Feature Vehicle for Serial Star, Pearl White

WILLIAM FOX announces that Pearl White's first starring vehicle for the Fox Corporation will be presented to the public on the February schedule. The title of the production is "The White Moll."

Work on the filming of "The White Moll" is about completed. There remain but a few special scenes which require particularly elaborate settings. These finished, the picture will be ready for titling. Meanwhile Miss White, with Director Millards and her supporting cast, are concentrating every effort toward making this first picture a big success, it is stated.

This is a Packard story for which E. Lloyd Sheldon constructed the scenario. It is said to be a gripping story, blending the finer human instincts with the brutal qualities dominant among the lower and criminal classes. Mr. Sheldon has given this story many personal touches while retaining all the power and force of the author's original. The filming has magnified the whole.

In the cast supporting Miss White are Richard C. Travers as leading man, William Harvey, Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport and Jack Baston; and the director uses a few hundred extra people for "atmosphere" in several of the large scenes, both interior and exterior, according to the Fox report.

"The White Moll" when completed will be given an auspicious introduction to the trade and has already been contracted for by progressive exhibitors even before the film is completed, it is stated.

Belgian Star to Make Debut

Flying A's Release, "The Honey Bee," Discussed in Detail by Hutchinson

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, President of the American Film Company, had just reached Chicago headquarters after several weeks spent at the American's Santa Barbara studios, where he has been advising in the production of the latest "Flying A" drama, "The Honey Bee," in which the Belgian prima donna, Mme. Marguerita Sylva, makes her initial appearance upon the American screen.

"'The Honey Bee,'" explains Mr. Hutchinson, "is based upon some of the most fascinating facts in natural history, the never-ending toil of the unsexed females—the workers of the honey bee family; the fact that they work and work until they die, and if, for any reason, there isn't enough, become demoralized, taste the honey, get honey-drunk, and take to robbing the hives. In his novel," continued Mr. Hutchinson, "Samuel Merwin has developed a most interesting analogy, using this sexless little creature as typical of woman, the worker,—the woman who is forced by circumstances to be self-supporting and, as the title explains, is 'cheated out of love and home and babies.'

"Speaking as to titles, we are putting this picture through with a minimum of reading matter. It is going to be a picture interspersed with a few necessary titles, probably less than a hundred for six reels, and not a lot of titles held together by mediocre acting. Considering the fact that the grip of the story is in the subtle mental and emotional metamorphosis of the woman, who yields her cramping conventions for a more human elbowing with humanity—considering the nature of the drama, the paucity of titles is a tribute to Mme. Sylva's histrionic ability."

Selznick Studio Is Active

Three Features Are Reported to Be Under Production at Eastern Studio

A REPORT from the Selznick Fort Lee and Bronx studios states that some excellent interior scenes are being made for three of the Selznick productions now in the making of the studios.

"The Woman Game," said to be a powerful drama, and which was written for Elaine Hammerstein by Leighton Osmun and Frank Dazey, is nearing completion under the direction of Wm. P. S. Earle. Miss Hammerstein is said to be doing excellent work in this picture. The production abounds with a variety of sets of more than usual magnificence. This picture bids fair, the report says, to be the best Miss Hammerstein has made under the Selznick banner.

"Glorious Youth" by John Lynch, is the sixth starring subject of Olive Thomas. The opening scenes of the picture were made in New Orleans, and the first reel is concerned almost entirely with the lovely, fast vanishing, old fashioned southern life, actually made in the country where the story is laid. Alan Crosland is directing "Glorious Youth," assisted by William J. Scully.

In the Selznick studio, Sophie Irene Loeb's big melodrama, "The Woman God Sent," is taking form under the direction of Larry Trimble, who adapted the story to the screen. Trimble has wonderful material to work with, and the all-star cast of players headed by Zena Keefe and Joe King, includes John Wade, a character actor, and many known to screen folk.

Strong Cast in New American

"Valley of Tomorrow" Has William Russell, Mary Thurman and Others Prominent

THE American's new photonovel by Stephen Fox, "The Valley of Tomorrow," screened at Lake Tahoe in the Sierra Nevadas, called for a cast of unusual ability. The story is claimed to be conspicuous for vigorous action, one tense and absorbing event leading into another still more exciting. William Russell, in the leading role, is well endowed with the mental and physical equipment to fill the bill.

Mary Thurman, to whom the name the Venus of the Films" clings, is Russell's leading woman in the role of a young Italian girl, devoted to her unworthy brother and in love with his nemy. Histrionic ability of the melodramatic order was required and Mary Thurman handles the part with a re-erve force and splendid spirit.

The versatile Harvey Clark makes he venerable Long John realistic. Fred M. Malatesta, an Italian by birth, rings to his part a natural subtlety nd savoir faire which makes the diffi-ult role of the guilty Italian singer nd moral outlaw convincing.

Pauline Curley, a real prodigy of the stage, in the story is the pretty little victim of the false Italian's love. She made her debut at three, and began her stage career in dead earnest at the age of eight, playing in stock companies and vaudeville and, the past three years, in pictures.

Frank Brownlee, the character actor, in the role of the dastardly "Fang" lives up to the name, and does work that stamps him as a master of make-up and character delineation. Also included in the cast are such well-known players as Frank Clark, Lewis King, a young brother of the director, Henry King, and Jeffrey Sloan.

"Pepe" Lederer is the happy possessor of an Irish Mail from Auntie Marion Davies. Miss Davies explains that this was Pepe's own choice, and is a perfectly good wagon with motor and everything, in which Miss Pepe may drive up and down Riverside to her heart's content, stopping only to crank up the motor.

New Producing Unit Formed

The Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., to Picturize Best Stories of Novelist

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week of the formation of the Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., as a ibraltar Pictures unit to produce a eries of fifteen feature picture dramas ased on the works of Louis Tracy, ovelist and publicist, the first of which, "The Bartlett Mystery," will be ut in work shortly at the Leah Baird tudios, Cliffside, N. J.

The officers of the new corporation, Arthur F. Beck, president, and C. C. Burr, secretary and treasurer, have ontracted with Mr. Tracy for the picture rights to his best works. These include, in addition to "The Bartlett Mystery," "His Unknown Wife," "Diana of the Moorland," "Cynthia's Chauffeur," "The Wheel of Fortune," "The Red Year," "The Silent Barrier," "The Terms of Surrender," "Flower of the Gorse," "The Revelers," "The Postmaster's Daughter," "The Message," "The Captain of the Kansas," and "Carl Krier."

"The Bartlett Mystery" has been selected for the first picture of the series because it is unusually adaptable, it is said, to effective picturization. It is said to be a story of adventurous men, and one replete with stirring incidents and alive with virile action quite characteristic of Mr. Tracy's writings.

Universal's March 8 Release

Popular Star, Strong Cast, Good Story and Able Direction Said to Be Found

A CAREFUL combination of popular star, strong cast, clever story and good direction are said to feature the Universal production, "The Forged Bride" which is announced for release on March 8, and in which Mary MacLaren plays the stellar role.

"The Forged Bride" is from the story, "The Sins of the Father," from the pen of J. G. Hawks, who has supplied William S. Hart with many of his scenarios. It deals with an unusually striking problem of life. In it, Mary MacLaren takes the part of a convict's daughter.

"The Forged Bride" is the story of the daughter of a convict who marries the son of the judge who has convicted her parent. The judge on discovering the status of his new daughter-in-law determines to keep her relationship to the convicted man a secret. However, a blackmailer threatens exposure but is circumvented by the father who escapes from prison and by a ruse establishes evidence that the judge is really the father of the girl and not he.

Tense situations are dramatically brought out under the able direction of Douglas Gerrard, it is asserted.

Dagmar Godowsky, Thomas Jefferson, son of the well known dramatic star of other days, Joseph Jefferson; Harold Miller, Barney Sherry and Frances Raymond complete the excellent cast.

The production, according to the reviewers who have been favored with an early review, is one of the most interesting in which Miss MacLaren has yet appeared. Besides starring in "Bread," "Shoes" and several earlier pictures, she took the leading role in "The Petal on the Current" and "Rouge and Riches," which has just been released.

New Rex Beach Production

In Statement Issued on the New Picture Prediction Is Made of Sure Hit

WITH many of the new Goldwyn directors present, Rex Beach's latest picture, "The Silver Horde," was screened at a private showing this week, and the production received the marked approval of those present.

Frank Lloyd directed the production and staged the mob scenes, the fight scenes, and the great outdoor action with all the skill that won him his high reputation. "'The Silver Horde' bristles with rapid-fire action and dynamic climaxes," says Goldwyn Pictures. The book from which the photoplay is derived is one of the most popular of Rex Beach novels. The Goldwyn exploitation staff calls it a "red-blooded, he-man, two-fisted, straight-?rom-the shoulder romance of the great North."

In selecting the cast of players Rex Beach scored again. Myrtle Stedman and Betty Blythe are the two leading women of "The Silver Horde." As Emerson, Curtis Cooksey is described as a dominant and forceful figure throughout. Frederick Stanton is Big George Bolt, and together these two men and Cherry Malotte fight the forces of cunning and greed which seek complete control of the salmon fisheries of Alaska.

Remarkable shots of Alaskan scenes, of the gleaming salmon hording into the Kalvik river to spawn, and of the great wharf riot on the docks of Seattle add to the picture quality of "The Silver Horde," it is stated.

In concluding its report on this new production, the Goldwyn Pictures assert:

"Five stories are woven into one great drama of the screen in "The Silver Horde." As far as the exhibitor is concerned, it would be enough to say that it is just as good as "The Girl from Outside." Reports from the Goldwyn officials and the story itself indicate that this is a greater picture, possibly Rex Beach's greatest screen drama to date."

Goldwyn Sales Manager at Kansas City Meeting

Felix F. Feist, vice-president and manager of sales of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, now on a tour of the country, reached Kansas City Tuesday morning, January 13. Awaiting Mr. Feist's arrival at the Kansas City office were, according to Goldwyn, E. S. Wilhoit, manager of the Landers theatre, Springfield, Mo.; H. G. Ramsey, manager of the Royal theatre, Eldorado, and R. H. Holmes, manager of the Royal theatre, Emporia. Mr. Feist spent a large part of the day with these exhibitors and others who called at the Goldwyn exchange.

A meeting of the salesmen was held January 14. Mr. Feist complimented Mr. Bloch and his associates on what had been accomplished and received assurances that a still more aggressive campaign will be carried on during 1920.

Many More Contracts for "Desert Gold"

Another group of first-run exhibitors is reported by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to have signed contracts for Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold" within the past few days. These big first runs include Frank L. Newman, controlling the Newman, Royal and Regent theatres in Kansas City, Mo., as well as a big first run house in Milwaukee; G. A. Bush, controlling the Superba and a chain of subsidiary houses in San Diego, Cal.; James Beatty for his first-run house in San Jose, and C. W. Midgley, with the American in Oakland, Cal.

Ass't Directors Election

The annual election of officers of the Assistant Directors Association was held on the evening of January 16, with the following being elected to guide the destinies of this organization through the ensuing year:

President, George Webster; vice-presidents, H. Schenk, Wm. Crinley; treasurer, Scott R. Beal; secretary, Fred Tyler; sergt. at arms, C. H. Mitchell; chairman of board, W. Dyer.

Good Cast Supports Duncan

Production of New Vitagraph Serial Is Reported to Be Well on the Way

VITAGRAPH has assembled an unusually strong supporting cast for William Duncan, who now has his new Vitagraph serial by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and his new collaborator, Cleveland Moffett, well under way. Mr. Duncan is thoroughly confident that his new serial will surpass any of his former efforts.

Edith Johnson, who has appeared as the heroine in many Vitagraph serials, is again Mr. Duncan's leading lady. Virginia Nightingale, a graduate of Vitagraph Comedies, appears as the feminine "heavy," while Jack Richardson, formerly "heavy" for J. Warren Kerrington and W. S. Hart, occupies the same position with Mr. Duncan, succeeding Joe Ryan, who is being starred with Jean Paige in his own serial.

Antonio Moreno, another of the Vitagraph serial stars, is making preparations to undertake the difficult scenes in the fifteenth and final chapter of "The Invisible Hand," which is said to have a thrilling climax. In the twelfth and thirteenth episodes some unusual photographic results were obtained in subterranean scenes, during which Mr. Moreno and Pauline Curley, his leading lady, spent considerable time in water up to their necks. New concrete underground tunnels were constructed expressly for these scenes at the Hollywood Studio.

Current Universal Releases

List Is Topped by "Rouge and Riches"; Good Short-Subject Reels Are Included

"ROUGE and Riches" tops the Universal release program for the week of February 9th as a special attraction. It is a five-reel production, featuring Mary MacLaren under the direction of Harry Franklin. It is from the story "Myself, Becky," by W. Carey Wonderly, which originally appeared in Live Stories Magazine.

"Rouge and Riches" is a satire on love and gives intimate views of back stage life, that space behind the footlights which is always a source of mystery and interest to the uninitiated. A good supporting cast is provided, including: Marguerite Snow, Wallace MacDonald, Robert Walker, Lloyd Whitlock, Syn de Conde, Alberta Lee, Dorothy Abril, Harry Dunkinson and Helen Sullivan.

This week is an unusual one for the serials, as it marks the final episode of one and the premiere of another. "The Great Radium Mystery" is solved in the eighteenth and last episode entitled "Liquid Flames." "Doomed," the seventh installment of "The Lion Man," featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin is said to be unusually gripping. It is released this week.

Elmo Lincoln makes his opening appearance in the new Universal serial, "Elmo the Fearless," the episode being entitled "The Wreck of the Santiam." Universal officials claim that this surpasses all his previous serial efforts.

Mrs. Joe Martin is implicated in another Universal release, this time being aided and abetted by one Jimmie Adams in a two-reel draught, "Over the Transom." Broadway never retires without a Lyons and Moran puncture. This time Eddie and Lee gave us a one reel blow-out of "Non-Skid Love." "Kaintuck's Ward" is the title of the western picture offering of the week. Bob Burns and Peggy O'Dare appear.

Realarts Tie Up City's First Run Houses

Four Realart Pictures were run in six-day competition last week by four of the principal theatres of Providence, R. I.

"We believe this is the first time in the history of the motion picture business that one concern's products have held possession for a week of the leading houses of a city as large as Providence," says J. S. Woody, Realart's general manager.

"It is absolutely unprecedented in my whole experience as a salesman," declares J. C. Ragland, general sales manager for Realart.

"Providence is a city of about 300,000 population. It has, as I recall the situation now, four houses which are regarded as first-run. Realart Pictures were shown last week in three of these and another Realart Picture was shown second run at the same time.

Thurston Hall to Play for Gerald Bacon

Following his week's engagement out of New York as star of Oliver Morosco's "Civilian Clothes," the leading role of which he created in the New York production, Thurston Hall, prominent on both stage and screen as star and leading man, will go under the management of Gerald F. Bacon, producer for both stage and screen.

Mr. Bacon announces that he has an inviting picture proposition for Mr. Hall, details of which will be given following the termination of his contract with Oliver Morosco this week. According to Mr. Bacon's plans for Hall, he will devote the next few months to picture work, after which he will go into rehearsal for a stage production.

Big Promises Made for Blackston Production

If the enthusiastic predictions of those who have been permitted to view the first private showing in the executive headquarters of Pathe of the latest J. Stuart Blackton production come at all close to being fulfilled it is certain that the director has achieved something out of the ordinary in the creation of "Respectable by Proxy."

It is described as a fine blending of comedy and drama.

Commodore Blackton has chosen a well balanced cast to support his young leads, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon. Eulalie Jensen, Margaret Barry, William R. Dunn, Bessie Stinson and Morgan Thorpe have important parts.

Four Pathe Features on List for February

With four big special productions ready for release it is expected that February will be a banner month for Pathe. Crauford Kent will be seen in "Other Men's Shoes", an Edgar Lewis production; June Caprice appears in "In Walked Mary"; Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are the stars of "Respectable by Proxy", a J. Stuart Blackton Production; and Frank Keenan will be seen in "Smouldering Embers."

"Shore Acres," James A. Herne's famous play is to be made into a picture by Metro. Lois Zellner made the adaptation

Employees Considered in Move of Morton Plant

Expansion of the Robert Morton plant of the American Photoplayer Company at Van Nuys, California, which caused the employment of a large number of men, has caused the company to make necessary arrangements for the comfort of their employes who found it impossible to find living conditions in Van Nuys.

President H. J. Werner of the American Company was in Los Angeles and Van Nuys this week, where he let the contract for the construction of forty residences. These are to be built immediately, and are to be used exclusively by the employes of the organ company.

More Exhibitors Endorse the Selznick Plan

Followng close on the heels of the announcement that the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, the Chicago Circuits and Northwest Exhibitors had endorsed National Picture Theatres, Inc., comes the report that additional exhibitors of the Northwest are endorsing the plan. The success of the organization is assured in the opinion of Lewis J. Selznick, its head. The National organization now has the approval of circuits which have members in hundreds of the largest and most important towns.

Continuity of "Half an Hour" of High Order

Clara Beranger has completed the scenario for Barrie's "Half an Hour," which is to be Dorothy Dalton's first vehicle under her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky. A feature of the continuity is the fact that the entire action is supposed to embrace only half an hour's time. The suspense is said to be excellently sustained to the close.

Charles Ray Forms Own Company

CHARLES RAY, the popular screen star, has formed his own company, to be known as the Charles Ray Productions, Inc. First National will distribute the products of the new company.

The announcement that Mr. Ray will now head his own concern came from Los Angeles this week, and follows the news of the star's affiliation with the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. Mr. Kane, whose own producing company was first announced last week, will direct the New York activities and productions of the Star.

The Charles Ray Productions has already received its charter and work will begin immediately after the completion of Mr. Ray's final picture for Thomas H. Ince, now in course of filming. The tie-up with First National was consummated a year ago.

In the personnel of the newly organized company are business men, well known in the motion picture world. Mr. Charles T. Ray, father of the star, is president. Mr. Richard Willis is first vice-president and general manager. Mr. Albert A. Kidder, Jr., a prominent Los Angeles business man, is secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Charles Ray and Mr. Gus Inglis are directors. The last named is also second vice-president of the corporation.

Willis and Inglis Are Associated with the Star in Venture

The headquarters of the new company will be on Fleming Street, East Hollywood, where the studios are also located. Extensive alterations are under way, and when the home of the Charles Ray Productions is completed, it is expected to be one of the finest outfits of any star-producer in the Western territory.

The rights to several popular plays and novels have been secured, especial thought being directed toward their fitness for the unique personality which Mr. Ray has made immortal for the screen. Not only have the star's sponsors been particular in the choice of vehicles to suit his needs, but care has been exercised in supplying screen material with abundant story value. It is said that Mr. Ray will start out with an unusual equipment of already famous vehicles.

Mr. Ray has been conceded by many producers, exhibitors and members of the motion picture press, to be the logical contender for box-office supremacy during the coming year. His growth has been phenomenal and it is said by students of the situation that the field was never so good for the star who brings to the screen a human touch that is unfailing in its affectiveness.

Exhibitors who have kept their eye on Mr. Ray as the consistent money-winner of the day, are declaring their satisfaction that the star has affiliated himself with such a responsible and capable film executive as Arthur S. Kane.

Under the direction of Mr. Kane, it is expected that the latent possibilities of the star as a national contender for the foremost screen position, will receive their utmost expression. The affiliation of Arthur S. Kane and the newly organized Charles Ray Productions, is looked upon as a combination of unlimited possibilities, and is regarded by exhibitors as one of the most promising tie-ups of recent times.

With distribution in the hands of the First National organization, the combination of first-class agencies in back of the Ray productions will insure these pictures the best of supervision on all counts.

Report on Chicago Convention

IN its report on the production program approved by the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in their convention at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, last week, the publicity department of that organization issues the following statement:

"Mr. Lasky outlined a most ambitious program of production of great pictures, which will insure to the exhibitor the pick of the finest material available in literature and the drama. He said that arrangements have been completed with a number of very successful writers, and through theatre organizations, by which the producing department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will receive the benefit of their entire output. From the Frohman interests, the output of J. M. Barrie is assured for the screen through Famous Players-Lasky, George Broadhurst's output will also reach the masses by the same channel, as well as the work of John D. Williams, Oliver Morosco productions, and others of similar calibre. Famous Players has the first call on all of these for their works.

"Speaking of directors, Mr. Lasky said that the services of 'the big five' are assured for a number of years. These are Cecil B. DeMille, George Fitzmaurice, William De Mille, George Melford and William D. Taylor. This does not include Hugh Ford, whose future work in London can well be classed with that of the others. The 'big five' will probably make twenty special productions in the year.

"Mr. Lasky said that the production department has also developed the idea of a great stock company which will enable the producers to put on their productions with an all-star cast. The company includes men and women of the calibre and popularity of Jack Holt, Theodore Roberts, Wanda Hawley and many others now playing in support of the stars.

Production Program and Exploitation Methods Are Outlined

"Inauguration of a completely new plan of exploitation and distribution of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures was brought about by the convention. The plan is, in a nutshell, to give the exhibitor of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures the maximum of financial returns on every picture of that brand that he shows. Each picture will stand absolutely and solely on its own merits, without relationship to any other picture. Each picture will make its own record for the exhibitor and for the producer.

"The motion picture going public will be the sole judges of the compensation to be had by the exhibitor and the producer. To the exhibitor it means that he will get the full pressure of the exploitation and sales department and the advertising and publicity department back of every picture he shows. This force will be concentrated on the individual picture instead of being scattered among the list.

"The adoption of this plan will bring about the complete reorganization of the exploitation and sales departments, to meet the new conditions. The first step in the reorganization will be to double the number of the existing force. Each exchange headquarters will have asigned to its territory one or more trained exploitation men whose service will be given direct to the exhibitor. A zoning system will be worked out as quickly as it can be done with intelligent consideration of all local conditions and requirements.

"It was announced during the convention that the finance committee and the executives of the corporation are completing a profit-sharing program, the details of which will be announced within a short time."

Alice Joyce in "Dollars and the Woman"

"Dollars and the Woman" has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph as Alice Joyce's next Vitagraph special production following "The Sporting Duchess," recently completed and now awaiting release. It is an adaptation from the original story by Albert Payton Terhune, with scenario by Lucien Hubbard. George Terwilliger, who directed Miss Joyce in "Slaves of Pride" and "The Sporting Duchess" will also direct her new feature. The full cast has not been selected as yet. Robert Gordon and Crawford Kent will play the male leads. Jessie Stevens will also have an important role.

Irwin Praises Picturization of Story

Wallace Irwin, author of "The Blooming Angel," the story recently completed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation with Madge Kennedy as the star, has written a letter to Vice-President Abraham Lehr, at the Goldwyn Culver City Studios, praising the picturization of his story in the highest terms.

The State Right Field

State Rights Sales on "The Lost City"

Word comes from Warner Brothers, who control the distribution rights of Selig's animal serial, "The Lost City", that Joe Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corp., has secured the rights for Illinois and Indiana.

In addition to this territory, the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., has seven states in the South, while the Standard Film Service Co., of Cleveland, has Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky. The Hatch Film Company has seven Eastern states, and the Arrow Film Corp. of Boston, controls the New England distribution rights, which make twenty-six states that have already been disposed of.

Pioneer to Produce "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

One of the features of the Pioneer list of attractions for the first half of the coming year will be a production of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. A large company is now being assembled by Charles J. Hayden, who will have charge of the direction of the picture.

The version which has been prepared by Mr. Hayden varies in several respects from the novel as written by Robert Louis Stevenson, making the story a combination of the psychological and dramatic rather than the uncanny and melodramatic.

Mr. Sheldon Lewis is making a careful study of the two roles of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde as they were played by the late Richard Mansfield, and in many respects his impersonation of the dual role will follow that of the great tragedian's conception of the part.

"The Third Generation" Is Winning Success

After an extended run in the best film houses on Broadway, "The Third Generation," with a Brentwood cast, is meeting with success in first-run houses throughout the country, according to Robertson-Cole.

Betty Blythe has the feminine lead in this Robertson-Cole picture, and is supported by an all-star cast, including Mahlon Hamilton, Betty Brice, Jack Pratt, Joseph Swickard and Edward Cecil.

Film Specials Contracts with the Fay Film Co.

Film Specials have just closed a contract with the Fay Film Co. of Chicago, for 26 two-reel comedies featuring Harry Cane, to be released every other week. Production has already begun. They will begin releasing at an early date, to be sold on the state rights basis. Film Specials will control the world rights.

An interesting scene from George Beban's new production, "One Man in a Million," to be distributed by Sol. Lesser

Lesser Makes Announcement

States His Market Policy and Method of Handling His First Beban Picture

SOL LESSER has issued the following statement in regard to his future activities and policies: "The shortage of real big attractions for the open market has led me into the producing field," said Mr. Lesser. "It has been so easy for a producer to obtain a release through a national distributing company on almost any average picture, that it leaves nothing for the open market man. I have therefore investigated the production field and have started with George Beban and Annette Kellermann, besides a third star whose name will be announced very shortly.

"Mr. Beban's first picture, 'One Man in a Million,' is nearly completed, and will have its premiere in Los Angeles, in conjunction with his well known vaudeville act, 'The Sign of the Rose,' famous throughout the country. The next showing will be in San Francisco, and after that each key city will be visited by Mr. Beban with his act and picture. Upon completion of his tour, Mr. Beban will start his second picture, and then Annette Kellermann will be ready and she will present her diving act with the picture. The same method applies to this as in the Beban proposition. Then comes our third star, who I will announce later.

"I am experimenting with a new policy," he said. "I have often figured the reason why the picture output should be marketed in New York instead of the very place it was produced. When I started to compute the expense and time wasted in this method, without one iota of additional benefit, I immediately made up my mind to have all my producing and releasing done here."

National Film's Feature to Combat Bolshevism

The first of the National Film Corporation of America series of productions to carry its message of reconstruction and to aid the government in combatting Bolshevism, will be "Mary Minds Her Business," a Ladies' Home Journal serial by George Weston. The story is based on the attempt of a girl to operate a large industrial plant which she falls heir to.

"Mary Minds Her Business" is a seven-part adaptation by Mildred Considine. The story will appear serially in the Ladies' Home Journal until March, when it will be published in book form.

"Human Passions" Sold on Central States

The rights on "Human Passions" for the states of Illinois and Indiana have been sold by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., to the Silee Film Exchange, 220 S. State Street, Chicago, Ill. Lottie Tilford is the featured member in this production, a seven part story of love and intrigue.

D. N. Schwab Forms Producing Organization

Dore N. Schwab, formerly production manager of the Carlisle Blackwel Productions, Inc., has just completes the organization of his own company to be known as the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc. The executive offices o the new company are at 511 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Schwab has just left for the Coast where upon his arrival he will immediately start preparations for the taking of a series of pictures. Negotiations have just been closed for the taking over of the most recently completed studio unit of the Hollywood Studios, Inc., Los Angeles.

New Comedy Concern

James Calnay, who has produced a number of plays in the east, has come to California for the making of a series of subjects to be released under the trade mark of High Life Comedies. These are to be of one reel in length and spoken of as semi slap stick situation comedies. Harry Wolze who has been identified with the scenario department of Keystone, Sennett, Fox Universal and L-Ko studios has been engaged as a writer and director and is in charge of production.

Character Buys Story

The Character Pictures Corporation has purchased the story "Forty Below," a tale of the Northwest by Craig Johnson. Added to "The Frameup" and "The Stampede," which were recently purchased by the company, this makes three stories announced in the past two weeks for production by the Character company. "Forty Below" will be made in California where the company will locate after making two pictures in the East.

Plunges from Plane in Scene

Jack Sherrill, Co-Star of "The Invisible Ray," Dives Into St. Johns River

JACK SHERRILL, co-starring with Ruth Clifford in "The Invisible Ray," a fifteen-episode serial now being produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, yesterday entered his name as one of the daredevils of the world. Sherrill won this unenviable sobriquet by plunging headfirst from an airplane moving through the air at a speed of 80 miles per hour, from an elevation estimated at 50 feet, into the St. Johns river, at Jacksonville, Florida.

The feat, which is described as the most spectacular yet seen on the screen, was done in adding reality to a moving picture scene which is being photographed in Jacksonville by the Frohman Amusement Corporation of New York, for "The Invisible Ray." Sherrill went to Pablo Beach, near Jacksonville, and there boarded a plane operated by the Victory Fliers, piloted by Reed E. Davis, an expert birdman, who flew for Uncle Sam during the war. The hour set for them to appear over the St. Johns river near the Armour fertilizer plant was 11.15 a.-m. Tugs and other boats were there with the cameramen, and all was set well in advance, so that the plane could be fired upon by the cameramen as soon as she came into view.

The work was so accurate and the signals so well timed that Sherrill struck the water within twenty-five feet of the boat to which he was to swim, while four or five cameras were pointed upon him, recording an actual stunt by a human being, and not that of a "dummy."

First of Jans Series Coming

"Love Without Question" with Popular Players Ready End of February

THE first of the series of six super-features starring Olive Tell which is being produced by Jans Pictures, Inc., will be ready for public presentation about the latter part of February. It is "Love Without Question," the film version of C. Wadsworth Camp's widely read novel "The Abandoned Room."

Fast nearing completion under the personal direction of B. E. Rolfe, "Love Without Question" is said to contain punch after punch, James Morrison is playing the leading male role in this production starring the Broadway star Olve Tell. Others of the supporting cast are equally well known and Mr. Rolfe has given personal attention to the selection of settings and locations with the assurance that the technical needs of the feature will be second to none.

"Love Without Question" is the first of a series of six Jans pictures in which Olive Tell will be the star. The series is to be released on the State rights basis under a "star series" contract plan. That is, the exhibitor will contract to book the series of six pictures. Thus he will be able to prepare advance advertising campaigns, be relieved of making other bookings and be assured of six excellent features in which an extremely popular star will appear.

All of the Jans pictures will be booked and contracted for in this manner. Mr. Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., and himself an exchange man thoroughly familiar with the needs of exhibitors, realizes that this method of booking is the kind that offers the theatre manager the best opportunities.

The exact release date of "Love Without Question" will be determined in a short time and, with other announcements regarding additional stars and pictures, will soon be made public

Arrow Announces Release

"The Wolves of Wall Street" and "The Desert Scorpion" Star Edmund F. Cobb

THE six-reel feature released by the Arrow Film Corporation, formerly titled "The Wolves of Wall Street," has had its title changed to "Wolves of the Street." This is the feature produced by the Art-O-Graf Film Company and features Edmund F. Cobb, supported by Vida Johnson.

"Wolves of the Street" is a combination Eastern and Western feature. The story opens in Wall Street and the action deals with the New York Stock Exchange and the attempt of a young broker, Cobb, to corner the wheat market. Later, he is called West to quell a strike in a mine that he owns, and then the action shifts to that location. "Wolves of the Street" was released by the Arrow Film Corporation on the states rights market on Jan. 15.

"The Desert Scorpion" is another six-reel feature which stars Edmund F. Cobb. In this feature the action takes place in its entirety in the West. It is said to be a well produced feature with many dramatic situations and plenty of suspense and some mystery. This feature was also produced by the Art-O-Graf Company under the personal supervision of Otis B. Thayer. "The Desert Scorpion" was released by the Arrow Film Corporation on Jan. 15.

Victor Kremer Finishes Trip

Reports Great Success in Disposing of Territory for the Chaplin Films

VICTOR KREMER, president of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., has returned to New York, after a trip throughout the exchange centres of the United States and Canada. During his visit to the independent buyers in the interests of the five Chaplin comedies, which he controls, Kremer disposed of many territories, it is stated.

The latest buyer to acquire the Chaplain productions in Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, who has purchased for New England "A Burlesque on Carmen," "The Champion," "The Jitney Elopement," "Work," and "By the Sea." Rifkin intends giving these Chaplins a wide exploitation campaign before the release of the first picture, which will be "Carmen." He will present the short length subjects as a series.

Mr. Kremer also reports the sale of the five Chaplin comedies for the State of Michigan to the Independent Masterfilms, Inc., of Detroit, Mich. This deal was consummated for the exchange by William Siefert, president of the new organization. Ohio was also disposed of by the head of the Kremer organization to Essenel Productions, De Luxe, of Cleveland, Ohio, for the four short length Chaplin offerings.

Mr. Kremer announced upon his return that he had acquired for state right distribution the Essanay subject, "Skinner's Dress Suit," the vehicle which is stated to have brought fame to Bryant Washburn, the present Paramount star. An entirely new edition of advertising supplies, under the direction of Bert Ennis, will be issued for this picture, and the marketing of same will begin shortly.

Elmer Harris to Remain with Famous Players

Elmer Harris, the noted writer of farces and musical comedy librettos, recently signed with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for another year.

Rothacker Shifts Activities to Coast

After a three-day breathing spell following a trip East, Watterson R. Rothacker's well-worn traveling bag left for Los Angeles January 27.

The president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company went to the Coast to get construction started on a Los Angeles laboratory, the site for which has already been purchased. Full announcements in regard to the location of the site, etc., will be made to the trade later.

While in "Filmapolis," Mr. Rothacker will make tentative arrangements for the production of a six-reel feature which he will personally present to the trade. He has already secured the story for this picture, having purchased the motion picture rights to a wonderful novel by one of the world's most famous authors.

While out there Mr. Rothacker will not devote all his time to presidenting for his film company, but will do considerable chairmanshipping for the Membership Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He will call a special meeting of Coast members with a view to launching a big membership campaign. In this connection he and Charles Christie, of the Christie Studios, chairman of the Coast Division of the Membership Committee, will work in harness.

Facts and Follies Are Reorganized

The success which has attend the Facts and Follies series of one-reel comedies has been so pronounced that Bernarr Macfaden and the Pioneer Headquarters Staff have completed the plans whereby the producing personnel and production staff will be trebled.

The directing staff will consist of Dale Henshaw, who will be in charge of company number one, and Ralph Whiteing, who will have company number two. Both the directors, with their companies, left New York for Jacksonville last Tuesday and are now in the first stages of their initial productions.

Bernarr Macfaden has appointed John S. Reilly as his personal representative. Mr. Reilly, with headquarters in New York, will be in charge of the Facts and Follies operations, and will have the newly instituted scenario department under his personal direction.

Lucille Lee Stewart Signed by Jans

B. A. Rolfe announces that Lucille Lee Stewart has been engaged to play a leading role in support of Olive Tell in his second production for the Jans Pictures, Inc., "Nothing a Year," which is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Charles Belmont Davis. The selection of Miss Stewart as a member of the cast follows out the announced intentions of the producers for the presentation of stars with talent and ability, with the firm intention of making their features a real box office attraction for the exhibitors all over the country.

"Jim" Thompson, who is to be starred in a series of 2-Reel comedies by Euclid Films

Alice Howell to Do Series for Emerald

Alice Howell will soon be seen on the screen again in a series of twenty-six two reel comedies, made by the Emerald Motion Picture Company, Chicago, under the direction of Fdererick J. Ireland.

Miss Howell's clean, irresistible and sparkling humor has been waited for for some time by the exhibitors of the country.

The Cropper Distributing Corporation control the world's rights for all of the Howell pictures, and have secured many contracts from the leading independent exchanges of the country for the entire twenty-six pictures which will be released every other week, the exact date of the first release has not been set.

Wide Sales Reported on Hank Mann Comedies

As evidence of the popularity of the Hank Mann two-reel comedies, the Arrow Film Corporation reports they have been sold for the following territories: New York City and Northern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Illinois and Indiana, Ohio, Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Tennessee, California, Arizona and Nevada and Colorado and Wyoming.

Extensive Exploitation for Cohn Comedies

Jack and Harry Cohn have announced their intention of inaugurating extensive advertising and publicity campaigns throughout the United States in regional and national motion-picture trade papers for the further exploitation of the 1920 series of Hall Room Boys Comedies. Although there have been but ten releases of this popular brand to date, they are said to have met with great success.

"One Man in a Million" Called One of Best

George Beban, who is at present producing "One Man in a Million" for distribution by Sol Lesser at the Beban Studios, is said to have in his new vehicle one of the really noteworthy productions of the year.

"One Man In A Million" is described as a heart-interest drama, based on the themes of love and laughter. Mr. Beban, besides playing the stellar role, also directs the production. The scenario is his own composition. He has supervised all details in connection with the picture.

"The Confession" Gets Favorable Reviews

The National Film submits extracts from two reviews on "The Confession," appearing in the columns of the Gazette of Taunton, Mass., and the Sentinel of Milwaukee, Wis. The opinion from the Gazette comes first:

"Hal Ried's play contains some of the most highly dramatic situations ever portrayed upon the screen and coupled with the masterful acting of Henry B. Walthall, the scenes are made all the more effective, and to the utmost pleased Tuesday's audience at the Park theatre, probably more than any other picture shown at the Park theatre during the past few years."

"The comeback which Henry Walthall made in "The Confession" will take the motion picture world by storm. The novel by Hal Reid is just the thing for him, for it gives him plenty of opportunities to display his wonderful ability. His supporting cast, though not well known, is good."

Grossman Says Serial Is Having Great Success

Enthusiastic reports of successes being established by the Grossman Pictures, Inc., serial production, "$1,000.-000 Reward," starring Lillian Walker, are said to be reaching the offices of Grossman Pictures from exchanges all over the country.

Aywon Film Corporation, controlling Greater New York, advises that bookings have been made on a large scale, it is said, and that the serial, now being shown, is meeting with remarkable popularity. A similar report comes from Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Corporation, controlling New England, according to the Grossman announcement.

A large portion of foreign territory has already been disposed of by Export and Import Film Corporation, foreign distributors, while negotiations are under way for the open territory.

Producers Feature Service Gets Comedies

Film Specials report the sale of their "Jolly Comedies" for Greater New York and northern New Jersey to the Producers' Feature Service, Inc., suite 707, Godfrey Building, New York, with Harry Samwick in the capacity of general manager.

Larkin with Mayflower

Mark Larkin has resigned as publicity director for Mary Pickford to take over the publicity activities of the Mayflower Company and the directors associated with it.

First Four Hank Comics on Hand, Says Arrow

The first four of the Hank Mann two-reel comedies have been received by the Arrow Film Corporation in New York. These are the first in the new series of Hank Mann to be released during 1920. There will be 26 of them all told to be released one every other week.

The titles for the first four pictures are "Broken Bubbles," "A Roaming Romeo," "A Knock Out," "The Paper Hanger." All the Hank Mann Comedies will feature Hank Mann, supported by Madge Kirby, the popular star, who has appeared with Hank Mann in all of his Keystone comedies.

The Arrow Film Corporation reports that the following territories have been sold: New York City and Northern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and Montana, California, Arizona and Nevada.

Francis McDonald to Be in National Series

Francis McDonald will be the central figure in the first of the National's "America First" series of photoplay features, adapted from magazine stories and novelettes. McDonald is now engaged with William A. Seiter in producting "The Kentucky Colonel" for the National. He will begin on the new series as soon as that production is concluded, which will be about February 20th.

Press Book Ready for "The Lost City"

Warner Brothers, who have the distribution rights of Selig's animal serial, "The Lost City," announce the completion of the campaign and press book, which is now at the disposal of the exhibitors.

The book, which was written by Eddie Bonns, consists of sixteen pages, profusely illustrated and showing stills of the twenty-four sheet and paper on the first two episodes; a group of fourteen scene cuts; slides; a variety of different style ad cuts; the banner, and the novelties for the children.

Victor Kremer Moves to Larger Quarters

Victor Kremar Film Features, Inc., one of the prominent state right firms, has moved from their quarters in the Longacre Building to the Leavitt Building, at 130 West 46th street. The Kremer organizatinon is taking over twenty-five hundred square feet of space, or half a floor, in the Leavitt Building, and carpenters and decorators have been busy for several weeks refitting these quarters to house the sales, advertising and executive departments. In addition to large private offices to be occupied by Victor Kremer, president of the organization, J. Shenfield, secretary, and Bert Enuis, director of advertising and publicity, arrangements have been made to equip a large projection room, which will be used exclusively to screen for buyers the various productions which Kremer controls, among which are five Chaplin comedies and several features starring Henry Walthal, Bryant Washburn, Jack Gardner, Broncho Billy, etc.

Pioneer Signs Marie Doro for Series

Marie Doro is the latest star to be added to the Pioneer banner. Miss Doro through her representatives has just contracted to appear in several productions for the Pioneer Film Corporation. James McKay, who has been directing Miss Doro for some time past, will be in charge of the forthcoming productions.

The first picture to be made with Miss Doro for the Pioneer is already under way, but up to the present a definite title for the photoplay has not been decided upon.

The story deals with the power of hereditary influences, and when finished will probably be cut to six parts.

Godfrey Tearle will play opposite to Miss Doro.

The Pioneer which has been the most active bidder for super productions in the open market for the past year has options on several of the most noteworthy independent productions now nearing completion, and in a week or so will make an announcement which will have a far reaching effect upon the independent market for some time to come.

Robt. McLaughlin's Features Sold to Hi-Art

Messrs. L. Cohen and J. Perl, owners of Hi-Art Productions with offices at 729 Seventh Avenue, have bought the Up-State New York rights to Robert McLaughlin's state right feature, "The House Without Children," from Robert W. Priest of the Film Market.

"The Return of Tarzan" Has Big Animal Cast

In the picturization of "The Return of Tarzan", being produced by the Numa Pictures Corporation, the cast of players, headed by Gene Pollar and Karla Schramm, is augmented by such screen animal-actors as the L-KO lions, the famous monkey, Joe Martin, the big and faithful elephant, Charley, fifty white horses, two camels and several apes and gorillas.

Announcement on "Empty Arms"

Producers' Statement Says Much Interest Has Been Shown

THE Photoplay Libraries announces that considerable interest has been aroused by the initial Park-Whiteside production "Empty Arms," shortly to be released, and point to the large number of letters and telegrams reported to have been received at their offices in reference to this picture as substantial evidence of the interest alleged. In the following is reproduced a detailed statement, submitted by the Photoplay Libraries, in regards to this production:

"Over seventeen hundred requests for the hundred thousand dollar packet, the extraordinary document issued by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside in connection with 'Empty Arms' by their advertising department, have been received from exhibitors who are desirous of booking this unusual film. Judging from the vast number of requests sent in daily from all portions of the United States and Canada, it appears as if a new edition of the packet will have to be printed. Seven thousand five hundred copies comprise the first edition.

"The producers wish to correct the misstatement to the effect that "Empty Arms" is a sex hygiene picture. This misrepresentation evidently came about through the fact that motherhood and birth control are the picture's twin themes. The story, by Willard King Bradley, is a highly dramatic one, mounting with gathering speed to its Himalayan climax, as each of its many intense and perfectly knit episodes unfold.

"The direction, which was in the capable hands of Frank Reicher, who has many Paramount and Metro successes to his credit, was splendidly executed. Many exceedingly delicate scenes, which would have been utterly ruined by less skillful handling than that given them by Mr. Reicher, are successfully and inoffensively gotten over. 'Empty Arms' was an unusually difficult picture to direct, and Mr. Reicher is to be congratulated for the excellent way in which he has managed it.

Frank Reicher, who directed "Empty Arms," the Park-Whiteside production

"Gail Kane, who is starred, appears in the chambersesque role of Diane Summers, a pampered daughter of the upper ten who, heeding the insidious whisperings of world-wise faminine friends, balks at maternity. How she is swerved from her God-defying, nature-flaunting course furnishes excellent dramatic material, and all concerned have realized its uttermost value.

"Opposite Miss Kane appears Thurston Hall. In 'Empty Arms' Mr. Hall appears as Bruce Gordon, fiance of Diane Summers, whom he marries upon purely platonic grounds. The role affords this well-known player many opportunities for powerful scenes which he handles with the skill of the finished artist that he is. J. Herbert Frank plays the 'heavy,' appearing as Philip Darnton, an unscrupulous libertine, who lives only for dangerous pleasures. The supporting cast includes Howard Truesdale, Irene Blackwell and Warren Chandler.

"A sensational, eye-attracting line of 'paper,' including three kinds of one-sheets, two three-sheets, two sixes and an unusually striking twenty-four sheet have been made for 'Empty Arms' by the Otis Lithograph Company. In addition to the 'paper' there is a large edition of colored cloth banners."

French Producer Brings Films

Baron de Daue Seeks to Re-establish International Business

THE first of the big French films to reach this country since the outbreak of the great world war has arrived from Paris and will be distributed in America shortly.

These subjects were brought over by Baron R. C. de Daue, a special representative of M. Louis Mercanton, managing director of the Societe des Films Mercanton, one of the foremost film producers of France. Baron de Daue will spend some time in this country. He has established an affiliation with Guy Groswell Smith, Ltd., the American exporting company recently organized by J. J. McCarthy, Theodore Mitchell and Guy C. Smith, by which the Mercanton interests in America are looked after in association with the Mercanton interests in the American film subjects which Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., handles for the world outside of the United States and Canada.

Baron de Daue, it is stated, brings with him two of the finest pictures that have been made in France since hostilities ceased and the French producers have been enabled to resume work upon their productions. Foremost of these is M. Louis Mercanton's production of "The Call of the Blood," a picturization of Robert Hichen's novel of that title. The scenes are said to have been taken in Rome, Sicily and Africa, where the action of the story takes place. It follows the Hichens' narrative closely.

The other picture Baron de Daue brings over is "In Old Alsace," a charming and whimsical study in photographic action of the delightful Erckmann-Chatrian operetta "L'Ami Fritz," which Jack Mason and Marion Manole did in this country some years back and which was subsequently used as a vehicle by young J. K. Emmett. It is a semi-human fairy story of the rual life of a town in Alsace when men had to be coaxed into marriage under the ever watchful eye of the storks and a few busy humans who made the assisting of courtships a vocation. Its whimsy and its picturesque settings offer a happy combination and with the original music synchronized to the action of the picture it is sure to be charming.

Johnny Hines, who has the title role in the "Torchy" stories to be produced by Master Films, Inc.

These pictures are said to be but the forerunners of others to be brought to this country by the agencies established by Baron de Daue whose mission is to re-establish the entente cordiale between American and French film interests which was developing so rapidly when the great war caused the French film industry to abandon its functioning until hostilities ceased. As we say in America these artistic films will serve a good purpose in renewing the hands across the sea idea which has been strengthened by the war after the interruptions of local conditions had been clared away.

Satire Hits Bolshevism

Approaching its object in a satirical fashion, "Bulling the Bullsheviki," a five-part production distributed by the Eff and Eff Company, is said to combine burlesque and comedy-drama and yet aim at a subject which is at present receiving the serious attention of the country, with telling effect.

Secrecy Surrounds Next Schomer-Ross

Much mystery surrounds the next Schomer-Ross production. The theme of the story is known only to Mr. Schomer, the director and author, and Miss Cassinelli, the star.

Elaborate sets, tremendous scenes, wonderful locations, quantities of people, gorgeous costumes are promised.

Supporting Miss Cassinelli in the leading male role is Ben Taggart.

Engages Robt. Whittier for "Mystery Mind"

Following their new plan to feature famous screen names in every episode of their million dollar serial, "The Mystery Mind," Reeve and Grey announce that they have engaged Robert Whittier, well known in this country for his productions of Ibsen and more recently of Russian plays.

Final Scenes Taken of "Exposed" Comedy

The concluding scenes of "Exposed," Gale Henry's comedy for Bull's Eye, were taken last week. This is the twenty-fourth two-reeler that the comedienne has made for this concern and marks the completion of her present contract. It is said Miss Gale plans to take a vacation at her Hollywood home and in the mountains near Los Angeles.

All Breeds of Dogs in Century Comedy

Fred Fishback has commenced work at the L-Ko studios on a Century Comedy featuring the wonder dog Brownie. "My Dog Pal," is the tentative title and besides Brownie, there will appear in this comedy a dozen or more dogs of every imaginable breed and pedigree. The direction of a dog picture means no end of time and patience on the part of the director to make the comedy a "howling" success, which the scenario in this case promises the production will be. Bud Jamison, Lois Neilson, Merra Sterling and Billy Engel will constitute the human cast.

Pioneer Films Champion Bout

High Price Paid for Pictures of Caddock-Stecher Championship Struggle

PIONEER Film Corporation tendered a luncheon at the Claridge on Friday, January 23, to Earl Caddock, world's champion wrestler, who grapples with Joe Stetcher, claimant of the title, at Madison Square Garden, on January 30.

For Pioneer has secured the rights to film the match, paying $30,000 for the privilege. And before another word is said, praise must be accorded the masterful way in which Morris Rose, president of the corporation, conducted the affair.

Ed. Moss, president of the "Sport Writers' Association," acted as toastmaster and introduced his speakers in a way that bespoke familiarity with that important post.

Mr. Rose said: "I have seen many important matches in my life both in the boxing and wrestling game. I can go back as far as the Sullivan-Mitchell fight at Madison Square Garden, and many of Sullivan's other encounters. I have seen Nonparell Dempsey and Kilrain in their numerous fights. Then the later generation Fitzsimmons, Corbett, Maher and Jeffries and the last big fistic "go," Dempsey versus Willard. And during this time I have witnessed all the important wrestling matches, foreign and American from Muldoon up to the present, but I do not believe that there ever will be a greater match than the one which is to take place at the Garden next week. Why, because these men are not the type of the old time wrestler with his bulk and slowness, but they are quick, active and agile. This is because of their weight, neither of them tipping the scales to more than 180 pounds, thus insuring a quick bout with action crowded into every minute. No big man could keep their pace and last. And that is the reason my company offered $30,000 for the world's rights to film this encounter.

"It will give the patrons of theatres a chance to see the greatest wrestling match of the present time which is bound to prove interesting and exciting."

Jack Curley, promoter of the affair, was next introduced. We didn't get much from Jack because he is one of those fellows who seem to lose their tongues when called upon to "deliver a few words."

Earl Caddock just said "Thank you."

Among those present were many prominent members of the film industry and many newspaper and trade paper officials.—Frank Leonard.

Arrow Sells "The Fatal Sign" to Boston Man

The Arrow Film Corporation announces the sale for the New England territory of "The Fatal Sign," a new 15-Episode serial to be released February 1. The sale was made to Sam Grand of the Arrow Film Company, Boston. The entire fifteen episodes have been finished and are ready for screening.

Power Machines Selected for Fox Studio

Mr. Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Co., has announced that the projection room of the two and a half million dollar studio of the Fox Film Corporation is to be equipped exclusively with Powers machines. The output of this studio is expected to be unusually great as is indicated by the fact that 10 projectors will be required to handle the screening of films as they come from the laboratory.

The studio itself is rapidly nearing completion and it is expected that it will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks.

Benny Leonard Party to Work in Big Cities

"The Evil Eye," the Benny Leonard serial now in its third week of production by Ascher Bros., Inc., and Frank G. Hall, under the direction of J. Gordon Cooper, will be completed in the principal cities between New York and the Coast, according to the announcement of the producers.

The company, including Benny Leonard, Ruth Dwyer, Stuart Holmes, Marie Shotwell, Bernard Randall and Mme. Marstini, will leave New York following the completion of the second episode, which, according to the announcement of Wally Van, supervisor of productions, will be about the first week in March.

Literary Digest Plans Tie-Up with "Topics"

To keep "Topics of the Day" before the public The Literary Digest has conceived the idea of featuring a timely topic from a current program in the heading of its distinctive display advertising, appearing in 350 newspapers in the United States and Canada each week.

Since each topic quoted is published under the heading "Topics of the Day," this advertising on the part of The Literary Digest effects a most satisfactory tie-up with the screen presentation.

Here they are, the three premier fun makers of the screen: Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler and Mabel Normand as they appear in "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the five part comedy released on the independent market by the Tower Film Corp.

Personal and Otherwise

Betty Ross Clarke has just been engaged for an important part in D. W. Griffith's production of "Romance," starring Doris Keane. Miss Clarke, whose advent into the picture world is comparatively recent, is looking forward to this latest role with keenest expectation.

Florence Billings, recently seen as the star of "Wit Wins," has been chosen by director Ralph Ince for a prominent role in Selznick's "The Woman Game." This will be Miss Billings' second picture for Selznick this year, as she played the lead in the screen version of "The Blue Pearl" from the Broadway stage success of the same name.

Vincent Coleman is the leading man in "For the Freedom of Ireland," a propaganda picture which was shown in Chicago a short time ago. The picture will be seen in New York soon.

Rod LaRoque, who has been in Chicago with the Constance Binney company for the past six weeks, is due back in town this week. LaRoque played the lead opposite Miss Binney in "Little Miss By-the-Day."

Warren Chandler, featured leading man in Blackton's "My Husband's Other Wife," will be seen in the leading role of "The Faded Butterfly," a new Selznick picture.

Olga Petrova's salutation to her audiences in response to applause is said to have caused much comment. This is a gesture of the right hand, first touching the forehead, then the heart, and concluding with a sweeping motion to the side. "Is she crossing herself?" has often been asked. For the benefit of those who do not know, Petrova explains that it is Arabic and means "My head and heart are at your feet." Rather charming, we think.

Richard Travers is at work on his first production since his change from the films into the A. E. F. some three years ago. He is playing opposite Pearl White in the Fox picturization of "The White Moll," and his part, for the time being, is that of the roughest of rough necks, a little too rough for Mr. Travers' unrestricted approval, we believe. However, he has gone into it in earnest, and his makeup is really ferocious. One ear is blocked out with putty, his mouth is pulled over into a lopsided position with court plaster, his face is lined with scars and wrinkles. The worst of it is, Mr. Travers laments, that the time he might have for seeing New York or otherwise amusing himself between scenes, has to be passed in the studio, the makeup being too troublesome to be got off and put on any more often than is absolutely necessary. He is comforting himself with the promise that he is to have a chance to dress up and show what he really looks like later on.

H. H. Van Loan, author of many successful screen plays

Jack Baston is playing the "heavy" in the same picture, we were told. If he can be any "heavier" than Mr. Travers, we should like to know how he does it, that's all.

Hugh Thompson returned from Palm Beach, where the exteriors for "Cynthia of the Minute" were taken, just as New York's blizzard waged its mightiest. He would have stayed south longer except for the Professional Woman's League Ball, at which he was one of the leaders of the Grand March.

Ruby DeRemer is working again. This time as leading woman in the Selznick production "A Fool and His Money," starring Eugene O'Brien. The company is at Alexandria Bay, N. Y., and is expected to remain there for several weeks more. They are reported to be complaining of the low temperature.

Wall Street, it is said, stops, looks and listens when Director Wally Van shoots in its midst. Tuesday, January 20, was the day. Crowds gathered around the camera and Director Wally Van didn't know whether the fight staged between his star, Benny Leonard, and men engaged to combat him, was going to turn into a "free for all" or not. Something had to be done to stop the onlookers and Director Van resorted to the old issue of paying little attention. "Shoot!" he called to the cameraman. The crowd dispersed.

There have been eugenic babies aplenty, but so far as we know, it has remained for Betty Ross Clarke, who did such good work in "If I Were King," to achieve the distinction of being the first eugenic mother on the screen. This is the role she plays in Taylor Holmes' latest comedy, now about to be released, "The Very Idea."

"Poor, poor Taylor Holmes" were the words of commiseration heaped upon him when he chose "The Very Idea" as a vehicle. "You'll never find a woman to play the eugenic mother," the pessimists insisted. But after a tireless search Mr. Holmes discovered Miss Clarke, comparatively new to pictures, but with a successful stage career behind her; and Miss Clarke proved to be the perfect physical specimen of womanhood needed by Mr. Holmes.

Miss Clarke is a product of the Northwest, unspoiled by the "effete East," a rare find in these days of late hours, constant nervous strain, too little fresh air and exercise. She fits the part for which Mr. Holmes wanted her quite as well as even Mr. Holmes could wish.

Robert Gordon is enjoying a vacation, due to his youth and unsophisticated appearance. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton thinks he doesn't quite fit the part of the worldly man about town required for the lead in his next production "Passersby," and consequently Mr. Gordon has nothing to do but prepare for his role in the following Blackton picture, "The Soul Spinners." Just to make sure that his scarcity of years doesn't handicap him again, he is raising a mustache, as the main feature of preparation.

Author Pleased By Picturization of Story

Kathleen Norris has given the filmed version of her story, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," produced by B. B. Features with Bessie Barriscale as the star, the most flattering praise. Mrs. Norris was one of the most reluctant novelists to get on the screen, according to Robertson-Cole. Now she is one of the most enthusiastic. Mrs. Norris declares that her newest picturized story is by far her best. Recently in the Windsor theatre, Hollywood, she and her husband, Major Norris, were guests at a special showing. Mrs. Norris said that she was delighted beyond words.

In praise of the work which was done by Director Edward Sloman, Miss Barriscale, and the large cast which supports her, Mrs. Norris said: "Of all my stories which have been put on the screen, this is the best. There was a time when I have felt that some stories suffered by adaption to the screen. In fact, for a long time I would not give permission for my novels to be picturized. But this picture, based on 'The Luck of Geraldine Laird,' forever converts me."

A Star Against Star System With Reservations

DURING the past year we have had a number of expressions of opinion from producers, eminent authors, and distribution experts on the subject of the star system, and most of them were to the effect that the system was rapidly going out of date.

How many stars themselves have ever voiced the same idea?

We know of one—namely, that genial person—E. K. Lincoln.

Mr. Lincoln said in a recent interview: "I am not against stars, but I am against the star system when it produces bad pictures.

"I am against the star who spoils the picture by sacrificing some of its best scenes for the sake of personal vanity. My ideal star is Mary Pickford. Did you see her picture, 'Heart of the Hills'? I thought it was a wonderful picture, and in it Mary gave every one a chance. Not once did she try to spoil some one else's opportunity by stealing the center of the stage. Scene after scene went by in which she did not appear, but in which the dramatic theme of the story was beautifully built up.

"I think this picture should be a lesson to some of our stars who have caused, in the past, the talk about abolishing the star system. Of course, we must have stars, but, first of all, we must have good pictures. In my latest picture, 'The Inner Voice,' I have tried to do this very thing, and I hope, when it is shown in the near future, you will agree with me that I have succeeded.

"And, by the way, I took the most brutal punishment in this picture that I have ever taken in my life. If you think it is any fun to have a hob-nailed shoe planted full in your face, you're welcome to try it. This once will be enough for me."

"Why do you fight in nearly every one of your pictures?" we asked.

"I don't know; they do seem to make me fight a lot, don't they? I suppose it is because of my size, and the fact that when I am called upon to stage a fight it is always a real fight—no faking."

Mr. Lincoln showed us a clipping from a New York newspaper wherein some reviewer had referred to him as Elmo Lincoln who "fought so wonderfully in 'Desert Gold' at the Strand this week." He showed us some other clippings where he had been confused with Elmo Lincoln in Western papers. One of them read: "E. K. Lincoln, the Wonderful Fighting Man of the Screen, Has Challenged Jack Dempsey."

It is understood, of course, that Elmo Lincoln did challenge Dempsey. With a laugh, E. K. assured us that he had no desire to enter the prize-ring, and that he would confine his fistic combats to motion pictures, wherever possible.—M. J.

Roger Lytton, Villain and Host

ONE of the most captivating sections of colonial Manhattan, a house that keeps one's name on its waiting list for two years or more before it admits one permanently into its realm of enchantment, up long, winding stairs that creak just a little in the intense silence of high, reticent, old walls that have watched so many footsteps vanish as completely as the echoes they created, past massive, solid doors, each with its quaint, brass knocker, then a deep, well-bred voice, and Roger Lytton coming forward to welcome us with gracious cordiality into the background he has chosen for himself.

We found it difficult to think of movies, in such a setting. It was all so real, so stable, that we could imagine only work that would last being created there. Productions so fanciful, so erratic, so unreliable as things of celluloid seemed to have no place. Yet, after further consideration, we concluded that the celluloid is merely incidental, that the creation of screen characters is no task of the moment, but one that requires all the thought and study that their creator is willing to give. And Mr. Lytton is willing to give a great deal. We have never talked with any one more sincerely nor more intelligently interested in film characterizations than he.

"But I should like to have a recognized standard to judge my own progress by," he said, "I should like to know definitely that I was not so good as such and such an actor, while certain others were still behind me on the road of achievement. Then I could concentrate on ascertaining and improving my weak points, and feel reasonably sure that I was advancing in my particular line of work. As things are now, there is no scale of promotion. You have a good part one month, and a bad one the next. One director thinks you're a better actor than so and so, while another is positive you're worse. How can any ambitious man cope with such a situation? How can he cope with it satisfactorily, at least?"

Mr. Lytton speaks with the authority of twenty years' legitimate stage experience, supporting such players as E. H. Sothern, Mrs. Fiske, and others, while his screen career began in the early Vitagraph days. His greatest success has been in "heavy" roles, which, in our opinion, proves what an excellent actor he is. For he is anything but a "heavy" at heart.

"Most of my villains have been such terrible ones," he declared, laughingly, "that my greatest difficulty has been to make them seem natural. I am sure no one was ever quite so wicked as I have been in some of my roles, but, of course, there is more interest attached to such a part than to that of an eminently respectable, entirely trustworthy, law abiding citizen. But don't you want to see my home before we have our tea?"

We did. We wandered about the high ceilinged studio, its walls hung with old rugs that have belonged in Mr. Lytton's family for generations, brightening just the right places in the subdued northern light that filtered through the windows above our head. The pictures near those rugs, our host explained, had been selected very carefully. The pale tints of the snow scenes, of which there are several, harmonize with the rich coloring of the rugs as nothing else would. There is, too, a gorgeous white Gyrfalcon by Charles Livingston Bull. McCrea,

San Diego Warmly Welcomes Mary M. Minter

Mary Miles Minter, the Realart Pictures Corporation star of the first flight came, saw and conquered San Diego. Our only Mary motored from Los Angeles many miles to that dear San Diego to greet the patrons of the Plaza theatre of the progressive city near the Mexican line. Miss Minter was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, and her sister, Margaret Shelby. The party was domiciled at the palatial U. S. Grant Hotel which is under the management of the genial boniface, the internationally-known Baron Long. All day Sunday the party were royally entertained on board the Destroyer Ingraham by Captain Franklin Scott Irby. On Sunday night the little lady spoke to two overflow audiences at the Plaza theatre at the premiere of that excellent production, "Anne of Green Gables." Miss Minter met with a tremendous ovation before and after her intelligent discourse, in which she dwelt upon the vicissitudes of motion picture making in all kinds of weather and under many adverse conditions and she asked the audiences to be kind and tolerant in view of the trying conditions of picture making. She also spoke of her desire to create and develop pictures which might live and leave lasting impressions on the minds of the observers and not dismissed as being superficial diversions.

W. W. Whitson, the proprietor of the Plaza theatre, made every effort to properly welcome the dainty Mary by a wonderful publicity campaign embracing elaborate full page newspaper ads. Vernon Bushway, a capable boy soprano, garbed as Little Lord Fauntleroy, rendered "Oh What a Pal Was Mary," changing the words to the present tense with a spot light thrown on Miss Minter in an elaborately decorated box near the stage resplendent with flowers and with a large electrical star directly over the box in which the Minter party sat, scintillating the significance of "an only star." Taken as a whole the journey of Miss Minter marked an epoch in Mary Miles Minter's career.

Pictures—and City Publicity

By A. S. Witmer, Gen. Mgr.
Louisville Industrial Foundation

IT remained for a motion picture film to "sell" the City of Louisville in the biggest sense to many of the citizens of Louisville. The film showed the townspeople things about their town that they never knew before—it gave Louisville residents a fuller appreciation of their own city.

The motion picture was primarily intended to be an annual report to the Louisville Industrial Foundation stockholders. The Foundation had been organized through public subscriptions. Over 3,000 local business and professional men had become stockholders, contributing funds which furnished the Foundation with ammunition for its campaign to tell the entire United States about the City of Louisville—its campaign to attract new industries to "The Heart of America," which, of course, is Louisville.

The time came when the Foundation was to make an annual accounting to its stockholders. We might have prepared a long printed annual report, full of facts and figures, which would have been read by the printer, beyond a doubt.

But we wanted an annual report which the stockholders would read.

So we went about preparing the annual report in the modern way. We decided to make a film of what the Foundation had done. The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, was selected to produce the motion picture.

We gave the advertising film experts an outline of what we had accomplished, notably what we had achieved in the way of bringing new industries to the city. The Rothacker men put it into film. The motion picture camera made trips through a number of the new industries which the Foundation had been instrumental in bringing to Louisville.

The result was an annual report which the stockholders not only actually read but also enjoyed in the reading, for the film proved very entertaining.

Up to the time the film was shown many of the 3,000 stockholders were not entirely familiar with the work of the Foundation. After viewing the film the stockholders knew just what was being accomplished with their money.

The motion picture made such an impression upon the stockholders that we decided to show it to everyone in Louisville. The film was shown at all the local theatres for periods of from two to five days. The results obtained from the public showings were practically the same as if the population of Louisville had visited those factories in person. People were heard to say that they had no idea that such industries were situated in their town. You see, the film "sold" Louisville to Louisvillians.

It might seem that a film of this character when shown locally would not secure much outside publicity. But the transient population of a city is considerable and Louisville's idea was spread in all directions.

Personally the writer believes that the film method of publicity has wonderful opportunities. The results that can be obtained and the impressions made are both effective at the time and lasting. The ideal way would be to employ motion pictures as an adjunct to a newspaper and magazine advertising campaign. The best results would be obtained by harnessing both the great forces of publicity—motion picture celluloid and printers' ink—to the task, one supplementing the other.

Alfred Hutty, Norman Colt, Henry Hammond Ahl, Charles Bezin, S. R. Burleigh, Charles Allen Hulbert—these are some of the artists whose work Mr. Lytton has chosen. On the wall below the high windows, a row of delightful old English prints hang in dignified exclusiveness, separated from the water colors by a plaque or two.

In the dining-room are several oil paintings—one of a handsome young man in an Inverness and top hat attracted our attention especially, and Mr. Lytton pleaded guilty to having been its original. The portrait was done while he was studying at the Conservatoire in Paris, by Harry Finney.

Then, in two huge armchairs before a glowing coal fire, we drank tea and chatted about—motion pictures.—M. J.

At the Ince Plant

Thomas H. Ince is shortly to introduce another young man star in the person of Lloyd Hughes, recently placed under long term of contract. The first starring vehicle will be "Wheelbarrow Webster," in which Hughes takes the part of the unsophisticated son of the rural west. The story is by Julian Josephson who has written a number of highly successful photoplays which served as vehicles for Charles Ray. John Wray has been placed in charge of filming the first Hughes picture. Wray is a newcomer to screen drama from the speaking stage. Hughes was seen in "Behind the Door," and played the juvenile in "Below the Surface." Mr. Ince has also secured the services of Teddy, the Mack Sennett great Dane dog to play an important part in "Wheelbarrow Webster."

The permanent title given the Enid Bennett subject is "The False Road." This subject was filmed under the title of "The Man In The Moon," and has an underworld atmosphere, the correctness of which is due to director Fred Niblo. Lloyd Hughes plays leading man to Miss Bennett in this picture.

The publicity department of the Thos. H. Ince studio has inaugurated a new service to newspapers consisting of a newspaper page stories and pictures which goes out under the heading of Studio News Service. Mats of all pictures appearing in the page will be served newspapers.

The first picture starring Priscilla Dean to "come through" in some time is "The Beautiful Beggar," in which the popular Universal player has an unusually interesting role

Fox Studio Doings

Dennison Clift, who has served as head of the William Fox scenario department for the past eighteen months, this week took up the direction of an original story he had written and prepared for the screen, especially for Madlaine Traverse. This story is titled "The Iron Heart" and affords dramatic action, especially suitable to this star. The cast, while not fully selected, is at present composed of George McDaniels, Edwin Booth Tilton, Melbourne McDowell and Ben Deely. Mr. Clift recently served as co-director of one of the William Fox productions, starring Miss Traverse.

Director Howard Mitchell is in charge of the filming of "Molly and I". Lilie Leslie has been added to this cast, which is headed by Shirley Mason. The working continuity for this was prepared by Isabel Johnson, from the Frank R. Adams story of the same title.

Director Scott Dunlap has prepared the working scenario for the next Buck Jones production, which is "Forbidden Trails", adapted from the Charles Alden Selder story of the same name, which appeared in recent magazines.

William Russell has completed his most recent subject "Shod with Fire" and is taking a short vacation before taking up the filming of his next production.

The William Fox Company has been to great expense in duplicating the interiors of a number of cabins, which they will use for exteriors of the William Farnum picture "The Orphan". Desirable locations for the exterior shots of this picture were found near Palm Springs. At that time, photographs of the interior of these cabins, which have been standing sixty or eighty years were made and brought to the studio. To reproduce the photographs, it was found necessary to purchase specially cut lumber and this had to be shipped to Los Angeles from Oregon.

The William Farnum Company is now at work on this film. After twenty odd members who came from New York had a very difficult time in finding hotel or living accomodations of any kind, part of their difficulty was solved by Mr. Farnum, himself, who purchased a large estate of seven acres in the north part of Hollywood. Aside from the residence on this estate, there is a large bungalow for servants quarters and Mr. Farnum has given this over for the use of his personal staff.

Goldwyn

Gouverneur Morris, the famous story writer, whose story "The Penalty" is to be produced by Goldwyn, has been spending several weeks with the producing organization in the selection of location, the preparation of script, and the casting of the picture, "The Penalty," which is to be produced under the direction of Wallace Worsley. Those who have been named to take important parts in this play are Lon Chaney, Charles Clary, Ethel Grey Terry and Kenneth Harlan. The filming of this will be started within the next few days.

Barbara Castleton has been selected to play the part of Joan, which is the leading feminine role in "The Branding Iron," adapted from the Katherine Hewlinbert story, which is to be a Reginald Barker production. The continuity for this subject is now being written and the filming will be started early in the next week.

Mabel Normand will begin work under the direction of Victor Schertzinger next week in an adaptation from the George Ade production "The Slim Princess." Continuity is now being prepared by Gerald Duffy.

The Will Rogers Company, being directed by Clarence Badger, is home from a two weeks stay at Santa Cruz, California, where scenes in the big tree country were filmed for the adaptation from the J. G. Holland story "Seven Oaks" which will be released on the screen as "Jes call me Jim."

Everything is in readiness for the filming of the Ben Ames Williams' story, "The Great Accident" which ran in the Saturday Evening Post with Tom Moore in the featured role. Harry Beaumont is to be in charge of this production and the scenario has been prepared by J. G. Hawks, head of the Goldwyn Scenario Department.

Paul Scardon, well known director, who in the past has worked only in the east, has been engaged by Goldwyn and is now at the Culver City studios, awaiting his first assignment.

National

Plans of the National Film Corporation provide for seven producing units, according to statement made this week by Captain Harry M. Rubey, President. Three of these units will make polite comedies, one will devote its attention to dramatic short subjects, one to slapstick comedies, another will work on serials and the last on features.

The National's feature "The Kentucky Colonel" was finished this week, so far as filming is concerned and Director William Seiter is now giving his attention to the editing of this picture which will be ready for the market about March 1st.

The next subject of importance to be put in production will be "Mary minds her business" which is an American labor and capital story, adapted from the George Weston story, which appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal. The continuity for this, written by Mildred Considine, provides for seven reels. Wallace MacDonald is to play a featured part in this subject, which will be directed by William Seiter.

After a vacation of several weeks, Neal Burns has returned to the National Studio for the filming of additional two reel comedies. The first of these to be produced is entitled "A Sleepless Night" which was written by L. V. Jefferson. Mark Goldaine is in charge of directing.

Continuity is now being written for another serial to be filmed by National. This serial will be based upon one of the Edgar Rice Burroughs' stories relative to the adventures of Tarzan, the ape man.

Universal Newsettes

The plan to send Eddie Polo and a Universal serial company to South America for the filming of a portion of "The Vanishing Dagger" serial has been abandoned and it is now definitely stated that the serial will be completed at Universal City. Following that, Polo and a company will go to South America for the filming of a five reel feature. Nine of the chapters of the eighteen episode serial have been completed and it is the plan of the producing unit to have the serial all finished by the middle of March. The cast includes Thelma Percy, Peggy O'Dare, Texas Watts, Ruth Royce, Charles Brindley, C. Norman Hammond and Sam Polo.

Director Christy Cabanne has completed "Burnt Wings," adapted from Bayard Veiller's play "The Primrose Path," and is working with the scenario department in the preparation of his next subject.

"The Road to Divorce" is the permanent title given the Mary MacLaren picture which is nearing completion under the direction of Philip Rosen. This story written by J. Grubb Alexander was originally titled "The Better Half" and has a cast which includes Edward Peil, Bonnie Hill, Eugenie Ford, and others.

Al Santell, who has been directing animal pictures is now making a comedy feature, titled "Vamp a Little Lady," which will have Chris Rub and Lillian Rich as principals. Miss Rich is an English actress, who has but recently played in films.

Harry Franklin who recently completed his first Universal picture, has been selected to direct another subject titled "Amazing Amelia," which is a comedy drama. Edith Roberts has been engaged to play the leading role in this coming production and the remainder of the cast is now being selected.

Lyons & Moran have begun the filming of their first five reel comedy drama "Everything But the Truth," which is based on the magazine story of the same title by Edgar Franklin. All of the cast for this film have not been selected.

About Metro Players

President Richard A. Rowland of the Metro Film Corporation is expected in Los Angeles during the coming week. It is expected that Mr. Rowland will remain on the coast for several weeks or until the return of Director General Maxwell Karger.

The Metro has engaged Edward Sloman to serve as director of Mitchell Lewis in the making of the Jack London story into photoplays and begins work immediately on the first of this series "Burning Daylight". The cast for this play is now being selected and the producing unit plans to begin work early next week. These subjects are being made for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., by Metro.

Wm. C. Dowland, who has been directing Tsuru Aoki in special productions at Universal, has been engaged to direct Viola Dana in "Eliza Comes to Stay". Mr. Dowland has just finished "Locked Lips" at Universal and has taken up his new work at Metro.

Blasco Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is expected at the Metro studio within the next few days, to go over the working script for "The Four Horsemen" which has been prepared by Miss Mathis. It is expected this film will be put in production early in February.

Eugene Pallette has been engaged as leading man for Viola Dana in her next production "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath", which will be screened following the filming of "Eliza Comes to Stay."

A new name has been given to the coming May Allison subject, originally known as "Judah". The permanent title will be "The Cheater". This production is nearing completion from the Henry Arthur Jones' drama.

After three weeks work on exterior location for "Old Lady 31" in the vicinity of Sunland, California, the company has returned to the studio in Hollywood to make the interiors. At Sunland, there is a hotel, which fitted the needs of the Metro organization, the building having every appearance of an old fashioned home for elderly ladies. To make the scenes at this location required leaving the studio early every morning and returning after dark each night, as Sunland is about fifteen miles from the Metro plant.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

Hugh Ford arrived at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood this week from New York, having come forth to make one or more productions at the Lasky plant, owing to undesirable conditions at the New York studios of this company.

Charles Maigne and company, who are filming the Robert W. Chambers' story have returned from San Francisco after spending two weeks there. The principals of this cast are Conrad Nagle, Anna Q. Nilsson, Dorothy Davenport and Ruth Helms. Advices and film from the George Melford Company, working on "The Round Up" in the Sierra mountains show that Roscoe Arbuckle is having as much excitement in this melodramatic subject as in slap stick comedies. The pictures show him riding bronchos, burros and long horned cattle, all of which have a great deal of ambition in respect to bucking. In addition, he has had to fight real Indians and carry on frontier warfare. The company will be in the mountains about one week more.

The George Barr McCutcheon story "The City of Masks" is to be the next starring vehicle for Robert Warwick, who has returned to the studio after a short vacation. This will be directed by Thomas D. Heffron.

Wallace Reid is now working in "Sick a Bed" from the Ethel Mumford farce of the same name, which was written for the screen by Clara Canady. Sam Woods, who has directed the past two Reid productions, is in charge of filming this, and Bebe Daniels will continue to be leading woman for Mr. Reid.

Additions to the Famous Players-Lasky Scenario department have made necessary larger quarters and a two story building is now being erected, which will house this department. The research department has also found need of additonal space and a new building has been built, which is in charge of Elizabeth McGaffey. Removal of the research department leaves one entire building of three floors for the Lasky wardrobe department, which makes this the largest of any studio on the coast.

Here and There

Edwin Carewe has been engaged on the editing of "Rio Grande," for the past two weeks, and now plans to leave for New York about January 24 where he will make arrangements for distribution of this as a special production. "Rio Grande" has edited to eight reels, and there is every reason to believe that this size of the production will be retained. Mr. Carewe will be accompanied by his business manager, Lou Jerkowski to New York.

W. A. Howell and Company, making the Ardath Comedies, arrived in Los Angeles last week, and has leased space at the Burston studios where the series of two-reel subjects will be made for the Selznick organization. Mr. Howell was accompanied by the featured comedian, Fred Ardath; George Hollister, cameraman, and Director Frank Thorne. This company plans to remain at the coast until weather conditions in the east are more suitable for filming.

Jesse D. Hampton this week put in production the first of a series of films to be made for Pathe and released as Robert Thornby productions. These will star Blanche Sweet, who has been under the direction of Robert Thornby since she has been playing in pictures for release on the Pathe program.

The first picture will be titled, "Shadowed," which is an adaptation from the society comedy drama story, "Miss Maitland's Secretary." Waldemar Young prepared the continuity and Nigel Barrie has been engaged as leading man for the production. Others who will play in support of Miss Sweet are Christine Mayo, Adele Farrington, Tom Guise, J. P. Lockney and Hayward Mack.

Maurice Tourneur now has moved his producing organization to Universal City, where he has two productions in the making. Mr. Tourneur recently engaged House Peters, and this actor's first vehicle will be "Between Two Thieves," which was prepared for the screen by Stephen Fox, and is being produced under the direction of Clarence L. Brown, a former assistant to Mr. Tourneur.

Mr. Tourneur is directing "The Pavillion on the Links," an adaptation from the Robert Louis Stevenson novel, prepared for the screen by Stephen Fox. This will have an all star cast including John Gilbert, Barney Sherry and June Wilson.

Randolph Bartlett, who recently came to the coast to serve as representative of Photoplay Magazine, has been engaged by Maurice Tourneur to serve as director of publicity, and he has taken up these new duities. Mr. Bartlett was formerly in charge of the pub-

Hunkins

By Samuel G. Blythe

Character of Story: Political story.
Theme: Part of soldiers in politics
Characters: Captain George Talbot; John Talbot, his father; Bill Hunkins, political boss; Tom Prendergast, another boss; Tommie Dowd, lawyer and leader of soldier party; Steve Fox, newspaperman; Charley Elmer, city treasurer; Esther Craw, woman politician; Searle, mayor; Perkins, candidate for mayor; politicians, etc.
The Plot: Captain George Talbot, son of one of the leading business men of his home city, comes back from the war fired with the ambition to enter politics and "clean up the city administration." He has a strong feeling that this can be done with the aid of other returned soldiers. His father does not encourage him in this ambition, but through Steve Fox he meets Tommie Dowd, who has organized the soldiers into a sort of political body. To his surprise he is made candidate for the Board of Aldermen in his district, and is elected to office through the efforts of Hunkins, who does not exact any promises from him. Later Talbot is chosen by Hunkins to make public charges against the city treasurer, who has been lending city funds to Prendergast and his followers, and in so doing left the treasury short by more than one hundred thousand dollars. This precipitates a riot in the city council, which resolves itself into a fight between Prendergast adherents and soldiers led by Tommie Dowd, who have come to defend Talbot. Implicated in this affair is Perkins, one of the directors of the bank of which Talbot is also a director. Perkins is said to be the man selected by Hunkins to run against Searle, the man in office—a Prendergast adherent. Talbot is indignant at Hunkins' choice and warns him that if Perkins is named he will himself take the field as the soldiers' candidate. Perkins is nominated and Talbot declares himself a candidate. A very lively campaign follows, with the soldiers, led by Tommie and Talbot, fighting the Hunkins machine. Esther Crawford is very active in this campaign and thus wins the great admiration of Talbot, who determines to ask her to marry him if he is elected. The night before election Talbot discovers that his father and Hunkins are great friends, that they have framed the whole business to get him interested in politics in the belief that he will make a good mayor and will be able, with the help of the soldiers, to clean up the city —something his father had unsuccessfully attempted to do many years before. Hunkins throws his influence to Talbot at the last moment, and Talbot is elected. He finds that Esther Crawford is already engaged to Tommie Dowd, but is so elated over his election that he does not mind.

Pay Sand

By Victor Lauriston

Character of Story: Drama.
Theme: Love.
Characters: David Wayne, attorney; Honest John Landis; Nellie, his daughter; Harry Egleton, an oil man; Violet Maitland, Wayne's stenographer.
The Plot: David Wayne, attorney, had worked and waited ten years for Nellie Landis, whose father had made their marriage conditional upon Wayne's possession of ten thousand dollars. At thirty Wayne has this amount saved. He kept the fact to himself, however. Egleton, an oil man, had agreed to drill Landis' orchard for oil. Egleton does this and gives out that oil has been found and sells stock in it. Egleton flirts with Nellie much to the distress of Wayne and Nellie seems to enjoy it. Wayne's stenographer is something of a mystery and he resolves to probe her antecedents. Going for a drive at night in his car, on an impulse he follows another machine which mysteriously disappears from the road. His motor stalls and he alights to attend to it. As he takes hold of the crank something strikes him and he loses consciousness. The next thing he knows he finds Violet bending over him. She explains that coming to the office in the morning she waited in vain for him to come in and finally learned that he had gone out in his machine and not returned. Returning to the spot where he was attacked Wayne finds a trail of oil to an oil well in a neighboring township from which Egleton has been taking oil to plant it in the alleged wells in Landis' orchard. Egleton suddenly disappears and it becomes known that there never has been any real oil in the Landis wells. The stockholders threaten to prosecute Landis. Wayne takes his ten thousand dollars and pays off the stockholders to save Landis from jail. Instead of thanking him for this, Nellie accuses him of making an unauthorized use of her father's money—Landis being desperately ill at the time. Violet explains to Nellie that this money did not belong to Landis but to Wayne. Nellie is then indignant that Wayne should have used the money which he had saved up for their wedding. Wayne receives an anonymous letter reflecting upon the antecedents of Violet and goes to investigate, finding it a false clue. In his absence, Egleton returns and induces Nellie to elope with him. Violet, learning of this plan, tries to interest Egleton in herself to distract his attention from Nellie but without success. She then obtains access to the Landis house on the pretense that she is a trained nurse coming to take care of Landis. There she takes a coat and veil and other articles belonging to Nellie and donning these meets Egleton at the appointed spot. She has with her a memorandum pad from Wayne's office on which she hastily scribbled a note just before leaving his office and which, in her excitement, she thrust into her pocket. Returning home in his machine Wayne follows a trail of sheets from this memorandum pad and finds Violet confined in a disreputable house the prisoner of Egleton. Wayne rescues her and she endeavors to send him back to Nellie by telling him he is too late. She then explains her early career; that she had been tricked into marriage with a man who already had a wife and, on learning this, had narrowly escaped falling into the clutches of Egleton and wound up in Wayne's town where she secured references from a clergyman's widow by engaging a room with her and telling her she intended to work for Wayne, at the same time giving Wayne as her reference to the widow. Wayne decides that it is Violet whom he loves after all and finally persuades her to marry him.

Trouble-Plenty

By Charles Alden Seltzer

Character of Story: Western.
Theme: Love; adventure.
Characters: Gail Fane; Bull Cuniff; Lowrey; Jay Corwin; Billy Redmond; Shorty McGuiness and others.
The Plot: Gail Fane, who has been brought up on a ranch in Montana, receives an invitation to visit her uncle in the Southwest. She arrives at the ranch house on the Circle Dot ranch to be told that her uncle is dead. She faints and when she comes to herself she finds two cowboys in the room. These men do not seem to be either very friendly or very respectful. They bring her a note purporting to have been written by her uncle, stating that he is about to commit suicide and that he is leaving her in the care of Jay Corwin of the neighboring village who is to be her guardian and general business manager until such time as she shall come of age. She inquires about Corwin and is told that he is not in the village and will not be back for a day or two. The two men in the room introduce themselves as ranch foreman and straw-boss. Gail is suspicious of them and rightly so, for when she attempts to leave the room they attack her and in spite of her attempts to defend herself with a small caliber revolver, disarm her. She is struggling in the arms of Lowrey when the sound of the shot attracts the attention of Redmond and McGuiness, two riders for the stage company, who are out on the trail of some road agents. These two rush to the ranchhouse and get the drop on the two villains within. Instead of shooting Lowrey and Cuniff, they beat them up. Redmond goes on to the village to look for Corwin and Shorty stays at the ranch to protect the girl. During the night Lowrey and his companion return and in a shooting affray with Shorty they are both killed. Shorty is wounded. Redmond enters the company warehouse with a master key and awakes from his night's sleep to find himself covered by Corwin's revolver. He explains that he is a company man and Corwin puts away his gun, but Redmond sees that he is regarded with suspicion. Corwin takes official charge of the ranch but since Shorty wounded there and being nursed by Gail, he does not move out for the moment. The rest of the story is concerned with the love affair of Shorty and Gail and the tracing down of the robberies to Corwin, a company agent who has been the leader of a band holding up the stage at stated intervals. Shorty is convinced that Corwin is making a great impression upon Gail and also convinced that his own person is too unattractive to give him any hope of winning the love of a beautiful woman. Shorty goes to the rescue of Redmond, for whom Corwin has laid a trap and for a second time proves himself a hero. Redmond's men, however, have outgeneraled the outlaws and Corwin is killed in the battle that follows the clash between the forces of law and the thieves. Shorty returns to find that he has won Gail's love.

The White Mice

By Richard Harding Davis

Character of Story: Adventure.
Theme: South American revolution.
Characters: Rodman Forrester, son of a multi-milionaire; Peter de Peyster, his friend; Sam Caldwell, his father's agent in Venezuela; General Don Miguel Rojas, political prisoner; Senora Rojas, his wife; Inez, his younger daughter; Lolita, the elder sister; President Alvarez; Colonel Pino Vega; Dr. Vicenti; Captain Codman, U. S. Consul.
The Plot: Rodman Forrester and two of his friends have formed a society known as The White Mice with the object of saving human life wherever this can be done adventurously. The idea of the society sprang into being in a Japanese tea house and was at first treated by all as more or less of a joke. Later when Forrester finds himself exiled to Venezuela by his father, acting as a sort of foreman and planting buoys in the harbor, he hears of the sad fate of General Rojas, a national hero, who has been shut away in a fortress by the President, his political enemy. Forrester and his friend determine to set the old man at liberty. Forrester consults the consul, who is a friend of Senora Rojas and her daughters and asks that he help him to secure some sort of credentials from the family of the General, in order that he shall come with Forrester when the latter succeeds in arranging his escape. The consul refuses this and warns Forrester not to mix in politics. He also notifies Roddy's father who telegraphs his agents there to see that his son is shipped out of the way of mischief. In a cafe Roddy saves the life of Colonel Vega by knocking down a would-be assassin. Colonel Vega is a popular idol and is plotting to release Rojas by a revolution aided with funds from the company belonging to Roddy's father, but Forrester knows nothing of this. The family of Rojas hear of Roddy's plans but, with the exception of Inez, fear that he will bungle and make the release of the general impossible. Inez sends for Forrester to come to meet her. They consult and he reads the riddle of a message sent her mother by the prisoner, referring to an epitaph for his tomb and directing her to select it from a certain chapter and verse in a history of Venezuela written by himself. Forrester guesses that this is a suggestion as to how he can be freed and investigation proves that it tells the secret of a tunnel from the prison to a fortress nearby—a tunnel now closed but formerly known to many. Forrester undertakes to effect the escape of the General. Colonel Vega witnesses a meeting between Inez and Roddy and a duel is narrowly averted. Pressure is brought to bear upon Roddy through Caldwell, his father's agent, who is backing Vega for the presidency and planning a revolution in his favor. Roddy learns that Vega and Caldwell do not intend to effect the release of General Rojas though to his family they have pretended that this is the object of their plotting. Senora Rojas, who has great faith in Vega, tries to persuade Roddy to drop all Rojas' affairs and leave the rescue of her husband to the Vega party. Vega and his men are surprised by government agents and Vega is forced to flee. His troops are defeated. Roddy blows a hole through the wall of Rojas' cell and rescues him just as an uprising of sympathizers occurs. The Rojas forces sweep everything before them and Roddy and Inez plight their troth.

The Enemy in His Mouth

By Raymond Ashley

Character of Story: Political.
Theme: Prohibition.
Characters: Major Buford Carborough; Mrs. Carborough; Caroline, their daughter; Kid Burke, ex-prizefighter; Dave Alderson, night bartender; John Merling, prohibition advocate; Bishop Summer; Dr. Boland.
The Plot: Major Buford Carborough of Virginia, scion of a fine old family, has fallen, through his love of drink, to the position of "swamper" or cleaner-out of the Oasis saloon in Toquina City, a mining camp. His only friends are Kid Burke, retired prize-fighter, and Dave Alderson, night bartender. "Maje," as he is generally known, lives a life of alternating alcoholic forgetfulness and regret for his wife and daughter in the East. One day, getting into the cellar where the liquor is stored, he drinks whisky and absinthe in great quantities. The effect is a curious psychological phenomenon. He forgets his recent life and becomes the Buford Carborough he should have been. In this condition he takes the train to the capital of the State, where he meets Bishop Summer and John Merling, prohibition leaders, and makes a speech which becomes a classic and makes him famous. That night he dines with the Bishop and other leaders and is invited to make a speech on June 10th at another political meeting. In the morning he wakes up the swamper and goes back to Toquina City. The same thing happens again and he appears at the meeting on June 10th and makes such a wonderful speech that he is nominated for Governor on the Prohibition ticket. His intimate friends learn of this and they find it necessary to fill him with liquor when the time comes for him to appear as candidate and also when he is elected and must make his appearance to acknowledge the plaudits of the public. Later a big fight arises over the prohibition bill. "Maje" knows that the matter depends upon him and that he can never succeed in getting the bill through if he speaks when he is sober. Once he has almost fallen from grace but has been saved by his friends, Dave pretending to the wife and daughter that he himself is the drunkard although Dave never took a drink in his life. "Maje" has decided to lead a sober life in the future but knows that his only hope and the only hope for other men in his situation is to have the liquor taken from them by law. He also knows that the doctor has said another dose of liquor will kill him. Nevertheless he proceeds to get intoxicated for the purpose of gaining his inspiration and makes the speech of his life, winning the battle for the prohibition forces. As his friends gather to congratulate him he begs to be allowed to go to his study where he falls unconscious on the floor. An examination by the doctor shows that he has suffered a fatal heart attack brought on by his excess and so he dies, as the doctor says, "as much a hero as any who die on the field of battle." Cleared of the suspicion of drunkenness in the eyes of Caroline, Dave and "Maje's" daughter are engaged.

Picture High Lights: Original plot, and since prohibition is now established, hardly to be regarded as propaganda.

A Chancefor Advancement

By Niel Moran

Character of Story: Comedy.
Theme: Advancement.
Characters: Peter Sands; Meg Tracy; Ed. Foster, Silas Scribbens; Pop Toms.
The Plot: Silas Scribbens is a tight-fisted old business man who always holds out to his help "a chance for advancement." The story opens with a number of young men applying for a position as file clerk, an opening which pays twelve dollars a week with a chance for advancement. Peter Sands, from the country, applies for this position and because he is a little different from the general run of the applicants, the old man hires him. Peter finds that the office is filled with clerks who came there because of the prospect of advancement but that none of them has so far succeeded in getting a raise in salary; some of them have feared to ask at all, and those who have asked have either been discharged or so thoroughly frightened by Scribbens that they have ceased to put their hopes into words. Peter gets acquainted with the stenographer, Meg Tracy, and spends most of his evenings with her attending motion pictures or indulging in other comparatively inexpensive forms of entertainment, visiting museums and art galleries when pay day seems far away. Soon, however, she finds that he has mysterious "engagements" for several nights of the week and is much worried by this. She fears that he may have taken to gambling or—even worse—have become interested in some other girl. Peter does not volunteer any information and she is too proud to question him closely. Meg finds that Peter is impatient to get on and warns him that if he does not settle down to work he will never arrive at the top. Peter, however, has other ideas. He strikes Scribbens for an increase in pay at the end of four months, and to the surprise of everyone, particularly old Pop Toms, who in fifteen years has never caught up with his "chance of advancement," Peter gets it. One morning Peter comes to work to find that Meg has gone to Philadelphia for the week end and that a letter from her aunt states that she is ill with pneumonia. The letter does not furnish her address so Peter cannot write her. Scribbens tells Peter to telephone an agency for another stenographer and Peter volunteers the information that he is himself a stenographer—he has been learning it at night. He becomes the secretary of Scribbens and another clerk is put in his place. Peter invests eight hundred dollars in stocks on a tip furnished by Scribbens and makes a financial stake. The office force agrees that Peter has been plotting to get Meg's job and predict that when she returns there will be no opening for her. Meg comes back to find that another man is in Peter's clerkship and that Scribbens has no further use for women stenographers. Peter explains, however, that he has taken the job only to hold it for her, that he has bought a partnership in a brokerage firm and that he needs her in his home. Foster decides to try Peter's method and is fired, but Peter gives him a position at twelve dollars a week with a chance for advancement.

Locale: New York.

Picture High Lights: Very light but rivalry between Peter and Foster could be emphasized sufficiently to add a good deal to the love interest.

The Flamingo's Nest

By R. Sprague

Character of Story: Melodramatic romance.

Theme: High finance.

Characters: Kenneth Crane, attorney; John Carding, confidential agent of sugar planters; Lieutenant Sherrill, army officer; Charley Deane, secretary and attorney for the X Sugar Company; Captain John Coburn, a sea-captain and stockholder; Frank Atten, officer of X Sugar Company;. Professor Burl; Wanto, a Japanese; Miss Burl.

The Plot: Kenneth Crane sails for Honolulu from San Francisco representing the minority stockholders in the great X Sugar Company which has been making a great deal of money for several years but which has paid no dividends whatever to its stockholders. Action in court has failed to relieve the situation of the minority stockholders who are particularly incensed by the fact that the officers of the company are living in luxury and drawing large salaries. Crane is deputized to see what can be done about this situation and knowing that his legal remedies are few he undertakes to wean away the Japanese labor of the plantation, the men being dissatisfied because they claim to have been beaten out of some of their wages. For making an offer of employment to labor under contract, Crane is lodged in jail but speedily released on bail. Then begins a series of thrilling adventures in which Crane sometimes has the better of the planters and sometimes they have the better of him. Crane captures the principal officers of the company, aided by his Japanese, and carries them off into the country where he makes them prisoners in an empty bungalow. While there he gives them the choice of receiving the bastinado at the hands of the Japanese or holding an election and making him President of the company in addition to paying the Japanese what they desire and declaring a dividend for the minority stockholders. After one or two experiences they agree and sign the papers but this is no sooner done than John Carding arrives with a force of Koreans and overcomes the Japanese who are made prisoners in turn. Crane escapes but is hunted down with blood hounds in the sugar cane and barely escapes by grasping a rope thrown out of an airship by his friend Lieutenant Sherrill. A shot severs the rope to which he is clinging and he descends by parachute falling into the hands of his enemies. The owner of the bngalow returns and liberates the sugar men before the arrival of Carding but being a minority stockholder, ties them up again. When Crane again falls into the hands of the planters the latter decide to torture all of their prisoners in the torture chamber of the old royal palace and afterward make away with them. A party of tourists accompanied by Sherill discover this and Captain Coburn comes to the rescue with his sailors, making the sugar men prisoners for the third time. This time Crane makes them work in the field and is planning to transport them to California for a year when they escape. A native Hawaiian, who has been badly treated by them, leads them over a precipice and thus they are easily eliminated from the story. Crane becomes the President of the company in fact.

The Hidden Kingdom

By Cathrene and Robert Pinkerton

Character of Story: Romance.

Theme: A lost kingdom in Canada.

Characters: Arley Carr; Ross Burton; Arnold Fairfield, known in Darewold as Adam Codner; Edna West; The King; Princess Helen; Prince Acton and others.

The Plot: This is the somewhat improbable story of the adventures that befell two Americans in a lost kingdom in Canada where five hundred people in a secluded valley, descendants of a lost expedition sent out by the Hudson Bay Company, maintain a separate state unknown to the outside world. Arley Carr falls in love with a girl behind the cigar counter in a New York hotel. She is kidnapped by Arnold Fairfield and carried off to the Canadian Northwest. Accompanied by his friend, Ross Burton, Carr follows. After many hard adventures in a barren country these two chance on a hidden valley formed by a fissure in the earth surrounded by high hills. Here they discover a community of about five hundred people, ruled by a democratic king, using the conveniences of modern civilization and keeping in touch with the outside world through a confidential agent in the person of Adam Codner, who is none other than the Arnold Fairfield, who kidnapped the girl in New York. Ross immediately falls in love with the Princess Helen. Codner, suspicious, accuses the two Americans of being agents sent by outsiders to disrupt the country. They are imprisoned but released on the appeal of the Princess and the King agrees to sanction the marriage of Ross and the Princess if Ross will agree to remain permanently in the kingdom of Darewold. This he refuses to do, but says he will stay for a time. The kingdom lives upon the proceeds of a gold mine and what fruits and grain and vegetables the natives can raise in the valley. The gold mine is supposed to be giving out and the King is greatly distressed over the situation. Codner is plotting a revolution which he expects will make him Dictator when he intends to sell the mine to New York financiers and inform the Canadian authorities of the existence of the state. He attempts to make Prince Acton his tool in this matter, telling his fellow conspirators that the Prince will be put on the throne when the old King is dethroned. He also spreads the rumor that the King is about to sell out his people and that the two Americans are the emmissaries of the outside powers who would destroy Darewold. A rebellion breaks out and is very nearly successful, the King and the Americans falling into Codner's hands but they are set free and the revolt crushed by Prince Acton. Codner escapes and blows up the dam flooding the valley in which all of their produce is grown. It is finally decided that the entire kingdom will have to be moved to some other spot, the King abdicating and the community as a whole settling in a fertile valey in the Northwest. Ross and Carr are appointed agents to prepare the way for the migration. Ross and Princess Helen are married just before the Americans leave.

Locale: Canada.

Picture High Lights: There is plenty of room for the exercise of a director's imagination in preparing backgrounds for this; lots of action.

Last Week We Met—A Big Man

H. H. Cudmore

WHO is there that doesn't know the rotund, good-natured man pictured in the illustration, and who is there that has not been entertained with one of his inimitably told stories. Well, anyway, here is a "little" anecdote which has been told on him, a story that describes him better than words.

It seems that the tremendously rapid increase in his business has kept him chained to his desk to the point where he has been unable to give much thought to even such matters of personal pride and pleasure as the buying of a new car. The entire family had decided that they wanted an enclosed car for the winter. The good wife was delegated a committee of one to select a suitable conveyance to make the family fully enjoy winter driving regardless of the weather man. She promptly selected and purchased a fine new Jordan brougham.

The first evening she drove downtown, parked the new car in the garage, called for friend husband and together they went to the theater. After the theater they proceeded immediately, with a feeling of pride and satisfaction, to inspect the new purchase. A quick casual observation brought forth many congratulatory remarks to friend wife on her wonderful selection. Friend husband decided that it would be a real thrill to drive home himself. He promptly opened the foredoor and proceeded to seat himself behind the wheel.

Then it happened!

With all the thought and ingenuity of the engineers who designed the most beautiful body, they apparently overlooked entirely the fact that perhaps at some time a fat man might wish to buy and drive a Jordan brougham. He couldn't get in, without practicing some regular Houdini tricks, and as he said, "practically stand on his head." Of course the bubble "busted" and it was up to friend wife the next day to start on another search for an enclosed ca rthat would accommodate the entire family.

This big man is Herbert Henry Cudmore, "the living example of how far skin could stretch without breaking," President and General Manager of The Argus Enterprises, Inc., Cleveland, manufacturers and providers of "Everything in Motion Pictures." The History of Good Fellowship tells that Cudmore came into the world a Barefooted Boy on Friday the 13th of October in the year of (Oh, what does it matter).

There has always been a dispute about the place where he was born. Folks in Cleveland say he was born in Hubbard (Yes, Reader, this is the name of a place not a wrapper) and the few remaining citizens of Hubbard are equally certain that Cudmore was born in Cleveland.

Anyway he came into the world without his consent and expects to go out the same way.

When very young he rolled into an electrical shop, bought a door bell, a set of dry batteries, and a nickel's worth of bell wire (which would cost a dollar now) put it up in his mother's house and it worked. The General Electric Company heard of this and made him General Manager of one of its many Mazda Lamp Sales Divisions called The Brilliant Electric Division, probably named after Cudmore. Anyway he fooled them in this way for many years until they decided they better give him the lamp business because he would get it anyway sooner or later, so they elected him Director of The Mazda Bureau of The General Electric Company in charge of Mazda General Electric publicity.

In 1917 Cudmore met Oscar M. Sheck, inventor of the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda Projector Lamps, a device used to adapt existing carbon-arc motion picture projection machines to the use of the newly developed Mazda Projector Lamps.

It did not take long for Cudmore to see the possibilities for developing a big business in this line, so he walked out and left The General Electric Company flat.

Then came into existence The Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, and from a small start in 1917 they have organized and developed several big progressive companies, namely, The Argus Motion Picture Company, The Argus Theater Supply Division, The DeVry Portable Projector Company, all operated by The Argus Enterprises, Inc., capitalized at half a million dollars. Their slogan "Everything in Motion Pictures" conveys to what extent the several companies are influencing, enlarging and improving the whole motion picture industry. The plans of this organization for the future are most pretentious and promise an exceptionally big business for Argus.

Cudmore says that he has only practiced the moral taught by the Fishermen of Old who went out in the open sea, each with his single rod and line and returned each night each with his own single catch. But a wise man among them, the first real co-operator, conceived the plan of all setting nets and dividing the catch. So Cudmore wrote a little poem setting forth his creed which has been the foundation of his success.

CUDMORE'S POEM

The man who uses but hook and line
  Pulls in a single fish.
He who joins hands and pulls a seine
  Gets all that he could wish.
Also, his catch is greater far
  In size as well as weight;
The secret of success is this—
  Co-operate!

Crandall's York Theatre, Washington, D.C.

HARRY M. CRANDALL'S contribution to the spirit of Holiday merrymaking in Washington, D. C., was the firm establishment as one of the most noteworthy amusement enterprises in the National Capital of the York Theatre, eighth in his chain of photoplay houses. The York was first thrown open to the public at 6:30 P. M. on the night of Wednesday, November 26th, Thanksgiving eve, and leaped into instant favor as the means of filling a long felt and urgent want in the section of the city in which it is located.

The York is a residential theatre situated on Georgia Ave., N. W., where it occupies the entire square between Princeton and Quebec Streets. It has a frontage of 150 feet on Georgia Avenue, and 75 feet on the intersecting streets. The seating arrangements, all on one floor, have a comfortable capacity of 1,000. The cost of the building alone was in excess of $125,000. Numerous innovations have been introduced into the design and construction of the building by the architect, Reginald Wyckliffe Geare, of Washington, D. C., who has previously designed several theatres for the Crandall interests, the most important of which are the Metropolitan and Knickerbocker Theatres in the Capital and Crandall's Strand, now in course of construction in Cumberland, Md. The Strand is an 1,800 seat house which, with the Colonial in Connellsville, Pa., expands the Crandall chain to ten active theatres.

Crandall's York Theatre, Nat Glasser, Manager.

The exterior of the York Theatre is treated on three sides with a series of arches about 6 feet wide and 15 feet high in the center of each of which is located a three-sheet poster display board electrically lighted from in front by an overhanging X-ray bracket. There are seven display boards indicating the picture schedule for the seven days of the week. The material of the exterior is beige-toned brick while the arches are finished in marble-cement stucco, which is a new method of treating the exterior of monumental buildings. This treatment gives the effect of variegated marble. The walls of the building are of brick and hollow tile, while the gypsum roof, the first to be put on any theatre in the East, is supported by steel trusses. One of the chief advantages of the gypsum roof is its low heat conductivity which insures economical warmth in the winter and coolness in the summer. It is also the most effectively fireproof of any roofing substance known. Needless to say, the York is fireproof throughout, which is the usual policy of the Crandall enterprises and a hobby with Mr. Crandall personally.

The entrance to the York is located at the North end of the building facing Georgia Avenue and i protected from the weather by a segmental glas Marquise extending to the curb. The segment o the Marquise follows the line of the large segmental arch 25 feet in length which forms the entrance to the vestibule where the ticket booth i located. The ticket booth is of bronze and glass and is built into the front wall of the lobby. Acces to the lobby is gained by two doors on either sid of the ticket booth, the lobby being 20 feet wide 50 feet long and 30 feet high. The unusual heigh of the ceiling insures adequate ventilation. Th lobby walls which are finished in soft green tone are panelled with gilt mouldings. Set into th walls at either side of the lobby, but not occupyin any of the floor space, are four one-sheet self-lighting poster frames, which is declared by movin picture men to be the most beautiful method o lobby poster and photograph display yet invente At the end of the lobby opposite to the entrance is large crystal mirror with circular top in front o which is a marble seat. EDWARD EARL, PRESIDENT sub-divided with brass poles and chains for handling the crowds with safety and dispatch.
NINETY GOLD ST. NEW YORK, N Y

The auditorium of the York which is 30 feet high is rectangular in shape with side walls divided into panels by seven arches. At the center of each of the arches and hung from a point in line with the spring of the arch is a large oval gilt picture frame with gold ribbons displaying pastels of the leading stars of silent drama. This note of color gives to the auditorium a domestic touch which is so lacking in most of the theatres of today.

The screen is located in the center of three proscenium arches. The two side arches are so arranged as to afford special effects in scenery and scenic lighting. The arches are arranged in a semi-ellipse, which is crowned by a scenic sky scene electrically lighted from behind. The color note in the auditorium is a combination of gold and soft olive greens, four or five tones of which are used. The curtains for the three proscenium arches were designed especially for the York by the architect and are made of gold "Baronet" satin, relieved with applique, which is done in black, silver and blue.

The lighting system of the auditorium is, without doubt, the most unique in existence. Between each of the seven pairs of pilasters that relieve the conventional arches of the side walls are located gold and green lamb's heads which are in keeping with the style of architecture, and upon the heads are mounted frosted glass urns, decorated in ivory and gold. The urns are lighted by colored lamps, screwed into place on the inside. This light is continued throughout the showing of the pictures. In the ceiling of the auditorium there are ten glass panels, measuring 6 feet by 18 feet, the frames of which are in bronze. The glass is a soft amber tone for Cathedral lighting. Above these glass panels in the roof space are fifty-six 100-Watt lamps with reflectors directed downward, which diffuse a soft amber glow of sufficient brightness to permit the reading of a newspaper in any part of the house without in the least impairing the clearness of the picture upon the screen. Since the opening of the York this system of lighting has been declared ideal, since it throws all of the light upon the horizontal plane—that is, seats and aisles—at the same time illuminating the entire auditorium evenly. The lamps are arranged on three separate circuits, allowing for the use of full intensity, secondary intensity and low intensity. The lamps on the circuit giving the lowest intensity have been so graded in size as to furnish a very little value of illumination at the front of the house and a higher value at the rear.

Another distinctive feature of the York is found in the heating and ventilating system, especially designed for it by Mr. Geare and patterned after the systems in use in Crandall's Metropolitan and Knickerbocker Theatres, in both of which it has proved a great success. Heat is introduced without the use of radiators or mushrooms and can be regulated to any desired temperature, the audience being constantly supplied with fresh warm air in the winter and by the same system cool air in the summer. The equipment is capable of producing a complete change of atmosphere twice per minute.

Another feature worthy of mention is the orchestra pit, which in the York is located under the stage at a level two feet below the floor of the auditorium, from which it is separated by a monumental bronze railing.

The York was built by the Kennedy Brothers, under the direct supervision and with the assistance of Mr. Geare, the designing architect, and is under the management of Mr. Nat Glasser, a well known figure in Washington's amusement world. Mr. Glasser has been identified with the exhibiting end in the Capital previously, although at the time of his joining the Crandall organization he was a member of the staff of the Washington branch of Select Pictures Corporation.

The York's policy contemplates daily changes of bill with only the best of the photodramatic output of the foremost producers as features of each daily program.

Something New in Fans for Theatre and Lobby Decorations

HERETOFORE the electric fan has been designed solely for utility, and, though the better grades have graceful lines and fine finishes, all makes have been kept plain and devoid of ornamentation. This simplicity is suitable for the great majority of purposes for which the fan is used, but there is now a growing demand for fans that will harmonize with the handsome furnishings of hotels, clubs, theatres, offices, and private residences.

Doric Theatre Installs Specail Organ

A KIMBALL ORCHESTRAL ORGAN, made especially for the theatre, has been installed in the Doric Theatre, Kansas City. The organ is one of the finest and most resourceful in the country and is capable of producing under the expert playing of Mrs. May Mills, every known musical sound from the quiet of a recessional or a bird cry to the trumpet notes of a marine band.

The organ was rushed to completion for the entertainment of Kansas Citians during the holiday season. It will no doubt make the Doric one of the most popular theatres in the city.

All this week "The Alpine Storm" with realistic curtain effects consisting of a storm with "real lightning" in the mountains will be played at all de luxe performances.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest 1920 catalogue. Write us today.

Reducing Operating Expenses and Attracting Bigger Patronage

This is being accomplished by hundreds of motion picture theatres, simply by using the modern light source—the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP for motion picture projection.

It is made in two sizes—the 900-watt for general motion picture theatre projection service and the 600-watt for short throws as in clubs, churches, colleges, etc. The latter size is also used on country home lighting outfits.

Other advantages of this lamp are, simplicity of operation and elimination of carbon gas, dust and heat—advantages which appeal to every projectionist.

Let us tell you more about WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMPS for motion picture projection and how you can adapt your present equipment to this new light source.

Equipment Operating — Projection, Questions Answered

Correction!

In the Equipment Section, issue of December 15, there appeared an article by Dr. Hermann Kellner on "Condensers" accompanied by two illustrations. Through an unfortunate error, two cuts were selected which had no bearing on the text matter. We regret this mistake and republish the article in this issue with correct illustrations.

A Few Notes on Condensers by a Man Who Knows

By DR. HERMANN KELLNER

(Excerpts From the Transactions of the Soc. Picture Engineers)

ON account of spherical aberration in the ordinary condenser, the rays coming from the source and passing through its marginal zone, intersect the optical axis nearer the aperture plate and under a much great angle than the rays passing through the center of the condenser. If the diameter of the lens is not large enough, it happens that some of the rays coming through the marginal zone of the condenser are not intercepted by the lens and, therefore, lost for the illumination on the screen. This is illustrated in the first figure.

Such loss may be avoided in two ways:

1st. By making the aperture of the lens large enough to collect those rays or by keeping the aperture the same as before and bringing the rear combination of the lens so close to the aperture plate that the lens intercepts the rays otherwise lost, in other words by reducing the working distance.

2d. By reducing the spherical aberration of the condenser so that the rays coming through the margin of the condenser pass through the lens.

The first remedy is not very inviting to the lens computer, nor to the lens maker. The greater the aperture of the lens in proportion to its equivalent focal length, the more difficult it is to correct the aberration and the more difficult it is to produce the lens, and also the more sensitive such lens is to small variations in the adjustment of the machine.

A lens with shorter working distance can be constructed by adding a third combination. This has the disadvantage of additional loss of light by reflection and absorption in the added member, amount to 10%, which will have to be subtracted from the amount gained by the shorter working distance.

The working distance may also be shortened in a two-combination projection lens by increasing the distance between the combinations. This, however, has also difficulties of its own.

It seems to me more logical to leave the projection lens alone and remedy the evil by using a condenser that sends through the projection objective all the light which it collects from the source. For this purpose we must reduce the spherical aberration of the condenser to such an extent that the rays coming through the margin of the condenser intersect the optical axis near enough to the objective to be intercepted by the latter and thus contribute to the illumination on the screen. This is illustrated by the dotted lines in Fig. 2. The full lines show the path of the rays through the central and marginal zone of fully-corrected condenser.

I have here a model of a projection apparatus which shows very nicely the condition under discussion. These are interchangeable condenser systems, consisting of the same number of lenses and having the same equivalent focus and aperture. One of these condensers is spherically corrected and produces a small distinct image of the source, while the non-corrected one shows at the same distance a diffused image of the source surrounded by a broad circular halo. The outer zone of this halo which falls outside of the circumference of the projection lens is, of course, lost.

It is evident that with the spherically corrected condenser a lens of very much smaller diameter would be sufficient to give the same illumination on the screen as the large lens in combination with a non-corrected condenser.

I must confess that I cannot quite reconcile the figures of the loss given by Mr. Richardson and Mr. Burrows with an experience I had several years ago.

A short working distance lens was submitted to me * * * It was claimed that this lens showed an increase of illumination of about 100 per cent. on the screen. A comparison between this lens and a lens of the ordinary type was made in the following way:

In the booth of one of the theatres of Rochester two machines of the same make and type were placed side by side and run under as nearly as possible the same conditions, using the same size carbons, keeping the current the same, etc. The fields projected by the lenses in competition could be compared side by side on the screen. Under similar conditions the new lens was supposed to show 100 per cent. superiority in the illumination. The originator of the short working distance lens, himself, adjusted the machines, as well as for another comparison, the operator of the theatre and afterward a third impartial person. It goes without saying that the objectives also were changed from one machine to another. The judges sat in the orchestra too far away from the booth to know what was going on in the booth. The result was that no one could definitely tell which lens was illuminating the one field or the other. There were slight differences in the illumination but they were caused evidently by accidental conditions and did not at all depend upon the lenses.

A Cartoonist-Projectionist

DID we hear someone say, some time ago, that a projectionist gets into a rut and isn't interested in any other kind of work? Well, maybe it's true—and then again, maybe—

Anyway, here is an instance where the "man behind the arc" is also the "man behind the pen." Leslie F. Clark works at projecting because it holds a certain fascination for him but in his regular time he runs a Cartoon-Service. In a recent letter he says:

I am enclosing a cartoon which I drew up, based on the habit of some operators and projectionists smoking in the projection room. It has been some time since I dropped a letter to you but I just had to let you know how I admired the way the NEWS stood up during the New York printers' strike.

The theatre here has changed hands and is now known as the De Luxe. It has a Powers 6A which I run in my spare time. You see, I can't stay away from the game.

There is just one trouble that I have in my machine. The carbons work loose in the carbon holders after showing two or three reels.

The Pathe Exchange in Kansas City has a way of sending out their films that I like and it would be a good thing if other Exchanges would copy their scheme. After a film has been rewound, inspected and cleaned, the person who does the inspection puts the wrapper on and seals it with a seal which states that the reel of "film has been inspected and cleaned" and gives in addition the name of the inspector.

These Questions Will Be Discussed if Possible

FROM a well informed projectionist who desires to have his name withheld from publication there comes an excellent list of questions which in his opinion, are the ones in which the majority of other projectionists are interested. The list seems to us to have been well compiled and we hasten to add that answers will be published as fast as data can be obtained.

However, there are one or two instances wherein we must disappoint the seeker after information. We refer to the Master Machine. Up to the present time, the manufacturers of this device have not seen fit to give out any details except those contained in their paid advertising which has appeared in other papers but not in the NEWS. To the man who wants real facts on this new machine there is nothing to say except "Guess you will have to wait." The letter reads as follows:

"Could you not give us detailed description of the New Master Projector, giving movement, diameter of shutter, distance from shutter spindle to center of light beam and the approximate cost and labor to change shutter to a 1½ to 1 should local conditions permit its use. Describe condenser mount and its guard against condenser breakage. Tell us the greatest possible distance from condenser to aperture. What is the ventilation of the lamp house and many of the other things that go to make up a real projector.

Could you not get a statement from the projector manufacturer, Powers, Simplex, Motiograph and Baird as to why they will continue to make slide carriers, lamphouse shifting devices and stereo holders when 90 per cent of the projectors in use are not used for stereo projection. Those attachments are just a general nuisance to the projectionist.

You might invite letters from projectionists as to the location of the appliances in the projection room and also the location of dimmer handles so as to be handiest for the projectionists to use without interfering with the screen results.

Tell us the correct size for ports and location of same, both for level and angle projection. Tell us about amperage control, about speed control (when one man runs two machines) change over devices and different ways of closing up the light beam to eliminate eye-strain.

I could write dozens of things which seem to be overlooked but still remain very important."

Started With Old Edison Machine

W. W. WHITE, Crescent Theatre, Pittsford, N. Y., writes in to become a member of the League and incidentally tells something of his early experiences in the profession. The letter following his own communication is a copy of one which he sent to the F. P. L. Corp. Exchange in Buffalo. It would seem from the size and scope of this producing firm that they would drop the old methods such as are exhibited every time their exchanges inspect a reel, and bring their practice up to date. It might be added here that the matter of using the stencil punch has been taken up with the home office of this company but without result. They still believe that the marks are necessary and are not open to argument.

My application for membership in the N. A. M. L. is enclosed. I have been watching its progress from the time of its inception and have been practising the rules laid down by it, although delaying to become a member.

A few words would not be amiss here in regard to the help which the Projection Dept. has been to me. My career as a projectionist began about six years ago at the age of fourteen. I was under the guidance of an "operator" for a period of perhaps eight months when I was put in complete charge of the one Edison, Type B projector then in use. You will probably say that I was too young and to that I must agree. It was here that the Motion Picture News took charge of my instruction. Through constant study of its articles and some help from the Hawkins Electrical Guides, I have attained what I feel to be the right to the title of "projectionist." (Please accept this as a tribute to the dept. and not as a brag on my part.)

Our equipment now consists of two Powers 6A machines, one motor driven and the other hand driven. The current used is A. C. thru a Bell & Howell Compensator. We get a very satisfactory picture with 55 amperes and White A. C. Special carbons. Length of throw, 70 ft., picture 9' x 12'.

I feel that brother York is slightly misinformed when he states that most small town theatres are using only one projector. Our seating capacity is 250 in a town of 1,300. I failed to find any illustration of his novel shutter in connection with his letter in the News of December 27th.

The enclosed carbon copy of a letter is self explanatory. Most of the features received from them are so marked but this is an extreme case.

(Copy of Letter)

The enclosed film clippings are a few of the 31 which we removed from the feature "The Little Princess," shown here last Saturday evening. It seems a crime that such mutilation should take place at the hands of your employes. No manager or projectionist who takes any pride in the quality of the show he is putting on would think of letting these white blotches appear on the screen.

The thirty one pieces which we removed average three frames each, making a total of ninety-nine frames or about seventy inches of film. If your exchange now proceeds to apply the punch in the same manner as previously and a succeeding projectionist takes out the effects, it will be readily seen how fast this feature will be reduced in length.

This show was inspected by "C. M."

Some of letters of former date on subjects of this kind have remained unanswered. Please have the courtesy to reply to this, that we may know your ideas on this matter.

Proper Way to Handle Transverter

A. H. Erwin, Ponca City, Okla., writes:

Would you please tell me which is the proper way to put out one arc when burning two arcs on a Transverter. I have had several discussions on the matter. Some projectionists say that the switch should be thrown in while others say to freeze the carbons and then throw in your switch. Which way is easier on the Transverter?

Reply:

As the article on the Transverter which appeared in a recent issue of the News said, "the machine itself is practically fool-proof." Its characteristics are such that the procedure may be carried out in any sequence. But a little thought will show that there is a best way as regards the carbons and that way is to throw the switch. By so doing you will not spoil the crater which would occur if the carbons were brought together too violently.

After the shortcircuiting switch has been thrown and the arc is out of the circuit it might be a good idea to bring the carbons nearly together so that when you were ready to start the machine on the next reel it would require but a half turn of the adjusting handle to strike the arc. But this is a minor point. The answer to your question is: when through with the arc thrown the switch.

Says the "Kid Operator" Should be Blamed

LEWIS C. WESTINBARGER, Whitestone, Indiana, doesn't agree with many others as to the place where crimes against films are committed. He feels that the trouble should be sought in those theatres where youngsters in short trousers are attempting to run the machines. Mr. Westinbarger says:

I have been a reader of the Projection Dept. of the News now for a little more than a year and I am sending in an application for membership of the National Anti-Misframe League, I hope you will receive me as a member and send me a pin and some N. A. M. L. stickers for film cans. I have always tried to remedy all Mis-Frames, Bad Patches, and most of all, "Punch holes," and I am sure that when Film leaves me it is in as good a shape as it was when I received it and if not better. I am not working in a theatre at the present time as I am going to High School and can not get my lessons and work nights. I have a Powers machine in A1 condition and have been running pictures for Schools and Churches.

I have read Brother Waldo's article in the Nov. 6th issue of the News and I want to say that I think he is right, the city man and the small town man should split the blame of the punch marks. The fellows they should get after are the small town "Kid Operators", some of whom are not over 14 years old. Is it not these Kid operators doing the dirty work of making punch holes for us fellows to cut out and fix up. If a person would happen to look into one of these 14 year olds booth one of the first things he would notice is that the floor has not been swept for a month, you would see an over-dose of oil on his machines, his tools will be laying right where he used them last, that is, all except his punch and you will always find that hanging on a nail just above his rewinding table. If only these kid operators would spend as much time in mending and fixing up the film as they do in destroying it everything would be O. K. Outside of all these bad patches, punch-holes and frame-ups, I haven't said as to how many "Souvenirs" they help themselves to from the Films, but I will say "What causes so many splices in the Close-Up of a Bathing Beauty, or movie star?" Ask the Kid Operator, he knows.

Lucas Opens Texas Branch

PERHAPS no greater instance of progressiveness in the distribution of machines and supplies has ever been displayed than that showed by the leading spirits controlling the affairs of the Lucas Theatre Company of Texas.

This branch of the well-known Lucas Company, whose headquarters are familiar to exhibitors of the Southland was opened for business on June 1st, 1919. Its officers are Harry K. Lucas, President; L. M. Remy, Vice-President and E. J. Callahan, Secretary, Treasurer and Manager.

The headquarters of the Texas branch are located at 1816 Main Street, Dallas, and are fitted up in a manner that is hard to equal. Included in the establishment is a highly efficient repair department as well as a full line of the highest type of theatre equipment that is marketed.

Mr. E. J. Callahan, General Manager of the Dallas office, is no stranger to theatre men in Texas and neighboring states, for his previous connections with the Superior Electric Company brought him into contact with the most prominent exhibitors and his advice on electrical matters is eagerly sought by those contemplating either the changing over of theatre buildings or the erection

DEPARTMENT 20

The Biggest Little Thing in the World

Some of the Reasons Why Screw Holes Will Be Bought and Used and Not Become Dead Stock for Anyone

1—They can be used without damage to receiving material

2—They enable you to standardize to wood or machine screws in all material.

3—They are made of brass and will not rust under atmospheric or moisture conditions.

4—ECONOMY—They save more time value than the holes cost.

5—You get them for nothing and are paid for using them when you count time saved.

6—Screw holes have been needed ever since the first screw was used.

7—Special tools are NOT needed in using them in any material.

8—They can be used in any place a screw can be used.

9—By using screw holes, screws can be used in many places, and in many materials where it is impossible to use screws without them

10—These are the only ready-made screw holes in the world

11—No special screws are needed. These screw holes fit any wood screw or machine screw now in stock.

12—They make the neatest possible job in any material.

13—Every store where screws are sold must carry them in stock, because the line of screws is not complete without screw holes for them

14—Every shop and factory where screws are used must also have these screw holes to fit the screws.

15—They are endorsed by all dealers in screws and by all users of screws.

16—Screw holes are entirely new and the world supply is yet to be furnished.

17—This is a progressive Old World of ours, and every active person in it must adopt all improved methods, and all new articles that will help him keep in the front line of progress.

18—Be among the first to stock up in screw holes if you are a dealer in screws.

19—Be among the first to install screw holes in your shop or factory, as you begin to save money soon as you use them.

20—In spite of the high cost of brass, screw holes are yet cheap.

21—We are letting the world know that screw holes can now be secured, by means of extensive advertising in all the principal Trade Journals that have the largest circulation among dealers in screws as well as users of screws.

22—Do not let your customer ask you for screw holes before you have them in stock. BE A LIVE WIRE.

23—They make everlasting holes in any material.

24—They mean "Plug-No-More" screw holes.

25—They are the result of Necessity being The Mother of Invention

26—Anyone who can drive a nail can use screw holes

27—Send for a sample and convince yourself.

28—Mechanics who see them say, "What do you think of that?"

29—In fact there are NO REASONS why screw holes should NOT be used

Each of these reasons are enough to sell Screw Holes. There are many other reasons

What Do You Think of It?

SOME time ago G. Waldo, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, sent to the News a drawing and description of an oil protector which he had devised for the Simplex friction drive. As such things will happen, even in the best regulated editorial rooms, the well made drawings disappeared before we could call them to the attention of Mr. Edwin S. Porter, who has been responsible for many of the latest Simplex improvements. When this laxity on our part was called to Mr. Waldo's attention he obligingly offered to redraw his device. We were extremely hopeful of his second attempt and saw personally that they reached the Simplex factory.

Very soon after submitting the idea to the Precision Machine Co. the following letter was received from them:

"We thank you very much for allowing us to see Mr. Waldo's suggestion. We would ask you, however, to notify Mr. Waldo that while his idea seems a very good one from our casual observance, we are eliminating the difficulty he speaks of through other methods."

Below we print the inventor's descriptive letter together with his drawings. Any comments that readers of the department wish to make will be received by Mr. Waldo, we feel certain in stating, with the best of grace.

Service Equipment Dept.

Dear Sir:

I am enclosing the drawing of Simplex friction drive showing how the oil protector is attached. I hope that this drawing reaches you O. K., as I have had the other two lost. Not that I do not like to draw them, as it is a little something out of the regular line of the projectionist.

No. 1 is the shaft.
No. 2 housing caring fiber disc.
No. 3 fiber disc.
No. 4 oil disc.
No. 5 Oil hole in housing.
No. 6 gear at end of housing.
No. 7 thrust washers.
No. 8 set screw.
No. 9 control frame.
No. 10 slide for sliding bar.
No.11 dimensions of oil disc.
No. 12. After cuting out center and outside of disc cut as in No. 12 and spring over the gear No. 6 and slide to ¼ inch past No. 5. You are now ready to solder to the housing, being sure that you have the housing and the disc clean so that the solder will stick to them. First solder all around the housing; then with a pair of pliers bend the outer edge in towards the gear. You may also use a piece of hardwood about ¼ in. x ½ in. x 6 in. and saw a slot ¼ in. deep in one end as in No. 13. Oh, I don't mind the thirteen as I carry a thirteen in my pocket every day. Have a pocket piece the size of a nickel with a thirteen on it. Slide the slot over the oil disc and bend towards gear. When you have the disc bent to suit you cut No. 12 so that the edges are even and then solder it up. Then your troubles with slipping drive are over.

This I think will explain it better than I did before and if the Simplex people think it is worth anything for an oil protector they can very easily attach it to the housing when they are turned out. Hope that you will think well of this, I remain as ever and will try to send some other things from time to time.

Yours truly,
G. WALDO.

Projectionist Metz Seeking Health and Work in West

MOVED again. Kindly change my address on your mailing list, to above place (California) and send back enclosed (old and receipted) bill with a "new one like it" (that is, at the same SPECIAL price) as per your agent's agreement at time of my subscription, at which time I was Treasurer (and charter member and assistant organizer to M. A. Carney and John M. West) of Local 244 I. A. T. S. E. At present time I hold an honorable withdrawal card from Local 244, as I have "left" the machine operating game for the present on account of "ill health" (eyes and nerves, etc., need rest).

So you can see for the present I am on a "vacation." Spent about $150 to get here, and about forty dollars since. ($2.00 a day is plenty to spend here for good room and board). Have been here about twenty days, (17 to be exact), "landed" here Sunday night at 9 o'clock, November 9, 1919. Came by Southern Pacific R. R., by way of New Orleans.

Haven't found a job as yet although newspapers and Y. M. C. A. employment office blackboards are full of them. But I suppose nobody wants a "sickly looking Eastern Guy."

But now I feel and look almost Western, due to the fact that I "hit the air," last Sunday at Venice and I'm now all "dolled up" with a pink complexion obtained by a few hours at the seashore.

Hope that good California air works its wonders with you and that the position when you get it will be more than a good one. And while you're out there in the sun don't forget us back here in the ol' wind and wet snow.

Incandescent Voltage Varies

AS this is my first letter to the News I will make it as short as possible. I have one question I would like to ask. We use Powers' machines with their Excelite equipment and when I first light up the lamps the Compensarc shows 30 amperes and then slowly moves back to 20. I have been using the Excelite but a short time and wish to ask if it should do this.

If it is our duty to cut out misframes and bad patches I am surely doing mine. Last week we received a film from Alabama and I had to cut out eleven patches from ½ to ¾ inches wide. Of course none of them was framed. Naturally I hope to see the time when there will be no misframes.

Reply:

You evidently have the G-E Compensarc known as the "Lynn Transformer" and one of the types put out early in the game. Your specific question was put to Mr. Freeman Barnes of the Edison Lamp Works, who is the authority there on Mazda projection and he replies, as follows:

"With the early type of Compensarc there was a tendency for the moving element if loose to tend to turn back into the "off" position. This, of course, would account for the dropping of the ammeter. By tightening the nut on the side of the Compensarc opposite from the handle this slipping-back can generally be overcome."

We are sure that Mr. Barnes' analysis can be depended upon. If, however, you should get no relief kindly write us again and we will take up the matter at greater length.

Installing Mazda

D. L. P.; Tiptonville, Tenn., says:

Enclosed you will find N. A. M. L. application blank—filled out.

I want to praise your wonderful magazine. There is no other in the field that will hold a candle with it.

Your equipment service department is worth the subscription price alone.

I am a league enthusiast and during five years that I have operated I will say that there has never been a punch in my operating room.

My father is owner and manager of our theatre and I am projectionist. We have just purchased a new Simplex Mazda equipped machine but have not installed it yet. I will write in regard to the Mazda equipment as soon as we have given it a trial.

Last but not least please advise where I can secure a N. A. M. L. Slide.

Answer: Thanks for them words. They come in handy. Don't forget your promise to write an account of that Mazda equipment. Tell us the truth. There are about 15,000 projectionists in the country just waiting for some authoritative dope on the subject.

Write to Charles F. Dorr, 41 Sargent St., Winthrop, Mass., for that slide. Probably it would be a good idea to enclose about 40c.

TRICK WORK

DIRECTORS are eliminating trick work in motion pictures to a large extent, for the reason that visions, double exposures and such things are not real. Often they completely spoil the illusion. An audience we must assume, is, by a special dispensation of Providence "setting in" on the lives of some other people and living their lives with them as long as the picture is on the screen. Thus, if there is anything that is entirely unnatural, it jerks them back to realities and the illusion fails.

It shouldn't be necessary to resort to a vision in one corner of the picture to show that Oswald is thinking about Gertrude.

There are more subtle ways of getting over a thought to an audience and audiences have been educated "to" pictures; that is, they "get" many things now that would have been far over their heads five years ago. We may thus see that motion pictures have educated the masses in drama, for if they have not, why the success of present-day pictures which would have failed some years ago. Not all pictures of today of course, but efforts like "Broken Blossoms" and "The Miracle Man." The trend is constantly upward until a point may possibly be reached that has never been attained by the speaking stage, if that point has not already been passed!

But should anything in the way of trick protography be called for, one has only to give the matter a little thought, "dope it out" as we say, and possibly make a few simple tests. There are so many things that can be done with a motion picture camera, one could write a volume on this subject alone, but as a matter of fact there is nothing so difficult as to need explanation in detail. Yet, it is very difficult to explain on paper the simplest camera trick.

The proper way to work out a plan for almost any kind of a vision, multiple exposure or accurately timed "double" is to chart it out on paper. In other words, when asked to evolve some such stunt or when analyzing an effect you have seen on the screen to discover the method followed in obtaining it, plot the entire operation by sketching it in various stages. As an example, we will suppose we have seen a picture in which a character on one side of the screen watches a vision of another scene which isn't a "dissolve-in" but works slowly in from the opposite edge of the screen until it half fills the picture. Draw roughly the main scene on paper. Draw the vision on another piece of paper. Reproduce the effect you have seen with your two models and from that, plan your two masks for the use of two sliding masks will be one possible method of obtaining the effect.

If the edge of the vision is artistically irregular, one mask will represent the main scene, the other the vision and their edges will fit perfectly but these edges will be as much out of focus as we can make them for then they will blend and give us more leeway in synchronizing them. It is a real job to do these things and you've got to be deadly accurate but be systematic and keep your wits about you and you'll get the effect. Now make a paper plot of your whole operation in photography. A square will represent the square of film you will mark to indicate your starting point; another square will be left blank on which to jot down the number of turns from starting point to the exact point where the vision starts in from the side of the screen. (You'll be counting every turn from the start and calling off these numbers to someone else to put down for you). Another square will represent the point (in number of turns from start) where vision comes to a stop and remains on the screen; another square where vision starts out; another where it is full out etc. Then you continue counting until the scene comes to an end.

Rewinding your film to the marked starting square, you are ready to photograph the vision itself as soon as you turn the number of turns (in the dark room) to bring to the aperture the exact square where the vision starts in. Sounds easy doesn't it?

Now of course, you know from the first models you made that when the vision starts in from the side of the screen you are going to slide your vision mat into your mat holder. This has got to be done at a speed as exact as possible. If it is to go full in, in sixteen feet we will say, practice sliding it in at this speed with marks on the mat to guide you—for example, 32 small marks, each one to disappear into the mat holder with every turn of the crank handle or sixteen marks, one to each two turns.

Then when photographing the vision, the mat representing the scene is pulled out to expose the vision scene at exactly the same speed which keeps it on the edge of the previously exposed film.

Now it is believed that this has been made as clear as it is possible to describe any camera trick work for on this subject it might be said that rules cannot be laid down. It is like giving instructions in scenario writing. Successful writers can tell you what constitutes drama, how plots are constructed and action arranged but there is a point from which you must work alone.

So with motion picture photography. You can be told a few facts applicable to the thing as a whole but beyond that no one can think for you.

Almost any camera trick work is done by one of the following methods: speed in turning; stopping camera until some change is made in a scene, turning reversely; double or more exposures on the same film or perhaps special camera attachments such as a mirror swung into position before a lens while photographing one scene, another scene in a different set reflected in the mirror being made to appear to crowd the first one off the screen.

Else it is a matter of causing a figure or object to assume unnatural size by using the focal length of lens that will bring this about. An example was recently seen in a play in which a dramatist sitting at a table, visualized the action of one of his scenes on the table top where minature men and women enacted their parts. He was photographed at the table, against a black background with a two inch lens. Then, double exposing the players into the scene, in miniature, was effected by means of a very short focus or wide angle lens and a black velvet covered stage and background A second exposure can be made on any portion of the film on which has been photographed any dark object or surface for the emulsion at that particular point has not received an oxidizing ray of light. It is merely necessary to draw with pencil on the focusing screen, the outline or position of the dark object or surface where you are to make your second exposure so that the "double" will be photographed in the proper place. Then a mat is made to mask off all but this part of the film and the second exposure made through the aperature you have left. But remember to pencil-mark a square of film at your lens aperture before starting the main scene and count turns throughout the operation else you won't know later where to find your starting point and where the double is to go. It might be a week later you know. An explanation of fading and interposing might be of help to some.

Fading out or in, is done with the shutter either by hand or mechanically for some cameras are equipped with automatic dissolvers. The shutter at a given point is made to start closing and it contiues closing slowly until entirely shut and all light excluded from the film. Fading in is simply the reverse of this action, starting with shutter closed and opening it slowly until it is open to the degree you wish to use it.

Interposing or dissolving one scene into another is easily done with an automatic dissolver but must be carefully done by hand.

During the fade-out, your light or exposure, slowly decreases from a given point until the shutter is entirely closed when the camera is instantly stopped. If you are making a four foot dissolve, there will be exactly eight complete turns of the crank from the point (or square) of beginning the dissolve until it is completed. Then the film is rewound back into the magazine by changing the belt from retort spool to magazine spool and turning the crank reversely eight complete turns. Thus, you bring to the aperture the same square of film on which you commenced your dissolve-out. Dissolving in from that square, from closed shutter to original opening of shutter in exactly eight turns will equalize the light or exposure on each square of film for the full four feet and thus, cause one scene to appear to melt into another.

As has been said before, if you want to know how a thing should look on the screen, look at the same thing with your own eyes and they will tell you. If it is a scene that is supposed to be seen by some character through a key-hole; would you use the usual key-hole mate and photograph its edges sharp or throw them muchly out of focus, or would you use a key-hole mat at all? Look through a key-hole (without trespassing) and find out.

If a character is seen picking up a pair of field glasses and you want to show what he is seeing through them would you use a mat with two round holes or one. Look through a field glass and make your mat accordingly. And also note that you have to focus them on your objective. Get that same effect on the screen. No one ever picked up a pair of glasses and found them just "right" for their eyes.

The use of mats or masks and vignetting attachments for "circling" etc., is very much abused and care should be taken to make an intelligent use of such things, always striving for the most natural effects obtainable as well as the most pleasing and artistic. Much more might be said on any one subject treated in this little book but as has been stated, it is intended as a helping hand to the amateur, the assistant cameraman and the cameraman who has not attained top-notch perfection for so far as others are concerned, the writer had nothing in his bag of tricks to add to theirs. It is intended to supply a foundation for real professional motion picture photography which after all, is only to be obtained through practice and not from books.

But there is one rule more applicable to this art than to almost anything else and it is:—Be sure you are right. Then go to it.

On the Use of Faster Lenses

By E. M. Reynolds

During the history of motion picture making, lenses of one definite speed or maximum aperture have been used. The focal length of different lenses used in motion picture photography are usually 1⅝"; 2"; 2⅜" and 3". These lenses are ground to the maximum speed of what is termed F. 3.5. Under normal conditions of lighting this is ample speed providing the definition is maintained over the entire field.

The writer has made a number of tests with various types of lenses and their relative speed. With these tests and experiments in mind a contrast has been made with like tests of optics of greater speed. At first thought especially to the long experienced practical photographer it seems impossible to obtain greater speed than that of the F. 3.5 without the loss of definition, working at full aperture.

To a very slight extent this is true. In the industrial or commercial work where extreme definition should be obtained at all times, the question will arise as to the advisability of the use of a so-called speed lens. Let us revert back to the plain everyday commercial still photography. It is a proven fact that if a time exposure can be given a certain subject instead of using artificial light and quicker exposure, a much more sharp and clean cut negative will be the result. Why is it not reasonable to suppose the same action will take place when photographing upon motion picture film.

As a matter of example the writer tried the test in this way. A large room containing characters and machinery was to be photographed. The scene was first "shot" with enough artificial light to make the desired negative. With the same setting but minus enough artificial light to balance the use of the speed lens; and at the same time give a negative of about the same density as first negative. The screen told the story. The first film made with all the lights and F. 3.5 lens contained many high lights and very contrasty. In fact this was to such an extent that the definition was slightly impaired. Film number two made with speed lens was fully timed and minus bad hilations and contrast.

True, extreme definition in all parts was lacking but taking the negative from all points it was far superior to that made with slower lens and full lighting equipment. As to photo-play production work the faster lenses have proven a great help in more beautiful and artistic results. It stands to reason that the range of light is extended to some considerable extent all of which tends to reduce the cost of production.

Three Unit M. G. Set Beat Sun for Dependability

The State of California is noted for three salient features; pomegranates, motion pictures and sunlight. The pomegranates are indigenous, and the sun began shining out there away back before the time of Adam and Eve, but the motion pictures comprise a modern evolution that migrated to that locality for the same reason that the steel industry planted itself around Pittsburgh—superior facilities for production.

They found sunlight out there, and mountains, cactus-deserts and forests, bronchos, Indians, Mexicans and all the manifold accessories that delight the heart of a director. They recognized their "promised land," set their stakes on a big scale, and have been breaking big ever since.

It was inevitable that they should hitch up electricity to their outfits, for the sun can't pour its light into every last corner of those studios. And, besides, there are rainy days when the sun is dimmed by clouds. Also there is the night work and all that. The familiar mercury vapor lamp, arc lamps, and other lighting contraptions had to come, and they kept on coming until, in some of the studios, they are so thick that the power they require is more than sufficient to light a good-sized

Ask Dave Barnett, chief electrician at Clune's studio in Los Angeles about that three-unit, 150 kilowatt Westinghouse motor geenrator set that he installed at Cline's a short time ago. Incidentally, this machine and a similar one of 300 kilowatts capacity in Brunton's studio across the street bear the distinction of being the first factory-made three-unit sets of this character to be installed in any studio in Southern California.

They didn't let any grass grow under them when they put that set in, either. It is a matter of proud record that in five hours from the time they hauled it in on a truck and photographed it, they had it installed and in operation in spite of its tons of bulk.

It may be said, in passing, that the station where this machine was placed is a model one in every particular, and that all of the electrical apparatus which it contains is of Westinghouse manufacture.

A New Sam Fox Photoplay Series

EVERY musician knows that dramatic and incidental numbers are absolutely essential if appropriate music for the photoplay is considered a necessity. There is no need of dwelling upon the fact that appropriate music is a necessity.

An abundant amount of dramatic music has been published in recent years, the majority of which is very good. Such famous incidental series as "The Berg's Incidental Series," "Cinema Incidental Series," "Schirmer Photoplay Series," "Carl Fischer Motion Picture Series," etc., are already in the libraries of progressive musicians. But, nevertheless, we needed a new series and the Sam Fox. publishing house of Cleveland, Ohio, was the first one to realize this and they promptly added a new folio to their catalog, composed by J. S. Zamecnik.

The works of Zamecnik are known all over the world as being not only of great musical value, but also as being very practical, and I daresay indispensable to any musician striving to appropriately accompany pictures. The names of the compositions in the Sam Fox Photoplay Edition follow:

1.—Hurry (for general use).
2—Furioso (great confusion, riot scenes, etc.).
3.—Hurry (for general use).
4.—Agitato (heavy, for general use).
5—Misterioso (stealth, horror, dark scenes).
6.—Dramatic Tension (sorrow, deep emotion, tragic situation).
7.—Dramatic Tension (grief, sorrow. etc).
8.—Allegro Vigoroso (duels, sword-fights, struggles, etc).
9.—Battle Music.
10.—Storm Scene (storm at sea, thunderstorm, etc.).

This folio is published in loose-leaf form and is for sale at all leading music houses in the United States.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS will gladly give any additional information pertaining to this excellent series of motion picture music upon request.

Music Review of Latest Publications

THE PHOTPLAY MUSIC CO. has recently added some excellent works to their extensive catalog. Among the numbers worthy of mention are:

"In Flowerland," a waltz intermezzo by Earnest Golden. Most appropriate for society scenes and its melodious constructed trio is most excellent for love scenes.

"Flirting Lovers," another slow and dreamy waltz amoureuse, by Leo A. Kempinski, a composer who has already established himself as a man of great ability. This number is exceptionally fine arranged and playable for any conceivable combination of instruments.

"March Triumphale," another composition by Kempinski. It is a well known fact that whenever a march pomposo is needed for a picture Meyerbeer's "Coronation March" is chosen, and it was high time to publish a substitute for this number, which has been practically played to death.

"In the Ruins," also composed by Kempinski, is a number worthy of mention, for the reason that it is in great demand. Not many dramatic classics have been published in recent years and Photo Play Music Co. is to be congratulated upon its decision to add another dramatic classic to the music libraries of the world.

"Kewpie's Rendezvous." It seems Mr. Kewpinski is capable of continuously creating variety. "Kewpie's Rendezvous" is a caprice, absolutely distinct in character. It is a misterioso of a light type. It is a composition most appropriate for eccentric comedy. In fact, whenever you have a scene and you don't know what to play for it, use "Kewpie's Rendezvous."

Among the great many publications of the Photo-Play Music Co. the ten-minute dramatic suits are also worthy of praise.

The above numbers are for sale at all music houses or direct from Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh avenue. New York City, the sole selling agents of Photo Play Music Co.'s publications.

A Music Cue of Importance

I ONCE wrote an article about "Monotony," and I said that the great Webster defines it as "dull uniformity in tone; or irksome sameness." Musically speaking, this word could not be given a better definition.

In art, in fact in every phase of life, "Monotony" is a disastrous element.

In the art of exhibiting pictures, and in the amusement field in general, monotony is the shortest road to failure and bankruptcy. It is the greatest enemy of a musical program; it is an element hard to control, and most producers, musical directors and exhibitors are unaware of its existence.

Exhibitors should, therefore, welcome the Allan Dwan production, "The Luck of the Irish" (a Realart release). It is a subject of great variety and deserves comment. The picture opens with scenes in New York. It moves from New York to Gibraltar, Venice, Naples, Cairo, Singapore and Hong Kong. It offers unbounded opportunities for the progressive musical director. It is a subject through which a musical director can either prove the indispensability of music or his inability. There is no such thing as fifty-fifty with a picture of this picture. The musical accompaniment is either right or wrong. I wrote the above article as a warning to all concerned and I earnestly suggest that every musical director carefully follow suggestions on the "Music Cue Sheet" herewith following:

The Barton Organ

TRADE MARK REG.

Greatest Improvement in Pipe Organs since the beginning of the industry

HERE IS A BRAND NEW TYPE OF ORGAN. It solves the problem which has baffled organ designers—an organ of unlimited musical possibilities that can be played by any organist—without special schooling or training.

The DIVIDED MANUAL, a new invention used only on the Barton Organ, makes this possible. This is the first manual of its kind and is exclusive with the Barton Organ.

The Divided Manual combines the superb tones of a cathedral organ and a symphony orchestra augmented by thousands of new and original combinations of exquisite beauty.

It is of Standard Construction familiar to all organists—no tricks to play it.

The wonderful new musical effects possible only with the Divided Manual and Easy-to-Play features are not all the advantages of the Barton Organ.

Console—beautiful in appearance, three keyboards on all models.

Tone Quality—a great variety of beautifully-toned organ stops of distinctively different tone character, solid volume without "blast."

Construction—High quality material insures durability. Built to withstand the hard and constant usage of motion-picture theaters.

There is no previous organ of any size or price to adequately compare with the musical attainment and ease of playing the Barton Organ introduces.

The Barton Organ appeals to exhibitors who want satisfaction, because it combines musical supremacy with minimum trouble.

"Mary's Ankle"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

WATCH out for Douglas MacLean and Doris May. Particularly if they get the same director and such screen vehicles as "Mary's Ankle." Having succeeded so well with "What's Your Husband Doing?" and "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave" there was naturally a great deal of uriosity as to "Mary's Ankle."

"Mary's Ankle" is a clean farce, full of clever ines and situations. In fact it is almost a succesion of laughs and most of them are the fullthroated kind. The story has to do with a youth who has just become a physician but is broke. So re his two companions. A rich uncle fails to end the young doctor a check. There are numerus escapades in a rooming house and then the hree conceive the idea of the doctor becoming narried. He invents a name for his bride and the wedding announcements are printed on credit. omes a day when he meets the heroine who bears ne same name and whose aunt is to marry the aid uncle. Convenient circumstances, of course, ut the piece is merely meant to provide enterainment and it achieves its purpose.

The cast does all that is expected of them and ne new stars are pleasant, agreeable and satisfyng principals.—FRED T. GRENELL.

"For Better or For Worse"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

THE pen comedians are aided in their offering this week by Mrs. Mutt, a son, Mutt's mother-in-law, and the family cat. It is a domestic comedy that this sextet enacts, founded on the making and baking of a pie which when finally ready for consumption is the means of demolishing the home by dynamite. There are the usual contortions of man and beast as the play proceeds one of which is sure fire in laugh making qualities that of the cat dying with eight of its lives from partaking of the pie mentioned and the "giving up of the ghost" of them all as the cartoonic spirits rise to cat heaven. This can be said to be quite up to the standard of the Mutt and Jeff strips of recent date. It is good for mild amusement throughout with a loud laugh or two contained in spots. Shown as a part of the Rialto news weekly. —J. S. DICKERSON.

"On with the Dance"

(Paramount-Artcraft—Five Reels)

AN impressive story well put together and logically developed is the outstanding feature of the production. The chance meeting of four strangers, and the interweaving of their lives, is done in plausible and effective fashion.

The plot is founded on two men's love for each other's wives. Mae Murray as Sonia Varinoff overworked pouting lip appeal and overacted in other ways during the first part of the play, but improves as the piece progresses, and her characterization in spots is really excellent.

David Powell as Peter Derwynt seems a negative force rather than positive. John Miltern is not altogether forceful, but Robert Schable satisfactorily fills the part of Jimmy Southerland.

Several panoramic views of New York night life are extremely realistic.—W. C. CLAYTON PRYOR.

"Save Me, Sadie"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reels)

A "SORREL topped" girl coming out of the Rivoli theatre Sunday night reviewed this picture in just eight words. She said: "That comedy was good. It was so silly." "Save Me, Sadie," is so plumb ridiculous that it registers as funny, which, after all is said, is all that is necessary in a slapstick comedy to label it a success.

The methods of getting laughs in the picture are not new, but they are effective. A young fellow desires to cure his girl of a bee in her bonnet that she wants to be a missionary to the Cannibal Islands, so he forces one of his pals into impersonating a native and lodges him at the home of his intended. From then on the picture is just a bunch of hokum with no bets overlooked that will get a laugh. It is the sort of comedy you get in the circus clown and registers in the same way, since the "native" is in a costume and makeup which is quite as exaggerated as the circus fun maker's. There may be some who will voice the last part of the "sorrel top's" opinion and leave off the first sentence, but it is our opinion that these people have no business trying to get enjoyment out of a slapstick concoction anyway, and don't count in the final analysis of what constitutes screen fun.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Night of the Dub"

(Ernest Truex—Paramount)

ALTHOUGH the titles only announce this story as being the work of Albert Payson Terhune, if we are not mistaken it was published in the Saturday Evening Post and proved a most entertaining yarn. Anyway, its comedy plot value is far beyond that usually found in a two-reeler and might have been made into a five-part feature which would rival most of the farce comedies of the season. In its picture presentation Ernest Truex is provided with a role which fits him like a glove, but he only contributes to the amusement contained in the offering since it is the idea, a sort of second edition of "Skinner's Dress Suit," which makes the picture unusually interesting.

Briefly stated, a "dub" of a clerk in a Wall street broker's office who is afraid to say his soul is his own and trembles every time his boss looks at him, does some boasting of how big a man he is on the Street to his particular set and gets away with it. The "Club" plans a "blowout," a theatre party being part of the night's events. The "dub" buys his sixteen seats well in advance for a certain show. His boss in giving his college class a "blowout" decides to buy the house for the same show on the same night.

The "dub," spurred by the thought that he has got to make good before his "Club," holds the broker up for everything he can think of in exchange for the sixteen seats, with the net result that the broker decides that the "dub" is Wall street calibre and takes him into his private office.

It is a comedy idea of course and in the way it has been handled should prove a welcome change from the slap-stick farce. It would seem that the production is unnecessarily slow in getting started, but when it does get under way it keeps going up to the last scene, which is a lot better than visa versa. In style this is the same type of comedy which the late Sydney Drew made famous. The field for this sort of production is unlimited.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 4, 1919.

"THE WALK-OFFS"

(METRO-SCREEN CLASSICS)

Praiseworthy Effort to Make Something of Poor Idea

JUST so long as producers insist on using stage plays and books for their screen material without regard to whether or not that which is secured is suitable for photoplay adaptation, just so long will pictures like "The Walk Offs" be presented. Represented in this production are the praiseworthy efforts of the producers to make something of an idea which we do not think can be visualized into anything worth the expenditure of the time, money and brains that have been put into it.

The idea of the Hatton comedy, an humorous one, was in having a young society wife sue her impractical and impecunious spouse for divorce over a trivial matter with the judge before whom the case was tried being a member of the same brainless set and an intimate friend of all parties concerned, including the correspondent. In the picture version some footage is devoted to this idea with a fair degree of success. However, the first two reels do not contain an iota of either drama or comedy. They show what society folk, according to popular conception, do with their waking hours. Sandwiched in at frequent intervals are titles. Then comes the divorce trial, which, by the way, is a wonder for throwing overboard all traditions in law and court procedure, with the decree granted.

From this point on the players struggle manfully with the plot, which is the not new story of the nice little social butterfly who needs must marry the roue for financial reasons, but who is finally saved from such a fate by the hero falling in love with her.

Metro has been generous with its sets and in the selection of a cast. The picture is technically all any one could desire, but it doesn't register with us as a hit and we don't believe audiences will go crazy over it.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Directed by Herbert Blache, from an adaptation of the stage play by Frederick and Fanny Hatton.

Scenario by June Mathis.

"The Walk Offs," Frederick and Fanny Hatton's famous farce comedy, has been made into a motion picture, with May Allison in the leading role, and will be the attraction at the ——— theatre for a ——— day run, beginning ———

Besides the humor which the idea of having a divorce suit tried before a judge who is the intimate friend of all the parties concerned, including the co-respondent, contains, there is a nice pleasant romance connected with the story. It is in this role which Miss Allison appears, the sister of the impractical and impecunious husband, who becomes involved temporarily in marital troubles. Much that is interesting in the way of "society stuff," including a wonderfully staged ball, a society circus for charity, swimming, dancing and all the other recreations of the idle rich are realistically depicted in this picture. Scenically it is a triumph. Included among the large cast of well-known players is such a well-known artist as Joseph Kilgour, as well as others of equal repute. The picture is a Metro Screen Classic, one of this firm's "fewer and better pictures." It is in six reels.

PROGRAM READER

The Metro current release on its Screen Classic's program, "The Walk Offs," an adaptation of the famous stage farce comedy, has been secured for presentation in this heatre beginning ———. Starred in "The Walk Offs" is popular May Allison, who appears in the role of "Kate," a society belle, who decides to marry "money" rather han live on the bounty of her sister-in-law. Were you ever present at a divorce trial? In this picture one of the most novel trials of stage or screen is held. The judge is a member of the exclusive social set to which all the persons concerned belong, including he co-respondent, and they can not help but call him "Charlie" instead of "Your Honor." Then, too, the judge was present when the alleged acts of infidelity were alleged to have occurred. You can see that omplications are liable to enter into a trial f this sort. Incidentally, do you know what he "walkoffs" means? It's the hero's colored servant's nickname for "no brains," which nowadays we define as "nobody home."

We think that when we play this picture here will be nobody home in this city. They will all be at the ——— theatre seeing "The Walk Offs."

May Allison, who is starred in "The Walk Offs," her latest Metro feature

SUGGESTIONS

There are several angles of exploitation on this picture which will be apparent to the astute exhibitor. There is the popularity of the star, the fame of the play and the value of the standard which Metro has set for its Screen Classic productions. These are all worth while items in your exploitation.

Next you have the novelty of the divorce trial situation. It permits of some unusual advertising, especially in the way of asking questions of your patrons, which would tend to arouse interest.

Suppose you were to ask your city's wives if they would consider they had grounds for divorce if their husband wore a pretty young woman's silk stocking. You might then follow that up by asking if they thought they could get justice from a judge who had given the hose in question to the co-respondent in the case.

A chance for a cooperative window display is presented in the stocking episode. Get your dry goods stores to go in with you for a window of fancy hosiery. Use cards written in a humorous vein on these stockings, calling attention to "The Walk Offs" at your theatre. This is also a good subject for a teaser campaign. Suppose you were to start off with a cut of a silk hose, and day by day add some explanatory reading matter to it, like "Schuyler wore one of these for a joke, but his wife couldn't see the point." You can if you see "The Walk Offs."

"If your husband wore another woman's silk hose would you think it funny, or would you sue for divorce?"

Even the dog showed His Honor, the Supreme Court judge, no respect. He drank his water. As for the plaintiff, the defendant and the witnesses, they called him "Charlie," just as they were wont to do when they met in the "ultra elite" social set.

Be sure of your wife's sense of humor before you wear another woman's hose just for a joke. It may take you to the divorce court as it did poor impractical and impecunious "Schuy."

The first thing he learned to write was I O U, which sums up "Schuy" of "The Walk Offs," but he was a pretty good scout, at that. It wasn't his fault he didn't know enough to do anything more than spend his wife's money. And he lost that job, too, for a while.

"PINTO"

(GOLDWYN)

Mabel Normand Is Amusing as a Two-Gun Girl

THE two-gun girl has had her innings in photoplays before, the only difference in Mabel Normand's appearance in the character being the fact that it is derived from a humorous foundation. The star's predecessors enacted the part with self-conscious seriousness. The type seems more adaptable to a breezy interpretation such as Miss Normand gives here. If she would learn to mellow her work with a touch of variety occasionally she would come pretty near ranking as our ablest comedienne.

"Pinto" is familiar material, insofar as being used for cowboy stars. Most of them have invaded the East some time or other and gone back to their boundless West after tiring of society. Here Miss Normand has a rollicking time of it showing debutantes how to wield a wicked 45 and throw a lariat. She lassoes love in typical Fairbanksian style. In fact she cuts up several didoes which, if naively executed, are, nevertheless, calculated to please the average picturegoer. The feature breezes along with plenty of spontaneity and zest for about three and one-half reels, then the action slackens because of its forced melodramatic note. However, it keeps up to the standard of the Normand offerings—which is easily north of the general average.

"Pinto" may be defined as a one character story, and as such it presents the star with sufficient opportunity to display her eccentric style. She is ably supported by Cullen Landis, who is necessary for the romantic element, and Edward Jobson, who is necessary in emphasizing the humorous points. Victor L. Schertzinger's direction is more acceptable than his story.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mabel Normand, the Goldwyn comedienne, will appear at the ——— theatre week ——— the ——— in her latest photoplay entitled "Pinto." This story has been especially written for the star by Victor L. Schertzinger and it affords her a role which brings out her funmaking talents splendidly. Pinto is a girl of the West who has grown up under the guardianship of five ranchmen in whose care her father left her when he died. Her daring exploits on her pony, Legs, nearly drive the cowboys on the ranch to distraction. Consequently, they are overjoyed at the news that Pinto is to go to New York for a year to visit with Pop Audry.

Pinto's first shock in the East comes with the knowledge that New York is not a ranch as she had thought. A young fellow of engaging personality named Bob De Witt helps her find Pop Audry's home, and they decide to become very good friends. Pinto's second shock comes when she finds herself snubbed by Mrs. Audry. Rather than stay under the same roof with the girl the aristocratic lady goes to her summer home. Pinto thinks it about time that Pop should know of his wife's deception and during the Wild West show which she stages for his society friends, she informs him of certain affairs. He returns to Arizona with the girl and Bob accompanies them, for he and Pinto have come to a complete understanding. This is a story fraught with any number of amusing moments and contains a sustaining quality of melodrama so that the interest is never lost. Miss Normand is refreshing and amusing and she carries the action through to a most successful finish. Prominent in her support are Cullen Landis and others.

CATCH LINES

She came from Arizona and her name was Pinto. And when she hit the trail for New York and high society—Oh Boy! See Mabel Normand in "Pinto," a picture of a two-gun girl in society. See it.

Talk about excitement—talk about fun. Why there's tons of both jammed into every foot of "Pinto," Mabel Normand's latest Goldwyn picture. Here is irresistible Mabel as a two-gun girl straight from the wild and woolly West.

Whoopee! Here's "Pinto"—the dashing, flashing western whirlwind. See Mabel Normand as Pinto in "Pinto." A picture of a two-gun girl who lassoes love in society.

PROGRAM READER

A hilarious hurricane of fun and frolic! That's Mabel Normand in her latest Goldwyn picture, "Pinto," which comes to this theatre beginning ———. Fun? Speed? Thrills? Say, just watch this rip-snorting Buckaroo in skirts throw a bombshell of pep into high society. You thought she was a scream in "Upstairs" and in "Jinx"—but wait till you see her latest picture, "Pinto." It's all about a society debutante—but not the kind you are familiar with. No indeed! You will see a girl make her debut with a smoking 45 and a twirling lariat. You will laugh to see her lasso love. Can you imagine Mabel Normand as "Pinto?" Don't imagine it or you will miss something. See her in "Pinto," a Goldwyn picture written and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. A prominent cast of players renders splendid support—a cast that includes the likeable Cullen Landis, George Nichols, Edward Jobson and Edythe Chapman.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this picture easily for its atmosphere, telling at the same time that it is Mabel Normand's latest. That it features her as a two-gun girl who breaks into society. Teaser cards framed in a cowboy's vernacular of speech would be a good angle. Catch Lines would be another good angle. For your lobby display you can attract attention through the atmospheric touch by the use of chaps, spurs, lariats, etc. Play up the fact that Mabel Normand is seen in another rollicking role—one that presents her as a cow-girl who breaks into society. The title is attractive. Use it in all your means of exploitation. Use in all your means of exploitation.

"THE FORGED BRIDE"
(UNIVERSAL)

Mary MacLaren Has a Mild Offering Here

"THE FORGED BRIDE" does not reach the high mark of "Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie," a previous Mary MacLaren offering. In the first place the author has not been unduly inspired in his idea and the director's execution of it is not rich in any sustaining highlights. It is a story of a forger and his daughter, the latter marrying into the home of the very judge who sent her father to prison. A cattish creature is harbored in the house too—whose sole purpose in the plot is to supply a crude line of melodramatic action. She, it is who reveals the bride's identity by employing the ancient trick of holding a blotter up to a mirror.

So the picture develops along its single track, the only twist being the fact that the heroine is presented as the judge's child through a case of forgery. The girl writes her real father that the judge has moments of sorrow because of his kidnapped child. Then it is that the old man escapes and, with fine Christian spirit, forges the hand of the kidnapper. Thus the jurist is given a legitimate claim to her. The convict goes back to prison happy in the thought that his daughter is not burdened with the stigma of his name. His forgery is the best piece of work he ever did. The judge is made a party to the crime by acknowledging the artistic job to himself.

There are no moments of interest beyond those given to Thomas Jefferson as the crook. He has the most sympathetic role. Miss MacLaren is not called upon for any emotional display, and Barney Sherry ambles through his part in his easy way. Certain details in the action are quite perplexing and need eliminating. "The Forged Bride" looks rather anaemic. The twist is the one red corpuscle.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 8th.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Bill Butters	Thomas Jefferson
Peggy	Mary MacLaren
Dick Van Courtland	Harold L. Miller
Dick's Mother	Dorothy Hagan
Clark Farrell	J. Barney Sherry
Clara Ramerez	Dogmar Godowsky

Story by J. G. Hawks.
Scenario by Hal Hoadley.
Produced by Douglas Gerrard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary MacLaren, Universal's popular star, will appear at the ——— next ——— in what is claimed to be one of her best prodeductions. It is a picture full of heart interest, intrigue and many dramatic moments. For those who have appreciated Miss MacLaren's work in the past and enjoyed her dramatic ability, a pleasant afternoon or evening's entertainment is assured. Bill Butters, a well known forger, steals a check, collects on it at the bank and goes home to his pretty daughter. "Now, Peggy, girl," he says, "we can live. Let's go away and be happy, and—I'll go straight." From the window old Bill sees a detail of plain clothes men waiting in the street below. He tells Peggy to pack her things and leave the house, at the same time burning some incriminating evidence of the forger's profession. The police arrive and cart him off to jail. A week later he is sentenced to the penitentiary, the judge telling him that when he leaves prison he should use his gift with the pen to better advantage.

Peggy moves to a little town which is near the jail in which her father is confined, so as to be able to pay him weekly visits. She tends a soft drink stand with rare success, her beauty acting as a magnet for scores of college boys, amongst the most persistent of whom is Dick Van Courtland, a college junior, who is a senior in wealth. Dick loves the girl and marries her after a whirlwind courtship. But when Dick takes her to his home the girl recognized Judge Farrell, who is her husband's guardian, as the man who has sentenced her father to prison. Clara Ramerez, who resides in Dick's home and who has been jealous of his wife, tries to undermine Peggy's standing with the family and visits Bill at the penitentiary. In the meantime Peggy writes to her father that Judge Farrell likes her because she resembles his own daughter, who was kidnapped as a baby.

Old Bill gets an idea. He will forge a letter which will make it appear that Peggy, his own beloved daughter, is really the daughter of Judge Farrell. This, he feels sure, will give the girl a place in the family and forever silence the serpent tongue of Clara Ramerez.

CATCH LINES

"Now, Peggy, girl," he says, "we can live. Let's go away and be happy, and—I'll go straight." Did he accomplish his purpose? Come and see "The Forged Bride," it will tell you.

The young heroine served sodas to the young college chaps who visited the soda counter. But, like many other arts, there is also one in serving this refreshing drink. And Mary MacLaren must have possessed it, for she won the heart of a rich young chap who married her. "The Forged Bride" will show you how she did it.

He was known as the best "forger" in the country. But he tried it once too often. See what happened. "The Forged Bride" will tell you.

SUGGESTIONS

There are many points in exploiting a feature of this kind which ought to arouse the exhibitor's interest. It is one of Universal's latest features, with a popular star who has a good following in many parts of the country. It also has an interesting story which should appeal to any audience, and the star, Mary MacLaren, is supported with a cast of well known players who are noted for their past work. The names of Thomas Jefferson, Harold L. Miller and J. Barney Sherry are ones that can be published without any fear as to the actors' ability.

And the story is well written and contains heart interest, intrigue and dramatic moments enough to keep any audience at attention throughout and give them a pleasant afternoon or evening's entertainment.

Bill the star as strong as you can and mention the Universal brand. And do not be afraid to exploit the story.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— begs to announce that "The Forged Bride," a Universal attraction starring Mary MacLaren, will play this house on ——— next.

Those who have witnessed Miss MacLaren's past performances can be assured of a delightful evening's entertainment. This feature contains many points which are bound to keep the patrons at attention and interest throughout. It shows the love of a strong man, who is also a bad man, for his young daughter. And it takes the observer through many moments of dramatic action, love and pathos.

Bill Butters, a well known forger, steals a check, collects on it at the bank, and goes home to his pretty daughter. "Now, Peggy, girl," he says, "we can live. Let's go and be happy, and—I'll go straight." But the police are on his tracks and finally land him in jail. A week later he is sentenced to the penitentiary, the judge remarking that it was too bad his talents could not be used to better advantage.

Peggy moves to a little town which is near the jail in which her father is confined and secures a job as a "soft drink" clerk. Here she meets the young man who falls in love with her and finally takes her in wedlock. But all this does not mean happiness for our heroine, for she has excited the jealousy of a young vampire who resides in her husband's home. And it is through this young woman's hatred that the story is lead up to many exciting and intense moments.

"THE PALISER CASE"
(GOLDWYN)

High Class Melodrama Which Holds Interest

THIS is the murder mystery at its best, with the vital question of who is the guilty person carefully concealed until the climax of the picture is reached.

Adapted from the novel by Edgar Saltus, the feature follows closely the story version with excellent direction and praiseworthy acting responsible for a high class melodrama which holds attention and carries suspense.

In the role of Cassy Cara, the daughter of a Portuguese musician, Miss Frederick has what may be called the best role of any recent production. She plays with a quiet dignity which carries conviction and many of her scenes are impressive in their emotional appeal. The story itself, while reasonably orthodox as to basic plot, has plenty of complications and enough new twists to escape being termed convenient, and the identity of the murderer will remain unknown to the climax unless the audience chooses to jump at conclusions.

The producers have been prodigal in their efforts to make the picture noteworthy. In support of the star a most capable cast has been secured and many of the scenes are unusual in the attention given to detail. In this connection mention to the realistic atmosphere of the locale of the story, Portugal, is not out of place.

As in all mystery stories, it has been necessary to carry the spectator through many sequences in which some of the action is unexplained, but in so doing an interest compelling tempo has been maintained with the partial development of the various clues which point to a solution of the mystery. There is really little new in the whole production, but it has been made to appear as such, which is to the credit of the producer, director and cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Hazel Mooney.—Reviewed at the Sidney theatre, St. Louis.

THE CAST

Cassy Cara	Pauline Frederick
Lennox	Albert Roscoe
Cara (Cassy's Father)	James Neil
Margaret Austen	Hazel Brennan
Mrs. Austen (Her Mother)	Kate Lester
Tambourina	Carrie Lee Ward
Monty Paliser	Warburton Gamble
Paliser, Sr.	Alec Francis

From the novel by Edgar Saltus.
Scenario by Edfrid Bingham.
Directed by William Parks.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pauline Frederick, famour film star, will appear in her latest photoplay, "The Paliser Case," adapted from the novel by Edgar Saltus, at the ——— theatre for a ——— day run beginning ———.

In this production the Goldwyn artist is offered perhaps the best opportunity of her career in the well constructed mystery story concerning the murderer of Paliser, a roue.

A strong case of circumstantial evidence is built against the star, Miss Frederick. The motive is established, since the murdered man had tricked her into a mock marriage and then refused to make amends. She is about to be convicted when the unforeseen happens and she is cleared. It is an absorbing tale and defies solution up to the very climax of the picture. Miss Frederick is cast as a Portuguese girl and the locale of the picture is in this land of scenic beauty. The supporting cast furnished the star is one of the best, and masterly direction by William Parke keeps the interest at fever heat. This is one of the few good mystery pictures of the season, for it contains all the elements which go to make up the ideal photoplay—romance, a plot which cannot be anticipated, good acting, a lavish production, etc.

PROGRAM READER

The friends and admirers of Pauline Frederick are legion and they will all be pleased to learn that she is to appear in her latest picture, "The Paliser Case," at this theatre, beginning ———.

Following such successes as "The Peace of Roaring River" and others as good, it is perhaps too much to promise even a better picture, but wherever this production has played new laurels for the star have been achieved.

"The Paliser Case" is the mystery story at its best. Its plot concerns the solving of the mystery of who killed Edward Paliser as he sat in his box at the opera. Several people had cause to hate him to the extent that murder would in a measure be justified. Of these, none had more reason than Miss Frederick, the star. The dead man had tricked her into a mock marriage, laughed at her protestations when she learned the truth. He was ready to throw her aside like a crumpled flower. But Miss Frederick did not kill Paliser. Who did is the meat of this dramatic story, laid in old Portugal, where hates and loves burn fiercely. The picture has been given a magnificent production. No expense or effort has been spared to make this a noteworthy picture, and the result is a credit to Miss Frederick and the producers.

SUGGESTIONS

The mystery story is always a good field for the use of the "teaser" form of advertising. Start your teaser campaign well before your opening date and continue it until you are ready to spring your announcements.

In a picture which has to do with a mysterious murder you always have the opportunity to dig up some of your city's local history in the way of famous murder trials and connect the chain of evidence of your story to that of the actual event. This sort of stuff can be put over on the front pages if well written, since papers are always willing to find an excuse for printing "history" as large as a murder trial.

If your theatre has boxes and if you take a chance of starting a "riot" in the theatre, you certainly can get attention and any amount of publicity by enacting the murder scene of the picture in a box in your house. The way to get the greatest amount of publicity out of this stunt would be to pull it for the real thing some time previous to the time you have announced that you have a mystery picture coming. This, however, would be extremely dangerous, as you might start a panic. It would be better to announce that you will show how a murder might be committed in the theatre and the murderer escape without being detected. Then pull the stunt the way it is worked in the picture.

A mystery story is not a good subject for lobby displays nor yet for the use of stills, since the more of the plot divulged to the public the less interest you have in the production.

CATCH LINES

Music, the soft, languorous music of Portugal, welled up from the stage. Paliser, the brute and roue, sat in his box at the opera. Suddenly he crumpled forward with a great gash in his chest, to die almost instantly. Who killed him? That was the question. The woman whom he had wronged beyond the power of forgiveness? That is what the law said, but she didn't. Justice prevails always.

A man was murdered. No one saw the deed. Paliser crumpled forward from his chair at the opera and was dead. They placed the woman who thought she had married him on trial for the murder. They proved by every law of circumstantial evidence that she was guilty. They found the motive. But at the last moment fate, with its queer tricks, disclosed the truth and the law and everyone knew who killed Paliser.

"HER ELEPHANT MAN"

(FOX)

New Star in Interesting Vehicle

"HER ELEPHANT MAN" is an interesting tale of circus life, sympathetically unfolding an appealing romance amid the environment of glittering spangles, panoplied animals and the tan-bark rings under the "big top." As a story "Her Elephant Man" is a realistic narrative, whose supreme moment is reached in the spectacular collapse of the "big top," swaying in the grip of a terrific wind-storm. The picturization has preserved remarkably well all the local color and atmosphere of life in the traveling circus. In this respect the production could hardly be improved.

Through the scenes of this pleasing story flitters the dainty Shirley Mason, whose charm of personality as the rose of the ring adds fresh force to the appeal of the theme itself. As the winsome bareback rider, circling around the boxed enclosure, atop of her dappled horse, Miss Mason is at her best. It is only when she discards the part of girlish simplicity and attempts the role of maturer years and character that her appeal becomes halt and uncertain.

Albert Roscoe in the role of "The Elephant Man" and Harry Todd in the part of the little equestrienne's guardian render Miss Mason creditable support. As in the case of the star, both these members of the cast derive no little measure of force from the natural appeal of the settings in which they are called upon to perform.

The action at times becomes somewhat overwrought, and the suspense element loses some of its force towards the close, but with the general appeal of the story, the charm of its star and the good support accorded her, "Her Elephant Man" should take at once with the ordinary picture audience.—E. F. Supple.

THE CAST

Joan	Shirley Mason
Col. Philip Dorset	Albert Roscoe
Blake	Henry J. Herbert
The Bride	Ardito Mellonino
Jerimy	Harry Todd
Trixie	Dorothy Lee

Produced by William Fox.
Story by Pearl Doles Bell.
Scenario by Isabelle Johnson.
Directed by Scott Dunlap.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The dainty Shirley Mason makes her debut as a Fox star in "Her Elephant Man," appearing at this theatre on ——— and ——— of the ——— week. In this picture, Miss Mason is seen as the pretty, winsome equestrienne of a traveling circus. It is a tale brightened by the glittering spangles and gorgeous panoplies of life under the "big top," unfolding an appealing romance amid the colorful surroundings of the tanbark rings.

Philip Dorset, after discovering that his bride has married him only for his money, leaves her to follow her own paths and journeys to Africa to escape old haunts and associations. In the jungle he falls in with a party of American circus men. He links his fortunes with theirs, determined never to reveal his past life and its disappointments to his new found friends. While touring the wild country, the party enters a native village and finds an orphaned white girl, Joan, whose father, an American missionary, has died shortly before, the victim of an epidemic. The natives, in accordance with the directions of the girl's late father, entrust the orphan to the care of the circus men.

En route for America, Jerimy, the veteran head of the circus, and Philip Dorset become strongly attached to their winsome little charge. Then follow happy days under the "big top," where Joan develops into a charming little bareback rider, to the great delight of both the warm-hearted Jerimy and Philip Dorset, who has become the caretaker of the elephants in the show. But the passing years also brings the first buds of fast-growing womanhood to Joan. .Eventually, Philip and Joan realize that what has started as an affection between guardian and charge has matured into the deeper bonds of true love.

Philip with the memories of his previous union fast upon him manfully tries to turn the tide of the girl's affection from him, but without success. Then ensue misunderstandings, doubts and finally open separation when Philip as a final resort abandons the circus without any explanations. Disappointments and fresh barriers intervene, but unexpected events and a change of circumstances eventually smooth out the hopeless tangle and in the end leave Joan happily content in the arms of her "Elephant Man." It is a story with romance, suspense and a human appeal that cannot fail to touch you deeply as it entertains. See "Her Elephant Man" at the ——— theatre, commencing ———.

PROGRAM READER

"Her Elephant Man," which appears at this theatre on ——— and ——— of ——— week, has three strong reasons for winning your favor. It is a circus story to start with—the tale of a traveling circus, the sort that used to send the little thrills of delight up and down your spine when the news hit town that the circus was coming. But with the spangles and the clowns and the smell of the tanbark rings, "Her Elephant Man" mixes an appealing tale of romance and action that will stir your human sympathies while revivifying the memories of "kid" days at the circus.

Then there's the added attraction of seeing dainty Shirley Mason in settings that make of her a winsome creature of the sawdust circles under the "big top," and finally there's the appeal of a strong cast moving in harmony with the spirit and action of a powerful story that closes with the spectacular collapse of a great circus tent over the heads of the fleeing spectators and performers.

SUGGESTIONS

"Her Elephant Man" is rich in exploitation possibilities for the exhibitor who is willing to bring his showmanship to bear on the subject. A panoplied circus horse bearing a clown and conveying the message of the production's appearance at your house, could be used most effectively in canvassing the territory surrounding your theatre. How about a truck fitted up to reproduce the appearance of an old-fashioned circus band-wagon, with your musicians aboard in uniform, to tour the neighboring streets. Many bakers make it a practice to bake ginger cookies that take the forms of elephants, horses, etc. How about a tie-up with the bakeries of your neighborhood? The same suggestion holds for grocers in advertising animal crackers and like commodities. Your lobby display might include a miniature circus tent with toy clowns, elephants, etc., and a liberal scattering of sawdust to suggest the circus atmosphere.

CATCH LINES

Love me—love my elephant. See "Her Elephant Man" at ——— theatre, commencing ———.

Some people make love in the parlor. How would you like to have made love in a circus? See "Her Elephant Man" at the ——— theatre on ———.

Even circus people are just "human folks" for all their paint and trimmings. See why in "Her Elephant Man" at ——— theatre on ——— of the ——— week.

What would you do if you were under a big circus tent when it came tottering down over your head in the teeth of a wind-gale? See "Her Elephant Man," at ——— theatre, before you decide on your answer.

"LIVE SPARKS"

(BRUNTON-HODKINSON)

J. Warren Kerrigan in Variety Picture

VARIETY is the pre-eminent characteristic of "Live Sparks." Romance, action, humor and pathos punctuate a simple, entertaining narrative, laid for the most part in the oil fields of Texas. A pair of rascally promoters connive to gain possession of some valuable property belonging to Neil Sparks, an absentee owner residing in the North. Neil goes South under an assumed name, unearths the plot and defeats the fraudulent project, to the complete downfall of the conspirators. The light and serious moments alternate pleasantly in the development of the story, and pertinent subtitles reinforce the humorous quality of the action.

One finds variety of situation also, though some of the situations are injected with too obvious an effort: a prize-fight breaks in on the theme at the beginning, while a vaudeville troupe invades the subject towards the close. Despite the digressions, howevr, the main theme retains a predominant position throughout and a smooth-flowing continuity is generally preserved.

The types are excellently chosen. Kerrigan as "Live Sparks" swings through the action with his customary spontaneity of dash and high spirits, now as the irresponsible youth of wealth with a weakness for getting into scrapes and then as the lusty young prospector dogging the heels of his enemies. Fritzi Brunette in the role of Myrtle Pratt registers well in moments of pathos as the motherly sister of her five orphaned brothers. Roy Laidlaw and John Steppling, as a pair of "hicks" posing as "respectable" oil crooks, perform likewise in creditable fashion. Altogether the production, while embodying some minor flaws of continuity, is a well-balanced picturization of a simple but entertaining story, which with the pleasing personality of its star will probably win the ready approval of the average audience.—Length, 5 reels.—E. F. Supple.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

J. Warren Kerrigan's latest Robert Brunton production, "Live Sparks," is coming to the ——— theatre, beginning ———, for ——— days. It is an interesting study of a young millionaire transformed from an irresponsible, care-free youth of wealth into a shrewd, calculating prospector of the oil-fields. Intertwined with the business phases of the action is an appealing love story.

Neil Sparks has inherited some valuable oil property in Texas. He neglects to give any personal attention to the oil interests left to him and spends all his time amid the comfortable surroundings of his Northern home. With an eye to Neil's money, Phyllis Gwynne heaps her attentions upon the young millionaire, and is ably abetted by Neil's aunt in her plans to make a "catch" of the moneyed youth. At his aunt's persuasion, Neil agrees half-heartedly to take Phyllis as his fiancee.

Meanwhile, two former farmers, Craig and Abbott, who have become oil operators, connive to gain possession of Sparks' property, which is found to be unusually rich in possibilities. Neil's absence makes their proposed schemes easy of accomplishment. A line of secret pipes is laid from the Sparks well to their own ground, thus enabling them to draw off Neil's supply to their own tap. The supply on Neil's property dwindles to a corresponding extent. A message is then sent to the Sparks residence in the North, informing Neil of the drought in his property's oil supply and suggesting an immediate sale of the ground. Neil suspects a "frame-up" in the sudden falling off of the oil secured from his wells. Moreover, Miss Gwynne's persistent attentions have wearied his patience, and he seizes the excuse to escape from the boredom.

Under an assumed name, Neil hurries South and proceeds to investigate the reasons for the diminished supply of oil. He at length discovers the fraudulent practice of Craig and Abbott and, communicating with his aunt, directs his valet, William Carpenter, to follow him South under the assumed name of "Neil Sparks," owner of the Sparks interests. Neil, aided by Carpenter and Myrtle Pratt, the daughter of a man defrauded by Craig and Abbott, turns the tables deftly on the conspirators and perfects their complete downfall. The end finds Neil and Myrtle happily engaged after many trials and disappointments. In this picture of action and romance, J. Warren Kerrigan is seen at his best in the role of Neil Sparks, the "live" wire of the Sparks family.

PROGRAM READER

Neil Sparks was really a "live" wire, but he had never had the occasion to demonstrate that fact. Wealth had enabled him to indulge his weakness for getting into scrapes and to follow the line of least resistance when he faced the problems of life at all. However, at heart Neil was true-blue, and the crucial test came when two oil prospectors, formerly given to the honest task of tilling the soil, set about with fraudulent designs to acquire the Sparks oil interests in the South. Neil rose to the occasion, turned the tables deftly and left the aspiring crooks with the alternative of donning striped uniforms and marching lock-step or going back to the dear old farm. They chose the farm and forfeited their oil interests.

Of course, there's a woman in the case—two of them, in fact—and their part intertwines a pleasing romance with an interesting topic of the oil-fields. "Live Sparks" presents a popular star in an appealing story which mixes intrigue with romance. It will be seen at this theatre during ———.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the variety in this production. This picture involves an interesting story, enlivened by the introduction of unexpected situations. In the opening scenes, a prize-fight is staged with a police raid that scatters the spectators, and in the closing chapter a vaudeville troupe adds another touch of novelty. Then there's the star's name and his winning personality to feature in your display. Call in the assistance of your electrical service. An attractive display would consist in an arrangement set with the name of the feature in electric letterings surmounted by an intermittent flash in zig-zag lines radiating from a center to give the effect of "live sparks." Or a simpler device would consist in simply having an electric charge jumping a gap between two terminals, wireless fashion, emitting an intermittent flash and sound.

CATCH LINES

Live wires are dead until you close the switch. See what closed the switch for Neil in "Live Sparks," playing at this theatre during ———.

Ease and plenty made him a "nobody" millionaire. Adversity put him on his mettle. See how in "Live Sparks," at the ——— theatre on ———.

"THE FEAR MARKET"
(REALART)

Better Than Average Plot, Well Produced and Acted

A VERY well constructed continuity from the play by Amelia Reeves (Princess Troubetskoy), well out of the ordinary in plot and dramatic incident, coupled with intelligent direction which carries suspense practically to the end of the feature, contribute about equally in making this a picture which should register with the average audience.

The offering is somewhat slow is getting underway owing to the necessity of introducing a large cast of principals, all of whom are essential to the development of the plot. Interest is obtained in the early sequences by promising something spicy from the "scandal sheet" angle, with the inference that the star is going to be found with a skeleton in her closet, sooner or later. It is well toward the end of the picture that the denouement does come which is well for the picture since this sequence is hardly convincing and lacks in logic. The ending is noticeably weak.

Miss Brady does not appear until the middle of the feature and at no time does she dominate the production, since the roles are too well divided to permit any one to "run away with the show." She is, however, a good type for the part and quite equal to its requirements.

The picture has been given a very nice production, all the details being looked after as they should be. Good types have been secured for the principal roles. The sets used are up to standard and the photography first class. A better than average picture if one does not look too closely into the excuse for some of the sequences.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Directed by Kenneth Webb.
Story by Amelia Rives.

For the first picture on the new Realart program, Alice Brady has secured Amelia Rives' (Princess Troubetskoy) great society play, "The Fear Market" as a vehicle. This picture has been booked for showing at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

The star has a role in this picture which her many friends in this city will find unusually suitable. She is the daughter of the owner of a scandal mongering society paper which by publishing little quips about the indiscretions of society people makes itself feared and in the conduct of its affairs is not above accepting sums in payment for keeping undesirable reference to people out of the paper. As the editor states in "The Fear Market" "Society pays well for it's pleasant vices. Miss Brady is unaware of the interest her father has in the "scandal sheet" and through a series of events gets into a fight to put this paper out of business. She is also compromised somewhat herself by an unfortunate chain of circumstances.

The role is one which besides permitting the display of the star's emotional ability also allows her to appear in many beautiful gowns. In fact the whole production is lavish in this connection. The play from which the picture has been adapted was a decided success owing to the originality of its story and the wealth of dramatic material it contained and has proven an unusually good production for transference to the screen.

The feature holds interest from beginning to end and will be found a real treat.

PROGRAM READER

When Amelia Rives (Princess Troubetskoy) wrote "The Fear Market" she scored a hit which is still remembered for its originality and wealth of dramatic situations, for she chose a fertile field from which to evolve her plot, scandal in society and the use the knowledge of a woman's indiscretions may be put by a society paper which was not above being bribed into squelching stories if the price was enough.

Such papers do exist, as you well know, and in this picture you may get a very good idea how this particular brand of blackmail is worked "within the law." "The Fear Market" has as a star Alice Brady whom you all know is particularly adapted to a role in a society picture. In her support are such well known players as Frank Losee, Bradley Barker, Alfred Hickman and other actors of note. The production was staged by Kenneth Webb, whose reputation in the society picture is enviable. The picture is rich in scenic vesture, good clothes, big sets and which coupled with its suspense carrying story makes a feature which is well above the usual in photoplay.

"The Fear Market" comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— day run beginning ———.

SUGGESTIONS

The suggestion that there is "spice" in this picture we figure is essential to induce people to expect something out of the ordinary.

We would therefore suggest that you bill this picture as an exposure of the secret sins of society with specific instances being recorded of what happened when its indiscretions became known to the editors of a society paper, "The Tattler." In getting this over you will necessarily use the newspapers to a large extent.

In the word "fear" and its definition you have an opportunity to create some interest. Ask your public if they are afraid that the world will some day know some of their secret sins. Run a story in your papers stating that the editors could make a million dollars in a year if they cared to accept bribes to keep news of certain kinds out of the paper. See if the editors of the

"THE LUCK OF THE IRISH"
(MAYFLOWER-REALART)

Up to Dwan's Usual Standard

THIS is a good Dwan feature which should satisfy the patrons who enjoy the work of this producer. Although it is a little slow in getting a start it develops into a fast moving and colorful story of elemental romance and adventure, with enough interest to attract and amuse.

The plot is rather weak, relating the efforts of Gorgan, the hero, to free Ruth Warren, a girl he has long admired from afar, from the hands of a tireless villain who follows her all the way around the world. Still the story contains many stirring climaxes which are played in a thrilling manner, among them being the escape of Gorgan from hired thugs in Cairo, and his final rescue of Ruth from captivity in Singapore.

Alan Dwan again comes to the fore with what may be considered a remarkable collection of exterior "shots." This is one of his strong points and he certainly took advantage of it, the story giving him an opportunity to visit many cities of the world.

And let us also mention that James Kirkwood, who appears as Gorgan, and Ernest Butterworth, who plays his adopted boy inject some truly genuine comedy scenes which, when added up count largely to the success of the feature. We have not seen Kirkwood on the screen for some time, but for the portrayal of a character of this kind his personality and manner give it the correct type.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Luck of the Irish" is the title of the feature which will appear at the ——— on ——— of ——— week. This is an Allan Dwan production of a story by the well-known author, Harold MacGrath, and tells of a young and pretty girl who is hounded by a wealthy man of loose morals, to whom time and money mean nothing when he desires to possess young beauty. The girl has a champion in a manly plumber, William Gorgan, who meets the outside world only through the little basement window of his plumbing shop. He sees and falls in love with a pretty pair of feet, but dares not peep at the owner for fear his dreams will be shattered. The owner is Ruth Warren, a school teacher, who is greatly admired by Norton Colburton, a dissolute man about town. Ruth is about to marry Colburton, but rebels at the last moment and runs away. She decides to take a Cook's tour, and on the boat meets Gorgan, who has been left a fortune. Gorgan recognizes the feet and now falls in love with the girl. Culburton sends an accomplice, known as the "Jackal," to locate them.

In various foreign cities Gorgan is attacked and Ruth accosted by Colburton, who has followed her. Gorgan arrives in the nick of time to save his sweetheart. Colburton is punished and Ruth becomes Mrs. Gorgan.

PROGRAM READER

Allan Dwan's thrilling and colorful story of elemental romance and adventure comes to this theatre on ——— of next ———. In this feature many of the principal cities of the world are supposed to be visited, which gives the director some fine opportunities to show some spectacular exterior settings, and as this angle of production is one of Allan Dwan's strong points, the impressiveness of the picture may well be imagined. Intermingled with the thrills and the elemental eternal triangle action are some genuine comedy scenes taking place between James Kirkwood, who appears as Gorgan, and Ernest Butterworth, who appears as his adopted boy. These scenes are practically sure fire and account largely toward the success of the production. They are realistic and excellently played. The cast, although not very long, includes some of our best screen actors. They are James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson, Harry Northrup, Ward Crane and Ernest Butterworth.

SUGGESTIONS

This feature offers a number of good advertising opportunities. First it has a catchy title, which if billed right ought to attract the eye of any patron. Second, it has the author, Harry MacGrath, who is one of our best known story writers, and third, it has the director, Allan Dwan, whose wonderful productions of late, especially "Soldiers of Fortune," have attracted so much attention through the publicity and exploitation they have been given.

Let your patrons know that it is a thrilling story of plain romance and adventure that takes the three principals around the world before it comes to a happy conclusion. The cities visited are New York, Venice, Cairo, Singapore and Hong Kong.

One bad feature in this production is the fact that it seems to throw a spotlight on Cook's Tours, showing an office of the company and mentioning it in subtitles and inserts.

Still, it seems to the writer, now that the fault has been committed, that it might be turned into good advertising possibilities in that Cook tours are so popular and there are few intelligent people even in the small town who have not heard of this company.

And do not forget to mention that James Kirkwood is back again on the screen. He is known as one of the directors who helped make Mary Pickford famous and did such wonderful work with "Bill Apperson's Boy," which he wrote and directed.

"THE FEAR MARKET"

sheets will not accept a chance to pat themselves on the back on their independence in printing all "the news that's fit to print." Suppose you were to frame a story with a heading "——— (name of paper) Could Make Millions If It Could Be Bought." Then your story explaining. Another headline which will get attention is, "Society Fears the Pitiless Publicity of Its Own Publication." Then give facts concerning the society journals and the way their business is conducted with your reference to "The Fear Market" in the concluding paragraphs.

Use plenty of scene cuts for advertising this production as clothes are an important item in it.

licity department of Select Pictures Corporation, and prior to that was identified with leading companies of the film trade.

Edgar Lewis has completed the first of his western made productions for Pathe, which was filmed at the Paton pier studio at Santa Monica. This is an adaptation of the George Barr McCutcheon story, and was made with a cast headed by Pat O'Malley and Lillian Hall. The supporting cast includes Harry Spangler, Richard Cummings, Alfred Fisher, Maggie Halloway, Will Jeffries, Scott McKee and Gertrude Normand.

William Bertram is the new director of the Al Jennings western productions. Mr. Bartram will be remembered as the director of the Baby Marie Osborne subjects, he having made two series with that tiny star. Mr. Bertram is a member of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and his screen career followed a long one as actor and producer for the speaking stage.

Title for the production made by Robert North Bradbury which was originally "Hollyhocks," has been changed to "Into the Light." The film has been completed and General Manager and President Cyrus J. Williams of Bradbury productions, has taken the subject east. It is the plans of the company to make a series of all star productions.

Phillip H. White, Vice-President and General Manager of the Alkire Productions, left for New York this week with the company's production titled, "An Ace In the Hole," which stars Joseph Bennett.

Brentwood has begun the filming of a new picture starring Zasu Pitts which at present is titled, "Bright Skies." This film is being directed by Henry Kolker who produced the most recent subject starring Miss Pitts.

George Nichols, character actor, who has recently appeared in "The Turn of the Road," and "The Greatest Question," has been engaged by King W. Vidor to play the role of mayor of a small town in his first First National production, "The Family Honor," which is now being filmed. Producer Vidor has leased what is known as the old Newmark mansion in Los Angeles, and the company is making many of the interiors for his first play.

Vincent Coleman

Marshall Neilan this week leased the dining and ball rooms of the Mt. Washington Hotel and used it for interiors in his second First National release. After all scenes were made, the producer acted as host, retaining the orchestra used in the scenes, and a dinner dance was given.

One of the most noted of the famous Sardou plays is to be screened by J. Parker Read, Jr., with Louise Glaum as star. Negotiations for film rights were consummated this week for "Theodora," which was the most suitable vehicle of these plays for Sarah Bernhardt. The filming of her present vehicle, "Love Madness," was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. It is planned that no time limit shall be placed upon the making of "Theodora," and producer Read estimates that six months will be spent in the filming of this subject. A. Lincoln Hart, who has been identified with the production of a number of most successful stage successes, has been engaged by J. Parker Read to aid him in supervision of the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth subjects.

Important Changes in West Coast Studios

There has been a number of changes among the publicity men of the West Coast in the last two weeks. Mark Larkin, whose resignation as director of publicity of the Mary Pickford Company, was told of last week, is succeeded as director of publicity of the Mary Pickford Company by Kenneth McGaffey, formerly in charge of publicity department of the Lasky studios, and where he supervised all publicity matters for the several companies releasing through the Famous Players Lasky corporation.

Malcolm S. Boylan, who has been with Universal publicity department, has resigned to accept similar work for the Samuelson Films, Inc. The vacancy at the Universal Company has been taken by Garret Graham, formerly of the Los Angeles Herald. John S. Dunham is a new member of the Ince publicity department, and Barrett Kiesling has been added to the Famous Players-Lasky publicity department. Charles Condon, in charge of publicity for the Anita Stewart productions, has been giving his time for the past two weeks to the publicity pertaining to the showing of the Anita Stewart production, "In Old Kentucky."

Santell Going with Numa as a Director

Al Santell, whose contract with the Universal expires in April, has been placed under contract by Louis Weiss of the Numa Film Company, and will serve as director of the company's productions which are to be adaptations from well known published novels. Numa Company now has the film rights for the Edgar Rice Burrough's "Tarzan" stories. Present plans provide that most of these films will be made in the east with the use of California studios when weather conditions make it impossible to produce in other sections. Santell is the producer of "Upper Three and Lower Four," "Seeing Things," and a number of other recent subjects.

Pioneer Screen Writer

Eugene B. Lewis is the progressive pioneer scenario writer. He has been writing for the screen since 1920, when in the hey-day of the old Biograph he wrote his first scripts for one and two-reel subjects directed by D. W. Griffith. He has been writing for the screen ever since that time, and every year, in addition to writing adaptations of a number of other stories, he delivers several original stories for the shadow screen. Mr. Lewis has been with the J. D. Hampton Productions for a number of months, and has written several adaptations in addition to "Uncharted Channels" which was an original story. He has unfaltering faith in the future of the screen, as is indicated by his action in recently building a very attractive home on North Benton Way, Hollywood.

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's News

Gouverneur Morris is in our midst.

Emmett King, the actor, is a short story writer.

John Wray is now directing pictures out Ince way.

Doc. Willats is in town wearing specks and a hard hat.

Jack Kerrigan has received fifteen leap year proposals by mail.

Alice Lake and Viola Dana are both wearing pinafores this week.

Betty Bouton studied to be a lawyer, but she gave up Blackstone for the drama.

Lloyd Ingraham suffered this week. He had five teeth pulled, one right after the other.

Bryant Washburn is much irritated because his five year old eldest son is getting more publicity than he.

Harry Caulfield, since becoming affiliated with Sol Lesser's film organization, has found it necessary to give up golf.

Matt Moore, being the only one of the four brothers not married, is said to be staying home nights, as this is leap year.

Wanda Hawley has a new alibi. Servants cause her so much trouble, she can't get down to work at the Lasky studio on time.

J. Stewart Woodhouse sent HOKUM a lot of mimeographed green paper in a fancy two-colored envelope this week. One color was gold.

And this week we welcome another company to our midst. They are going to make High Life Comedies. James Calney is the guiding genius.

Yes, Bill Farnum got here last week, and being unable to get hotel accommodations, he bought a hundred and fifty thousand dollar home.

Since playing with Wallace Reid in "The Dancin' Fool," Bebe Daniels has taken up the hobby of decorating up her dressing room in oriental style.

Rex Ingram had to have a picture of a parrot talking, but said parrot was temperamental, and so after hours Rex gave her chewing gun, and the gag worked.

The "Shore Acres" wreck was staged at San Francisco, and Alice Lake was washed ashore at Laguna Beach, therefore proving that she was in the water almost 500 miles.

Believing that the world has been waiting long enough to know who he will introduce as star this year, Tom Ince comes forth with the information that Lloyd Hughes is the man.

An extra woman playing in a Realart picture refused to take out her false teeth for Director William D. Taylor. "Not for five dollars," she said, and so the ante was raised to ten.

Dal Clawson wrote the editor of HOKUM a nasty letter this week, one filled with sarcasm, so we refrain from writing about him, or any of his wonderful photographic work.

Ethel Clayton can't decide which is the best tire, so she has five different kinds on her machine, and now she is looking for a place to put other wheels so she can accommodate the solicitous tire salesmen.

Allen Holubar was King Love, and Dorothy Phillips was Modesty in Savage's original production of "Everywoman," and that's where it started. Now they are Mr. and Mrs. Holubar, and have been for several years.

Vic. Schertzinger is entitled to the distinction of being author, director, composer, and orchestra leader, and as such a four part person, he appeared at the California theatre the other evening, baton in hand.

Bob Warwick is a great linguist. He got a letter the other day he couldn't read as it was foreign to him who reads French, Italian and Spanish "fluently." "Yes, that's English," his director told him, and he read it without any trouble.

The weather has been just simply gorgeous. In fact, we might say beautiful, but along came a cloud and leaked, and so there has been weeping and wailing amongst the filmers. We could write a lot about the weather this week, but believing everyone here knows as much about the weather as we do, we refrain from it.

SPEAKING OF PUTTEES!

It was impossible for us to help but observe that they are deucedly convenient when the heavens leak. To quote an Englishman, "it is obvious" that puttees will serve well during wet weather. One day this week it rained everywhere in Southern California, our beautiful land of sunshine, flowers, fruits and films, and then everyone wore puttees, and the next day they did not have their trousers cleaned.

HOKUM has dispatched a message to the patent office at Washington to see if any information can be gleaned from the records there which will throw any light on who conceived the wearing of puttees as suitable for a director's.

Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker, Pres.

Chicago, Illinois.

My dear Mr. Rothacker:-

Of paramount importance to us is screen presentation. It is indeed gratifying to us -- and I am sure it will be to you -- that ultra favorable comments of our patrons have been the rule, rether than the exception, when First National Attractions have held our screen. Our box office is the barometer which has greatly influenced our appreciation of First National pictures.

We -- as exhibitors with a sincere purpose -- have ever appreciated the importance of screen brilliancy. Our appreciation has been whetted by First National productions and Rothacker Prints. The consistent quality of Rothacker laboratory production in conjunction with the favorable and pleasing impression made in our patrons, and their unqualified expressions of the fact, is no mean factor among the numerous important details which have made for the condition of our business.

I want to compliment you especially upon the extraordinary quality of the printing and coloring in Miss Pickford's "Heart O' The Hills", which we played at The Riviera the opening week of the New Year. The picture is worthy of the Star -- of First National -- and of Rothacker. I'm sure that every one of the many thousands who saw this picture with Riviera Presentation would be glad to sign their names to the above if given the opportunity.

Cordially.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN"

A New

Mark Twain-Paramount Artcraft Picture

LIKE READING IT AGAIN FOR THE FIRST TIME!

Only Mark Twain could put into words the wonderful charm, the universal heart appeal, of "Huckleberry Finn."

Only he could have written an advertisement worthy of the subject.

But anyone can put into words the box-office appeal of the picture. Three words will do it.

They are: "Breaking records everywhere."

It's a picture the whole family will come to see again and again. It's a picture that builds prestige for your theatre—with the better class of people.

"ON WITH the DANCE"

WITH

MAE MURRAY and DAVID POWELL

Inside Information on Another Great Paramount-Artcraft Picture

"On With the Dance" opened at the Columbia Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, on January 25th.

The Columbia did the biggest business in its history, in the face of the heaviest opposition!

The Dayton Journal said:

> "The story holds far more heartfelt interest than did either 'Male and Female' or 'Everywoman'. It is far more human. The plot is surpassingly romantic and dramatic. The settings are wonders in their massiveness and beauty. Mae Murray proves her ability as a dancer as well as a portrayer of dramatic roles."

Wherever people have heard of New York—the wonder-city of the world—they will flock to see "On With the Dance." For it is the picture of New York—the soul of the metropolis imprisoned in celluloid.

Scenario by OUIDA BERGERE

A Wonderful Entertainment and a Wonderful Drawing Card

Mary Pickford in
"POLLYANNA"
United Artists Corp.

DIRECTOR .... Paul Powell
AUTHORS..........Eleanor Porter and Catherine Chisholm Cushing.
SCENARIO BY .... Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN .... Charles Rosher
AS A WHOLE........Wonderful drawing card and sure to please more than any picture Mary has had in at least a year.
STORY....They admit it's not a story; just a "rainbow" and it surely is pretty.
DIRECTION......Allows star plenty of chances to work in her kid comedy and pathos; material handled cleverly and appreciatively.
PHOTOGRAPHY .... Excellent
LIGHTINGS......Some beautifully lighted closeups of star; all good.
CAMERAWORK......Particularly remarkable in the rain sequence.
STAR......Appears as a youngster throughout; will add to her list of admirers if such a thing is possible.
SUPPORT........Howard Ralston very clever boy actor opposite star; support throughout exceptional.
EXTERIORS......Some very beautiful scenes and some typical country village stuff.
INTERIORS .... Highly appropriate
DETAIL......Everything contributes to general excellence of production.
CHARACTER OF STORY........Pollyanna brings light into various peoples' lives by playing her "glad" game.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,500 feet

They admit in a foreword that "Pollyanna" isn't the usual picture story and term it a "rainbow," and there's not a person in the world that won't stop and rave over a rainbow. Certainly this picture, based on the book and the play of the same title, is going to capture the heart and soul of every audience that sees it. "Pollyanna" is going to "get" them, be sure of that, and it won't be at all surprising if it makes the best record that ever a Pickford picture made.

The picture alternates between laughs and crys. It is one of those that "makes dimples to catch the tears." It starts with a tear when Pollyanna is shown trying to play her glad game over her father's death and before that tear has trickled past the nose the dimple is made to catch it by the wonderfully funny rain-storm sequence showing Pollyanna leaving the train at the little New England village and being greeted by her aunt's maid.

Thus it runs throughout, with Pollyanna and her glad game warming the heart of her hardened old aunt and everyone else in the village until at last they all come to a realization of what she means to them when she is run over by an automobile. The specialist says she will never walk again but the village doctor, her aunt's old sweetheart, cures her and so ends his own love affair happily and sends Pollyanna into the waiting arms of Jimmie Bean, her juvenile admirer.

It is the wonderful bits of kid comedy introduced by the star and Howard Ralston who plays Jimmie and the very unusual subtitles that are responsible for the laughs. And there is one moment of sweeping drama in the picture when Pollyanna walks again. That's great.

Besides young Ralston the supporting cast includes Katherine Griffith as the aunt, Herbert Prior as the village doctor, William Courtleigh, Helen Jerome Eddy, George Berrell and J. Wharton James.

Star and Play Combination Should Break All Pickford Records

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Of course Mary Pickford is a tremendous drawing card but unless the guess is all wrong "Pollyanna" is going to even outdraw all her previous hits because it has another box office angle besides the star, and that is the vast popularity of the play and the book on which the picture is based. As a result you can consider the box office value of this picture practically double that of the Pickford pictures of the past.

And the popularity of the "Pollyanna" play and book is no empty press agent talk. It's fact. To drive it home make mention of the author's names in your advertising and state that it is the "glad play." If they've forgotten the name of "Pollyanna," which is hardly probable, this "glad play" line will recall it all to them.

After you have so advertised the picture all you need do is take out extra insurance on your theater—it may be damaged in the rush for seats. Dust off your S. R. O. sign, reinforce your box office and let 'em come. Records are sure to be broken with Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna."

"It takes a mighty good screen actress to make me cry," a lot of exhibitors will say. Granted, but see Marguerite De La Motte in "The Sagebrusher."

"Roy Stewart's fine in big outdoor pictures, but I can't picture him being romantic." Some will say that. Well, see him in "The Sagebrusher."

And as for Noah Beery: This fine actor just gets your heart so soft and sentimental in "The Sagebrusher" that you find it hard to keep from swallowing your Adam's apple.

Audiences Always Like This Kind of Picture

An heir to a fortune advertises for "a temporary wife" in order to inherit his father's money.

A scheming woman spreads ruin that causes death and unhappiness.

The lovely "bride-to-be" who answers the advertisement is the discharged nurse who, without knowing it, has the fortune in her own hands.

Here is the basis of a good melodrama and a tense, interesting love story—well told and well cast.

Critics may differ about this type of a story, but the public always approves.

Every member of this cast has been starred, co-starred or featured in many screen successes. The picture affords excellent exploitation opportunities.

This is the gist of remarks made in telegrams, letters and long-distance 'phone calls we receive from all parts of North America.

We want to publicly apologize for the unfortunate condition which has made it impossible for us to fill all requests received for the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, issued in connection with "EMPTY ARMS." The first edition was "taken up" almost over night, but the second edition is just off the press and copies are being sent to all those who have asked for them.

"EMPTY ARMS" is a great film. It is already the talk of the trade. It will be the most discussed film of the season from the viewpoint of the "fans."

There is something to the story—something to remember.

It is well acted, too!

"The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" has that unearthly element of haunting beauty which lays hold of one's heart and cannot easily be shaken off. In the boyish grace of Jack Pickford, the exquisite mountain perspectives, and the quaintly clad characters of the picture is reflected the charm that made John Fox Jr's book a classic and a "best seller."

Edgar's idea of his father—rolling in wealth, but remarkably close with pennies.

EDGAR IN A NATURAL MOMENT

Not the best boy in town, nor the worst.
Just a regular American kid.

Edgar's idea of a good time—a pony, a high hat, and the biggest ice cream cone in the world.

IN "Penrod" and "Seventeen," Booth Tarkington revealed himse to the world as the greatest living authority on that mysterio person—the small boy.

In the Edgar stories Tarkington's first original work for the screen- he creates a boy that everybody will revel in——a real American-Boy, neither wholly good nor irredeemably-bac but always human. These are Goldwyn's first two-reel comedies.

The story of his weird boyish career, his mental reactions, his mischiefs his dreams, his loves and his triumphs makes the most fascinating, th most deliciously humorous series ever shown in motion pictures

A PICTURE THAT WILL BE WELCOME FOR A WEEK!

SENSATIONAL? No! And not spectacular, either. But a heart-interest story of real folks whom we all know and principally of a girl's love for a poor, mistreated, little cripple.

MARY MILES MINTER

is the girl — the charming, fascinating, irresistible heroine so delightfully portrayed in Grace Miller White's widely read novel,

"Judy of Rogues' Harbor"

Your patrons will applaud its contrasts of true love and violent passion, of self sacrifice and selfishness, of crushing cruelty and tender, winning kindness. It's a wonderful love story and a yet more wonderful appeal to human sympathy, a picture that will not wear out its welcome in a week!

"Here is a picture that stands out like a cameo from the ordinary run of attractions.

It tells an interesting story in an interesting way.

The cast is an excellent one throughout.

It is instantly apparent that the utmost care was taken in the direction.

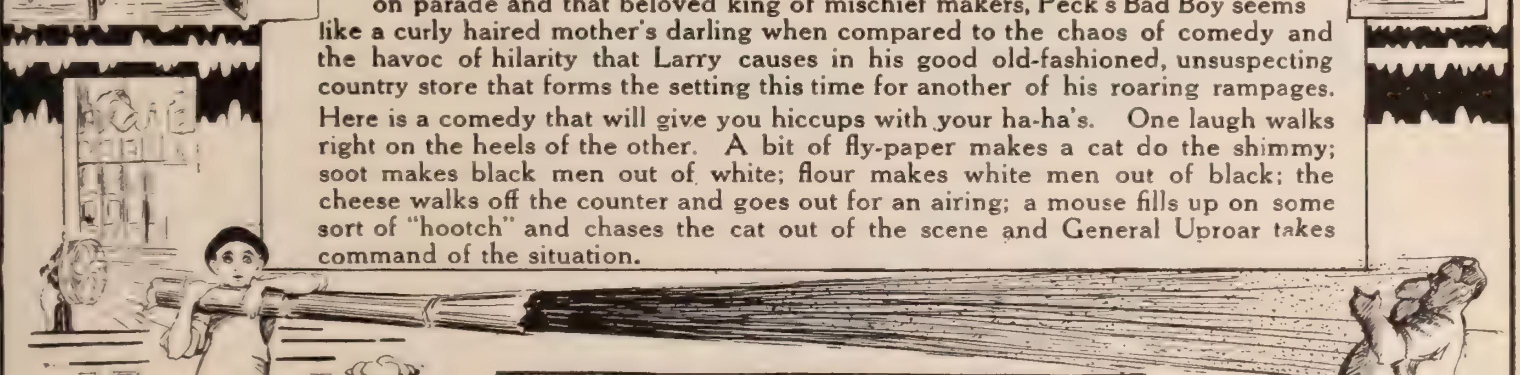
The village loafer gets a molasses massage.

Here's the cat that SHIMMIES!

A Chaos of Comedy—A Havoc of Hilarity!

The famous old bull in the china shop becomes as tame as a poodle dog on parade and that beloved king of mischief makers, Peck's Bad Boy seems like a curly haired mother's darling when compared to the chaos of comedy and the havoc of hilarity that Larry causes in his good old-fashioned, unsuspecting country store that forms the setting this time for another of his roaring rampages. Here is a comedy that will give you hiccups with your ha-ha's. One laugh walks right on the heels of the other. A bit of fly-paper makes a cat do the shimmy; soot makes black men out of white; flour makes white men out of black; the cheese walks off the counter and goes out for an airing; a mouse fills up on some sort of "hootch" and chases the cat out of the scene and General Uproar takes command of the situation.



The Poor Cat Flees from the Enraged Mouse!

First— in the hearts of the public!

"Wanderlust"

From the poem by Gerald Gould

* * * *

Beyond the East the sunrise,

* * * *

Beyond the West the sea,

* * * *

And East and West the wanderlust
That will not let me be.

* * * *

It works in me like madness,
To bid me say good-by!

* * * *

For the seas call and the stars call,

* * * *

And, oh, the call of the sky!

* * * *

I know not where the white road runs,
Nor what the blue hills are,

* * * *

But man can have the sun for friend,
And for his guide a star;

* * * *

And there's no end of voyaging
When once the voice is heard,

* * * *

For the river calls —and the road calls

* * * *

And oh, the call of a bird!

* * * *

The old ships draw to home again,

* * * *

The young ships sail away;

* * * *

And come I may,— —but go I must,

* * * *

And if men ask you why,
You may put the blame on the birds and the sun
And the white road and the sky!

"Wanderlust"

—first of the new series of 1920.

"Scenics Beautiful"

Produced by Robert C. Bruce

It is no unusual thing for a "Bruce" attraction to dominate the program. Sheer beauty of scenery, artistic direction and a charming bit of story, have often won "first honors."

"Wanderlust" is an example of the quality of the new subjects for 1920. In a hundred first-run theatres, it will stand out as "the brightest subject on the bill."

A Check for a Million Dollars is Worthless When Signed by a Bankrupt, but RITCHEY Posters are Always as Good as Gold!

A CHECK is good, or it is bad, depending upon the financial worth of the signer. So is it also with motion picture posters. They are good or they are bad,—and it is safe to judge them by the signature they bear.

To carry the figure farther,—if one has found that the bank has invariably paid certain checks, one grows to consider such checks as the equivalent of cash. If after long years of experience the exhibitor has found certain posters to be profitable posters, he naturally wants that kind of poster all the time. He grows to look for the trade-mark upon it, and when he finds it he is satisfied;—otherwise not.

Which is natural, as it has become associated in his mind with profitable business. He knows how intimate the connection is between photoplays and posters. He knows that he can judge a film before he rents it by seeing it screened, or by the reviews, but he also knows that the public cannot. The public makes up its mind to go into his theatre, or to stay out, according to the appeal that the posters make! Because the RITCHEY poster has everything possible to put into a poster that will make that appeal potent, the exhibitor wants RITCHEY posters! They never make the photo-play they exploit any better, but they always make it more profitable.

The exhibitor bases his regard for them upon the sure knowledge that comes of long experience!

The First Shot Is Fired

¶ Some few weeks ago we sounded a warning on this page that the same forces which have in past years attempted to force Federal censorship on the industry were again lining up for battle.

The first shot has been fired—and one might be moved to remark that the reformers have equipped their weapon with a Maxim silencer.

For, instead of the usual trumpeting call of "Censorship" we read this apparently pointless news story:

"Motion picture films which are objectionable as subject matter would be forbidden from circulation in interstate commerce until a bill reported from the House Committee on the Judiciary during the week of January 19. The bill proposes to bring motion picture films within the provisions of Section 245 of the federal penal code, which forbids the introduction into the United States or the circulation in interstate commerce, of objectionable matter. (R. R. 7629)—From weekly review, Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, January 19—23."

We say "apparently pointless"—and so it is. For, on the surface, just what opposition can be made to any legislation that seeks to curb "objectionable" matter.

But—and here is the joker when motion pictures are the theme—who is to be the arbiter of what is or is not "objectionable?"

And just how does this power define the word "objectionable?"

The only legislation already on the books with which the proposed statute can be compared is that forbidding interstate commerce to "motion picture and other pictorial reproductions of a pugilistic encounter to be exhibited for profit."

No puzzling question of judgment is here involved; "pugilistic encounter" is plain English, Federal prosecutors and courts may enforce its provisions with clean hands.

But are these officials—hundreds of them, naturally of varying degrees of tolerance and intelligence—to define the word "objectionable" as applied to the screen art. Will we have as many fences to hurdle as there are Federal district attorneys?

Or, and it is this that seems likely, would such legislation serve most excellently as the entering wedge for a Federal censor?

What more natural than that Congress, having drawn a circle around the industry, should provide the man and the machinery to see that its victim remained within those bounds?

We are told by one film man that such legislation as this recent proposal, would aid in doing away with State censorship. We don't believe it. We don't believe that even the creation of a dictatorial, omnipotent Federal censor would end the turmoil in individual states.

Regardless of their attitude towards reformers and cranks, political organizations in this day and generation are not abolishing abodes of patronage.

And we are inclined to feel, that after its experience with two-score or more Federal definitions of the word "objectionable" the industry might well be expected to welcome the comparative relief of a centralized censorship.

National Association Combats "Flu"

Publicity Campaign Set On Foot to Aid Exhibitors in Fighting "Panic"—Spread Dr. Copeland's Views Broadcast

TO prevent hysteria and to forestall thoughtless attempt by municipal authorities to close motion picture theatres on account of the influenza outbreak, the National Association of the motion picture industry, through a special committee appointed by President William A. Brady, has launched a nation-wide publicity campaign designed to acquaint the general public and city officials with the importance of keeping theatres open while the influenza is prevalent. The campaign is similar, though of greater scope, to the one which the association conducted so successfully last year.

The committee in charge of the work consists of John C. Flinn of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, chairman; John M. Quinn of Vitagraph, Inc., and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association.

Using Every Means

In its campaign to keep theatres open the National Association committee is using every possible means of publicity. All of this week the motion picture news weeklies are carrying a warning from Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of New York City, regarding precautions to be taken in guarding against the influenza.

In addition to this screen campaign, the committee early this week sent broadcast throughout the country a series of letters and documents showing the wisdom of keeping theatres open.

This material consists of a letter to the National Association from Dr. Copeland, in which the health commissioner commended the motion picture industry for its assistance during the epidemic of last year; and declared regarding the 1918 epidemic that "in view of our experience in New York City, where the death rate from influenza was the lowest of any large city on the coast, we are convinced that our decision to keep the theatres open was wisely made."

"My principal purpose in keeping open the theatres in New York City," Dr. Copeland wrote, "was to prevent the spread of panic and hysteria, and thus to protect the public from a condition of mind which would predispose it to physical ills."

It is this hysteria which Dr. Copeland fears that the committee seeks to prevent. It has sent letters to 15,000 motion picture exhibitors to the editors and advertising managers of every daily newspaper in the country, to all exchange managers, and to the Mayors, ealth Board officials, school officials, chambers of commerce and librarians in every city of 20,000 population and over. With. these letters have gone reprints of Dr. Copeland's letters to the association, reprints of an article published by Dr. Copeland in the New York Times in 1918, showing how New York combatted the plague, and a chart and table prepared by United States Government health officials showing graphically how New York, where theatres during 1918 were allowed to remain open, had the lowest death rate of all the big cities of the country.

Five hundred copies of Dr. Copeland's letter and his article in the New York Times were sent to each of the distributing companies, to be sent by them to their exchange managers for distribution throughout their districts.

In all 35,000 letters have been sent out, accompanied by the material showing Dr. Copeland's stand on influenza. Exhibitors were requested to use their influence with local authorities to keep theatres open, the Copeland statements being place in their hands so that they could go to their health boards armed with evidence that the largest city in the world did not find it necessary during the severest epidemic in recent years to close theatres. The exhibitors also were urged to co-operate in every way with their local authorities in combatting the influenza.

In this connection it is expected the motion picture news weeklies will enable exhibitors to prove of definite assistance to local health boards through the message they are carrying all this week from Dr. Copeland. This message is being flashed on the screen at

LOS ANGELES TO HONOR W. A. JOHNSTON

LOS ANGELES, (Special)—William A. Johnston, president and editor of Motion Picture News, will be the guest of honor at the annual dinner of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, to be held this Thursday evening. Other leading organizations of the film colony are planning to similarly honor the Eastern editor.

Mr. Johnston is scheduled to remain on the coast for about three weeks. His last visit to the colony was in 1915, and he is the first New York trade paper editor to visit the production center since that time.

IMPORTANT COMEDY AGGREGATION FORMED ON COAST—OTHER LATE NEWS

WORD comes from Los Angeles of the organization of the Special Features Corporation, Inc., with a quarter million capitalization. The new firm will specialize in comedy features, to be made by four producing units. A system of exchange will be organized in twenty-six cities. Louis W. Thompson, formerly an exchange man and recently representative of Mary Pickford at the New York office of United, is president; Ward LaScalle, formerly of the Pickford directorial forces will be director general, and H. J. Roberts, formerly with Fox sales force will be sales manager.

The financing of the new corporation is being handled by Aronson and Company, a Los Angeles banking house, representing the Hellman banking interests and one of the largest in the West.

Watterson R. Rothacker is in Los Angeles for a stay of three weeks and will break ground for his new laboratory before returning East.

Sidney Franklin has been engaged by Mayflower and will film the Robert W. Chambers' story "Athalie."

Toledo Houses in Combin

Fourteen Suburban Managers Get Together For Booking Purposes—Exchanges Sitting Tight

FOURTEEN motion picture exhibitors of Toledo, Ohio, representing almost all of the suburban houses in the city, have recently incorporated The Consolidated Exhibitors' Company, with a capitalization of $10,000, for the purpose of establishing an individual booking head, which will book all the pictures for all of these fourteen houses.

The houses affected by this arrangement are the Atlas, Bijou, Pastime, Auditorium, Savoy, White Eagle, Garden, Ivanhoe, Diamond, Lyric, Artcraft, Mystic, Overland and Galena.

In an announcement to the public, made through one of the Toledo newspapers, the Consolidated Exhibitors' Company was formed for the protection of motion picture patrons, and to insure them the very highest grade of entertainment for a minimum outlay. The booking agency will maintain a downtown office, the site of which has not yet been determined. It will guarantee a run of twenty days on any picture it books. And this picture will be booked with the approval of a board of directors elected by the members of the organization.

The Consolidated Exhibitors' Company also guarantees to deliver all prints to the theatres for which they are intended. This is meant to increase delivery efficiency, inasmuch as it will be easier to deliver films to a downtown central point, than to rely on the uncertainties of suburban deliveries.

Just how the booking agency will handle the pictures, and distribute them, has not been formally stated as yet. But if it is their intention of booking pictures blindly, without stating where they are to be shown until the actual release date, then the local exchanges will try to buck the proposition.

The Cleveland exchanges have expressed their individual opinions on the subject. They say that they w have to know at which house their pi tures are to be shown before they c enter into negotiations for booking They will have to know where the merchandise is to be exhibited, a under what conditions.

The Consolidated Exhibitors' Co pany does not affect the downtow first-run houses at all. Its efforts wholly in the direction of the suburb houses above mentioned, and wi houses that run subsidiary releases.

Keynote at Albany Meeting of New York State League Committees—J. A. Quinn Welcomed to Fold—Thirty Exhibitors Present

ALBANY, February 3 (Special).—Percentage bookings were severely criticized at a meeting of members of the legislative and executive committees of the New York State Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League in this city February 3. The sessions will continue tomorrow, at which time the date and place of the state convention will be settled. In the course of today's meeting, it was declared that the unreasonable demands on the part of stars for salaries would serve to eventually put a large percentage of the motion picture houses out of business. About thirty exhibitors from all parts of the State were in attendance.

A resolution was passed by a unanimous vote demanding a uniform contract and abolishing the deposits system.

The meeting went on record with an emphatic declaration against the attempt of certain producers to force percentage bookings on motion picture theatre owners. It was declared today that such was but an indirect method to gain ownership of theatres and of depriving the present owners of all initiative and independence.

O'Reilly Sounds Keynote

Addressing the meeting, C. L. O'Reilly emphasized the fact this afternoon that the exhibitors in their opposition to percentage bookings were animated only by their regard for the rights of the public, which he claimed, were identical with the best interests of the motion picture industry.

The speaker said that the public today looked with great favor upon the motion picture theatre because of the popular prices which the owners were able to charge in the way of admission.

"But once these prices are definitely abandoned and replaced with a scale of prices which is prohibitive to the average family of today, the process of depopularizing the screen theatre will set in. The stars should bear in mind that they owe their drawing power and consequently their salaries entirely to popular favor, which is the biggest asset they have to sell. The exhibitors cannot raise their prices to such heights as the percentage booking system would force upon them and continue to do business. It should be borne in mind that as the public has made the stars it can also unmake them by withholding its patronage, a thing not unlikely if the grasping and unreasonable attitude of the stars becomes more widely known to the public."

In the course of the afternoon, telegrams were sent to Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charley Chaplin and D. W. Griffiths, telling of the stand of the committee on the percentage booking system.

J. A. Quinn of the Motion Picture and Theatrical Cooperative Society, appeared before the committee and outlined his plan for better and fewer pictures, and likewise for reducing the enormous amount of waste which he declares prevails under present methods of production. During the course of his talk Mr. Quinn told of

Censorship Report Compiled

Nature of Draft Unknown; Recommendation for Further Control Expected

THE second move towards what will probably be a report to the State Legislature recommending further censorship of motion pictures in New York State, was made in this city recently, when Mayor Palmer Canfield of Kingston, Rev. Charles O. Judkins of Glens Falls and Walter W. Nicholson of Syracuse, commissioner of public-safety, were named as a sub-committee to draft a general report that will be presented at the mid-winter Conference of Mayors on February 24. The meeting was attended by Walter Hayes of Buffalo, Mrs. N. B. Spalding of Schenectady, Miss Mary G. Peck of New York, R. Alexander Hamilton of Rochester, Rev. Judkins and Dr. Everett B. Martin of New York. In addition, Royal K. Fuller of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was present as the representative of Albert E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company, who was unable to attend because of a recent death in his family. Rex Beach, the author, as well as Mrs. Howard Ganz, were ill. Arthur Friend of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, represented Gabriel Hess, who sailed for Europe last Saturday.

Each of the four sub-committees, named in New York two weeks ago, presented a report. Following each report, there was a general discussion and at the conclusion, the committee of which Mayor Canfield is at the head, was named. This committee will at once draft a general report based on the reports of the sub-committees, and also on the discussion and the suggestions made. This will be presented on February 24, when the State Conference of Mayors holds its mid-winter meeting, and shortly, after to the Legislature itself.

The meeting referred to was closed to the press; but there is a feeling, among legislators, that the report will seek a further censorship of motion pictures in New York State.

Operators in Salt Lake City Go on Strike

Motion picture operators who were members of the union went on strike in Salt Lake City January 25, because of the refusal of the managers of the picture houses to grant them a six-hour day. Their places have been filled and the houses are operating in accordance with the regular schedule, it is stated.

The operators failed to report for work in an effort to force the theatre men to acknowledge a new contract, embodying a scale of wages of $40 and $37.50 per week for chief operators and an increase of 25 cents and 19 cents an hour for relief men, with a six-hour day. The Orpheum and Casino have accepted the new contract, and a temporary arrangement has been reached between the operators and the Pantages, according to Ralph Wardrop, financial secretary of the union. The other houses have expressed a willingness to adopt the new wage scale, but are not willing to grant the six-hour day.

AN EXHIBITOR SPEAKS UP ON FORD WEEKLY

HERE is a new angle on the Ford Weekly discussion that comes from Earl B. Raefstanger, of the Mahaiewe Theatre, Great Barrington, Mass. Mr. Raefstanger writes:

Regarding the Ford Weekly. I am willing to pay for the Weekly and do not think they should write Ford asking for him to give it to Exhibitors free. It is positively the best reel of its kind on the market and contains no advertising excepting that it is made by Ford. Rothacker has made a number of scenics with his name on it and that went alright. I'll say let Ford make his reel and sell it if he can, it is worth all and more than he is charging for it.

Yours very truly,
Earl B. Raefstanger.

P. S. Our film rental runs over 30% a week. I'd like to know where the 10% exhibitors are.

Realart Branch Office in New Quarters

The New York branch office of Realart Pictures Corporation moved this week from the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, to the fifth floor of the Leavitt Building, 130 West Forty-sixth street. Realart's shipping department also moved this week from the Winfield Building, 469 Fifth avenue, to the Leavitt Building.

With these changes, all departments of Realart except two or three of the branch offices now are in permanent quarters. The home offices are within a stone's throw of Grand Central Terminal, and the New York branch office, under the direction of Lester W. Adler, is in the centre of the film exchange district.

Three Realart Managers Reported Sick

Two Realart branch managers are recovering from serious illnesses. Ralph B. Quive, who left San Francisco last week to take charge of the Detroit office of Realart, has been unable to assume his new duties because of sickness. A telegram just received from Mr. Quive states that he is slowly recovering and that he hopes to be out within a few days.

H. E. Wilkinson, of Buffalo, has been very seriously ill for several days from the "flu." In a letter, dictated from his sick bed, to J. S. Woody, Realart general manager, Mr. Wilkinson says that he "looks like an India famine victim, but is beginning to feel first-rate."

J. S. Ragland, general sales manager for Realart, now in the Middle West on a business trip, is reported ill at a hotel in Chicago. It is understood that his condition is not critical.

An Oklahoma City Select Branch Office Likely

The rapid increase of business of the Select organization in the West brought forth an announcement this week from Select's general manager, Sam E. Morris, to the effect that it is more than likely that a Select branch office will be opened up in Oklahoma City soon.

He has sent general representative V. P. Whitaker and C. C. Ezell, manager of the Select Dallas branch, to Oklahoma City to study the possible advantage to be gained by the addition of another exchange to the present Select system.

Associated Advertisers Addressed by Author

Clarence Buddington Kelland, author of the "Sudden Jim" stories, addressed the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard on the part the novelist will play in future screen productions. Among his other remarks Mr. Kelland said:

"Novelists have paid too little attention in the past to motion pictures. The novelist is a person who knows how to tell a story. The motion picture producer is a man who knows how to transfer a story into visible form. The novelist and the motion picture producer should work hand in hand."

Exhibitors to be Represented in "Group"

John S. Evans, representing the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, has filed with Harry W. White, chairman of the Motion Picture Group of Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, an application requesting that two members of the League be permitted to represent the League on the adjustment committee of the "Group," according to a report from the exchange-men's association. Mr. White is quoted as having expressed his assurance that the application would be accepted favorably at the next meeting of the "Group."

Pathe To Have Own Building

Twelve Story Structure Already Under Way Adjoining Present Offices on Forty-fifth Street

GROUND was recently broken on the lots occupying numbers 35, 37 and 39 West 45th street, adjoining the present home headquarters of Pathe Exchange in the Century Building at No. 25, and by the coming Fall a twelve-story structure erected there will be the new home of the organization. The ground area to be occupied by the building is 50 by 100 feet.

The design and arrangement of the structure are the last word in modernity. It is to be 100 per cent. fireproof, with sprinkling appliances throughout and will be equipped with every modern device for safeguarding the occupants. The eleventh floor will be given over entirely to the occupancy of Mr. Brunet and the Board of Officers of the company.

The Art Department, which now employs thirty-odd artists and experts, having long since outgrown its present quarters, will be housed in a commodious glass covered studio on the roof of the structure. It will, in effect, be a building upon a building, furnished with every technical equipment to aid in the production and handling of the enormous amount of art work produced by Pathe, both for its own attractions and those individually distributed through the Pathe Exchanges.

An entire floor will be devoted to the Sales, Publicity, Exploitation and Advertising Departments; and the Departments of Accounting, Supply and Purchasing will also be located in commodious quarters. There is to be a special exhibition room on the floor occupied by the Sales Department for the sole use of that division and prospective buyers. In addition, there will be a projection hall for the routine use of the film committee and for special showings.

After years of domicile in Jersey City, the Pathe News, upon the completion of the new building, will be transferred to New York City. This will, as indicated by Mr. Brunet, vastly facilitate the production and distribution of this feature.

"It was increasingly evident during the year," commented Mr. Brunet, "that the growth of business handled and in the corresponding increase in office and executive forces, that the ever present ned is, and would be for considerable time to come, more room. We have occupied the eleventh and twelfth floors in the Century Building, but in the last year we were compelled to extend our organization to the eighth floor."

Picture Injunction Is Denied

Judge Knox Refuses to Restrain the Release of "The Blindness of Youth"

JUDGE KNOX handed down a denial in the United States District Court, of an application for the issuance of a preliminary injunction restraining the Foundation Film Corporation from releasing their picture, "The Blindness of Youth."

The injunction was applied for by the National Picture Theatres, Inc., claiming unfair competition on the ground that the title of the photodrama, "The Blindness of Youth," was so similar to that of "Blind Youth," in which Lou Tellegen was starred with marked success, and which the National Pictures Theatres, Inc., plans to produce for the screen.

The histrionic ability of Mr. Tellegen played an important part in the denial. Judge Knox declared: "The names of plays, in the absence of the names of actors who vitalized them, are, I think, for the most part tenous; and with few exceptions, we remember the actor rather than the names of the vehicles in which he rode to fame.

"There will be attached to this somewhat different name, none of the reflected reputation or creative genius of Lou Tellegen, nor of his histrionic ability and effort; and I cannot but feel that the persons who will be deceived as to the play and its origin through the similarity of the name will be so few as to be negligible," declared Judge Knox.

Judge Knox could find no attempt at piracy, and continuing with the case he said: "There is no allegation that this actor (referring to Tellegen) is to participate in the picture to be produced by the complainant under the name of 'Blind Youth,' nor is there suggestion that the defendant's picture, 'The Blindness of Youth,' will in any particular attempt to pirate plot, theme, action or motive of the play which Tellegen helped to write, and in which he acted. If this were true an entirely different case would be presented.

"As the litigation stands, I am unable to find that, disassociated from the name of Lou Tellegen, there is in the production of a moving picture drama named 'The Blindness of Youth,' such a degree of unfair competition as would justify my interposition by way of injunction," Judge Knox declared.

Riesenfeld Overture Is Formally Presented

Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, accepted the invitation of the Philharmonic Society of New York to conduct at the first presentation of his "Romantic Overture" by the Philharmonic Society at Carnegie Hall Friday afternoon, February 6. Mr. Stransky's invitation to the young conductor to wield his baton was especially pleasing to Mr. Riesenfeld because it came during Music Week, to which he has devoted much time and effort. On February 8 Mr. Riesenfeld's symphonic poem will be presented by the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, Adolf Tandler conducting.

This twelve-story building will be the home of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and will house the entire organization presided over by Pau Brunet, vice-president and general manager It is located at 35-37-39 West 45th St., New York

Owner of Poli Circuit Buys More Property

Sylvester Z. Poli, of New Haven Conn., owner of the Poli circuit of theatres, recently acquired from the Springfield Realty Trust Company their entire property at the northeas corner of Main and Worthington streets, in Springfield, Mass. Representatives of the Poli interests state the primary purpose in acquiring the property is to open an entrance to his local playhouse from Main street and to facilitate extensive remodeling of the theatre.

Methodists Organize a Picture Bureau

The Joint Centenary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church announces that its Department of Education and Literature has now in active operation a Division of Stereopticons, Motion Pictures and Lectures under the supervision of Dr Chester C. Marshall, which will supply all the demands of churches regarding the screening of motion-pictures in community centers and churches. Dr. Marshall's office is situated at 111 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Local F.I.L.M. Club's Dinner and Dance

The New York F. I. L. M. Club held its annual dinner and dance, Saturday, January 31, in Reisenweber's About one hundred couples were in attendance. This proved to be the most enjoyable affair yet given by the club. Several song and dance artists were present, who kept the guests in a happy frame of mind. The committee having the arrangements in charge was headed by Mr. Murray Beier, assisted by Messrs. L. L. Barent, J. Belman, Frank Gersten, William E. Raynor and Henry Siegel.

Maeterlinck To Write for Goldwyn

Internationally Famous Playwright and Poet Signs Contract for One Story a Year—To Visit Culver City Studios

MAURICE MAETERLINCK, the Belgian poet, novelist, essayist and playwright has signed a contract to write one original story a year for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

In the arrangement made between the poet and the Goldwyn organization, M. Maeterlinck will write one story a year, and will cooperate with the studio staff in the presentation of his work.

M. Maeterlinck will leave for the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., within a few days to learn the technique of photoplay production. The author will travel in a private car furnished by the Goldwyn Corporation and will stop at various cities enroute to tell of his venture into a field of authorship new to him.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet-philosopher-playwright, has heard the screen's call. He will interest you eventually through Goldwyn pictures.

Has Definite Screen Plans

Although M. Maeterlinck has never written directly for the screen, he has always entertained definite opinions about its possibilities as a medium for the wide diffusion of ideals of beauty and of other standards of life. Shortly after signing his contract with the Goldwyn company, M. Maeterlinck gave out the following statement:

"It seems to me that America does not give the motion picture the artistic importance it merits. People seem to consider it an inferior type of art form. In my opinion, however, its potentialities are unfathomable, for it can teach in terms of beauty and of ideals in a manner not to be found in any other medium of expression.

"I feel myself fortunate in being allied with so great a motion picture concern as Goldwyn, an institution that shares these ideals and is bending its efforts to elevate the artistic level of the motion picture. And I am happy to find an organization willing to extend the means of initiating myself into the technique of this new art. Under its auspices I am undertaking this trip to California.

"I hope that by working with the Goldwyn organization and studying seriously the technical questions involved in motion picture production to be able to arrive at results which will have the greatest interest for all.

(Signed)

"MAURICE MAETERLINCK."

Maurice Maeterlinck will journey to the coast with Mme. Maeterlinck in a private car engaged by Samuel Goldwyn. The party will stop at Chicago, St. Paul, Omaha, and several other cities, where he will receive interviewers.

Mr. Henry Russell, manager, and Mrs. Russell will accompany M. and Mme. Maeterlinck on the tour.

The works of Maurice Maeterlinck would fill a long book shelf. Among his several volumes of plays is the exquisite dramatic poem "Pelleas et Melisande," "The Bluebird," "The Betrothal," etc. His Goldwyn contest will link the screen strongly with intellectuals, hertofore aloof.

FURTHER DETAILS OF GOLDWYN-ASCHER BROTHERS' THEATRE DEAL

FROM Chicago come reports of further details on the deal whereby Goldwyn has secured a half interest in the Ascher Brothers chain of theatres. The consideration is reported to have been between seven hundred and fifty and nine hundred thousand dollars. It is now revealed that Ascher Brothers also get an interest in all Goldwyn theatres wherever located and that Goldwyn and Ascher now control twenty-six houses, either already running or in course of construction. By the end of the year the string is expected to total seventy-six.

Nathan Ascher will be in charge of the entire string, with S. L. Rothapfel supervising presentation of pictures, leaving the Goldwyn staff free to center its efforts on production and distributing. The best pictures will be booked for the theatres wherever available. S. L. Rothapfel has already been in Chicago conferring with Nathan Ascher.

Quimby Outlines New Plans

Associated Exhibitors Executive Meets Trade Paper Representatives and Discusses Organization

FRED C. QUIMBY, general manager the newly organized Associated Exhibitors, Inc., January 29th, made a few remarks, supplementary in purpose to the report, published recently in the News regarding the policies and organization of the new association. Mr. Quimby's statement was tempered throughout by a dignified restraint. In fact, the impression one acquires of the new Associated's general manager is that here is an individual, unassuming and genial, but with all, a straight-thinking chap who believes in deeds rather than flowery pronouncements.

According to the statement of Mr. Quimby, the United States, under the plan laid down by the Associated Exhibitors, will be divided into thirty-two districts. At the head of each district will be a parent unit, a prominent exhibitor, holding the franchise for that district. The Capitol Theatre, for example, functions as the parent body for the New York district. These thirty-two franchise-owners will remain a fixed number. Each franchise holder will issue subsidiary franchises to other exhibitors resident within his district. Thus, with the parent franchise-holder as a nucleus there will be organized in each district a co-operative body of exhibitors, allied through the medium of the parent unit with the other district-groups of the Associated Exhibitors.

From the membership of the sub-franchise holders in each district will be drawn a committee, which, acting in concert with the franchise-holder, will establish, with an eye to local conditions, a percentage-rate for that district at which the product bought and distributed by the Associated Exhibitors Inc., will be rented by the exhibitors within that area. This rate will remain constant for all pictures, irrespective of the cost to the producer of the negative. The sub-franchise holder, in allying himself with the parent unit of his district agrees to accept at the rate, determined upon for that district, the product bought and handled by the Associated Exhibitors. In this way, Mr. Quimby says, the exhibitor assures for himself, free of competition and extortionate charges of producers, the best product available for the screen. Or, Mr. Quimby hastened to add, the Associated Exhibitors has not pledged itself to release any definite number of pictures within a limited time. Only the best pictures available will be bought by the Associated Exhibitors, according to the general manager, for distribution by this co-operative body.

According to the plans of the new organization, Mr. Quimby announced, the expenses at present involved in the middleman-phase of the industry—the factors that stand between the producing forces and the exhibitor—will be considerably reduced to the advantage of the producer and the screen-owner. As to the source of supply for the new association, Mr. Quimby asserted that the plans of the organization were broad enough to provide for a supply of product from all available sources, including the independent market. What connections the Associated had already under contemplation with producers, stars, or directors, the general manager could not divulge at the present time.

In conclusion, Mr. Quimby expressed himself as anxious to have it understood that the Associated Exhibitors was an organization "one-hundred per cent owned and controlled by the exhibitors." He said that on Monday, February 2nd, the organization would start its active career, and at that time he would begin official operations as general manager of the new association with headquarters at the Capitol Theatre offices in New York.—*E. New England Chain Gets Pittsfield Theatre

Papers have been passed transferring the Strand theatre in Pittsfield, Mass., to the A. B. and G. Theater Circuit of Boston (Samuel Grand, president and treasurer), which has a chain of motion picture houses throughout New England. The new owners will take possession February 9th. The Strand is to be operated under the management of J. E. Francke, formerly associated with the Shubert interests.

R. S. and W. F. Jensen Buy Pasadena Theatre

One of the important sales reported from Los Angeles during the current week was that of Clune's Pasadena theatre to R. S. and W. F. Jensen, who now conducts the Palace Strand in Gleandale and the Theatorium, a suburban theatre in Los Angeles. Messrs. Jensen are now engaged in building a new house in Pasadena, which will be devoted entirely to pictures.

John W. Allen's Death Shocks Associates

John W. Allen, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with headquarters at Chicago, died in that city Friday, January 30, after an illness of one week. The announcement of Mr. Allen's death came as a great shock to the men of the organization with whom he had been associated for years.

It was during the recent convention that Mr. Allen was stricken, and though his friends and associates had no intimation that his illness was serious, they felt keenly the fact that he was forced to withdraw from the conference and take to his bed.

Mr. Allen is survived by his widow, who was with him through his illness, and by his mother and a half-brother, whose homes are in Kansas.

Morning Fire Does Not Prevent Night Shows

A fire which damaged the cellar of the Central Square theatre of East Boston, Mass., recently is said to have been caused by a bundle of waste-paper becoming ignited and causing an explosion in the gas meter. The fire occurred early in the morning. Owing to the good work of Manager William Dowling, it is said, the usual evening performance was conducted as usual.

L. E. Loeb to Assist A. Kane

Veteran Worker of Industry to Serve in Important Capacity is the Report

LOUIS E. LOEB, a film man of long experience, is the first prominent addition to the staff of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, organized two weeks ago at 452 Fifth avenue, with Mr. Kane as president. Mr. Loeb will act as assistant to Mr. Kane. Mr. Loeb has been an active worker in the industry for about ten years, and has a thorough knowledge of many phases of the business, especially film distribution, in which he has had extensive experience.

When the General Film Company opened offices in San Francisco, in 1910, Mr. Loeb was one of the first employees, acting in the capacity of assistant branch manager for almost five years. During this time, he secured a detailed knowledge of exchange routine. Coming to New York, he became connected with the Home Office of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which was later absorbed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Prior to his new affiliations, Mr. Loeb had been connected with this organization for more than five years in various executive capacities. As the first Special Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation he spent much time and study in the activities of the company's exchanges. When the Artcraft Pictures Corporation was organized, Mr. Loeb became assistant general manager, and perfected and installed the routine of the twenty-eight branches as well as the Home Office, it is stated. With the consolidation of Paramount and Artcraft, Mr. Loeb was given complete charge of accounting in the department of distribution.

Mr. Loeb has gained an unusual familiarity with conditions as they are among the great mass of exhibitors who constitute the backbone of the industry. In the course of his exchange activities, he had made five extensive tours of the country, thereby securing intimate knowledge of national conditions.

Ratify Lesser-Gore Purchase

Members of First National Circuit Sanctioned Transfer of Franchise

THE Sol Lesser Exchange announces that ratification of the purchase by Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit Franchise for Southern California and Arizona from T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, was given this week by the entire membership of the Circuit, exercising a mandatory clause of the co-operative concern's by-laws which makes any franchise transfer or sale dependent entirely upon the approval of the entire membership.

"There was not a dissenting vote," says Robert H. Liebler, president of First National. "The members are particularly encouraged by plans which Mr. Lesser and the Gore Brothers have made known to them for the erection of a $3,000,000 theatre in downtown Los Angeles, in addition to improvements to the Kinema theatre, which they acquire as part of the transaction with Mr. Tally, and which, as a single item will cost approximately $200,000."

"Gore Brothers, with their fifteen theatres in operation on the West Coast, and with their plans completed for the erection of others, constitute an influential exhibitor element as successor to Mr. Tally's theatre enterprises in the franchise, while Mr. Lesser brings to the combination a remarkable and extended experience as an independent exchange operator and exhibitor."

Feist Impressed in Frisco

Magnificence of Picture Theatres Surprise Goldwyn Vice-President

FELIX F. FEIST, vice-president and general sales manager for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, left San Francisco twenty-four hours ahead of the time he had contemplated last night, having been called to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City for an important business conference with Mr. F. J. Godsol, chairman of the board of directors of the Goldwyn Company.

This has broken up Mr. Feist's itinerary. On leaving here, he expected to return to San Francisco when he had finished his business in Los Angeles and at the studios. He probably will go to Seattle after returning to San Francisco, he said, but this point has not been definitely decided upon.

The Goldwyn official had a most pleasant and busy three days in San Francisco. He was much impressed with the theatre activity so much in evidence here, and predicted a big motion picture future for this city. Mr. Feist visited a number of houses here, including the small neighborhood houses as well as the first run and larger district houses.

He declared he was impressed by the modernity and magnificence of the principal district houses of San Francisco, after visiting and inspecting the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres, owned and operated by Kahn & Greenfield; and the Coliseum, which is under the management of Samuel Levin.

MARCUS LOEW DINED B METRO STUDIO STAFF

CANADA

The Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Lim ed, of Montreal, will ultimately undertake e production of moving picture features in anada, and the stars of these photoplays ill be players who are now appearing in ritish productions, according to Louis ote, of Ottawa, Ontario, one of the direct s of the new British-Canadian company.

Mr. Cote declared that the idea of organiz g the Anglo-Canadian company was sug sted by Canadians who had gone to Eng nd during the war and, while there, had come impressed with the belief that there ould be a market in Canada for English ctures.

Announcement has been made that Mr. H. hompson, a former Englishman, has been pointed manager of the Montreal office of e Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited. r. J. B. MacKay, general manager of the mpany, is now in England to complete ganization details.

Moving pictures of representative Cana an industries and various natural re urces of the Dominion will be presented the Canadian Industries Exhibition to be ld in the Royal Agricultural Hall, Lon n, England, in June. Arrangements have en completed whereby the Exhibits and ublicity Bureau of the Canadian Depart ent of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, will ke pictures of leading industrial plants in Canada, while views of Canada's water power resources, forests, mines and fisheries will also be prepared for the London exhibition.

Walter Hepburn, of Vancouver, B. C., chief censor of moving pictures for the Province of British Columbia, has announced that approximately 5,000 reels of film passed through his office during 1919. This constitutes an increase of about 500 reels over the number of reels examined for British Columbia in 1918. The total fees derived by the Province from the censorship of pictures amounted to about $15,000.

In commenting upon the censorship situation in British Columbia, Mr. Hepburn declares that he seldom finds it necessary to condemn a whole picture. "By taking out an inch here and a foot there, objectionable features can be eliminated," he declared.

A sharp discussion occurred at a recent meeting of the City Council of Moose Jaw, Western Canada, when a proposal was made to jack up the theatre license tax to $1 per seat. Alderman Bellamy defended the cause of the theatres, pointing out that the exhibitors were already paying many taxes. Alderman Jackson stated that the local theatre interests had purposely kept the Rex theatre closed in order to stiffle local competition and that the exhibitors were well able to afford to pay a heavy tax. A compromise was effected and the new civic tax is fifty cents per seat, with a minimum of $200 for a theatre.

From Brandon, Manitoba, to Brantford, Ontario, is the jump that C. J. Appel has made as one of the theatre managers employed by Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto. Appel has been in charge of the Allen Theatre at Brandon, but he has been transferred to Allen's Brant theatre at Brantford. G. A. Matthews has been appointed manager of the Allen Theatre at Brandon.

The Canadian and Ontario governments are now competitors in the moving picture field. Both the Dominion and Ontario authorities are producing scenics and industrial pictures at regular intervals and, strangely enough, Clair Hague, of Toronto, the general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, has secured the releasing privilege throughout Canada for both sets of official government subjects. .The Dominion government, through the Exhibits and Publicity branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, has been releasing one picture every two weeks. The Ontario government is observing the same schedule, but will alternate with the Dominion government releases so that there will be one new official film each week for Canada.

A few days ago Sir William Jury, London, England, British distributor of Canadian government pictures, cabled instructions to increase the shipments of official films to him from one to ten prints. The Canadian scenics have become highly popular in the British Isles, it is reported.

Hamilton, Ontario, with a population of 105,000, is to have a brand new Pantages theatre with a seating capacity of 3,000. The city, when the house is completed next January, will therefore have the largest theatre in Canada in proportion to size of local population, it is declared.

BUFFALO

The Majestic Theatre company of Buffalo has certified to the Secretary of State in Albany that it has increased its capital stock from $15,000 to $150,000. The company operates the Majestic theatre, managed by Dr. Peter C. Cornell.

The Variety theater, 740 Fillmore avenue, has been sold to Gusta and Meyer Wallach, for a sum said to exceed $75,000. V. Bielanski was the former owner.

Maurice Cohen, formerly a member of the Universal and Gardiner Pictures, Inc., sales staffs, has been engaged by Manager Henry E. Wilkinson of Realart as a sales representative. Mr. Wilkinson screened Mary Miles Minter in "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," in Shea's Hippodrome Friday evening, January 30, and received many laudatory comments on the production.

Grip, or "flu" call it what you will, has struck the First National exchange like a thunderbolt. P. H. Smith, the manager, and Otto Siegel, asst. manager, are both confined to their beds, and Mr. Smith's secretary is also ill at her home.

K. H. Woolson, formerly with the Phoenix Cheese company, New York, J. S. Savage, former manager of the Abbott and Como theatres, Buffalo, and R. H. Pearch, Jamestown, have been assigned to the new Albany office of the Gardiner Pictures, Inc., by F. M. Zimmerman, sales manager, who has just returned from a "rest cure" in the South. T. R. Gardiner, president, announces that the Rialto, Rochester, has closed a successful two week showing of "Eyes of Youth," in spite of bitter cold weather.

J. F. Kirsch, manager of the Buffalo Dooley exchange, is now serving over 125 exchanges in this territory. Mr. Kirsch recently accompanied Thomas W. Dooley to New York to purchase a serial and several big features. The company has recently bought 26 original Billy West comedies made by the Emerald Motion Picture company. They will be released two a week.

J. H. Michael, manager of the Victoria theatre and chairman of the executive committee of the New York Exhibitors' League, is giving his patrons at the "Vic" double bills at almost every change of program and according to the box-office figures they are much appreciated. Mr. Michael is now active in a campaign against advertising on the screen.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro branch, made a trip to Utica and Schenectady last week and returned with contracts bearing the signatures of the managers of the Alhambra and De Luxe in Utica and the Palace in Schenectady. Mr. Kahn reports business booming in both cities.

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, left the city Sunday evening, February 1, for New York "on important business."

Nazimova made her bow to Buffalo in "Stronger Than Death," at both the Shea Court Street vaudeville house and the Shea Hippodrome on Sunday, February 1. The big production was shown in both houses and capacity audiences were the rule throughout the day and night.

Andy Sharick, Select exploitation man, is meeting with unusual success in his work in Western New York. His recent campaigns in Syracuse and Jamestown have brought him several letters that are flattering indeed.

CLEVELAND

The Photoplay Program Service Company has recently been organized in Cleveland with A. T. and T. Lederer in command. The company gets out neat programs for a number of the motion picture theatres of Cleveland and the surrounding towns. Every week there is a new cover to the booklet, attractive in design, and convenient in size. It is meant to be a pocket memorandum of the pictures of the week at your favorite movie house.

Audrey Munson has burst upon the Ohio film fans through the medium of Leon D. Netter, general manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Cleveland, Ohio. Miss Munson has entered into an agreement with Mr. Netter to appear in person in Ohio, West Virginia and western Pennsylvania with a revival of her picture, "Purity." The photoplay star and artist model was in Cleveland one day last week, and signed up the contract.

Dave Warner, one of the well-known Warner brothers, has taken over the distribution of "The Pendelton Round-Up, 1919 Edition," for the northern part of Ohio. He will distribute the film through his own exchange in this part of the state but has turned over the southern section to George Wilson, of Wilson Film Company, Strand Theatre Bldg., Cincinnati. Warner has also turned over his Hart and Jennings pictures to Mr. Wilson, for release in the southern part of the state.

Morris Levision, who has been office manager of the Dave Warner Films, 410 Sloan Bldg., Cleveland, has left the distributing end of the industry, and will henceforth be allied with the Warner Brothers in Calision has been associated with the Warners fornia in the production branch. Mr. Levision has been associated with the Warners ever since their entry in the motion picture field. He was with them in Pittsburgh over twelve years ago, and has been connected with them in various capacities ever since.

Nobody was allowed to sleep in the Erie Street cemetery this week, to substantiate D. W. Griffith's statement in "The Greatest Question" that there "ain't" no such thing as ghosts.

M. A. Malanay, publicity manager of the Cleveland Loew theatres, offered $25 reward to any man who would spend a night all alone in the cemetery. $75 was offered to any woman with nerve enough to deal with spooks.

Applicants? Malanay was swamped with 'em. Seems as everybody is wild to make the acquaintance of an honest-injun-spook—especially if there is a reward for the spoiled night's rest. Hundreds of men and women wrote in to the Euclid Theatre, where "The Greatest Question" opened this week, wanting to comply with the requirements of the request. But the society in charge of the Erie street cemetery entered an objection to the plan, and refused to have the burial place made the scene of public advertising.

INDIANAPOLIS

February second started off "Norma Talmadge Week" in Indianapolis. The Colonial headlined Miss Talmadge in "She Loves and Lies" and the Isis in "The Way of a Woman."

It was also a great week for Mother Eve. The Circle played "Even as Eve" and the Alhambra, "Eve in Exile."

Fifty-seven motion picture houses in Indianapolis are in competition with two legitimate, four vaudeville and one burlesque theaters according to a survey just completed by the Advertising Club. Of the Fifty-seven, eleven are downtown and the remainder neighborhood houses.

One of the biggest deals of the month in Indiana photoplay circles was the incorporation of the Artcraft Theater Corporation, which will operate houses in Franklin, Ind., with capital of $200,000. Directors are William E. Green, Charles Brummer and Don O. Newland.

SEATTLE

JACK WEIL, manager and president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, that handles the new Chaplin pictures on the Coast, reports exceptional business. Mr. Weil has been forced to put on more men, one being Harold Canefield, formerly with Pathe at Portland. "12-10" is going exceptionally well wherever shown, said Mr. Weil.

Fred Fisher, who has gone to New York on important business, has left the office in charge of George G. Maxime, who is taking good care of the First National in the Northwest.

It is claimed that Jensen and Von Herberg, who now own the Liberty and Coliseum in Seattle and other theatres in the Northwest exclusively, will erect their new $1,000,000 palace at Fifth and Westlake.

Tom Tomilson, formerly assistant manager of Vitagraph's Seattle exchange, is now assistant manager of the Greater Features Company, Jack Lannon president.

James Clemmer, of The Clemmer, has been forced to take a flying trip to New York and other Eastern centres.

"The Miracle Man," which recently played to crowded audiences at the Strand for three weeks, played at the Mission this past week to another crowded house.

CINCINNATI

A new exchange, to be known as The Wilson Film Company, will be opened February 1 by George Wilson at 301 Strand Theatre Building. Mr. Wilson is well known throughout the Cincinnati territory, as he served for four years as manager of the local Standard Film Service Exchange, and more recently was connected with the sales force of the Cincinnati Select Exchange. The new exchange will handle features and short subjects throughout southern Ohio and Kentucky.

Is the Randolph theatre on Randolph or State street? The answer is that the popular Jones, Linick & Schaefer house is now on both streets, as the commodious new State street lobby has been opened to the public, giving an entrance from each of these busy streets. The new lobby is of beautiful marble tile, fifty feet wide and one hundred feet in depth, giving additional space for the waiting throngs. The run of the "Copperhead," which opens at the Randolph on February 8, promises to be an event of unusual importance in the Chicago moving picture world. Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer are strong for the Americanization propaganda idea, and it is planned to spend $8,000 for exploitation and advertising to put this picture over in a big way.

Chicago has a new movie heroine named Gwendoline with a $350 kick. Her other name is Bishkow, and she is the pretty cashier of the Illington theatre. One night last week she gathered up the receipts at closing time and started with them for the Broadway Strand theatre, headquarters of Marks & Goldman, who operate a string of South Side houses. Two men followed her aboard a street car, and one of them seized her and demanded the money. In the scuffle Gwendoline dropped the money to the floor and kicked it under the motorman's feet and the robbers, alarmed by her screams, did not stop to pick it up. "Some kick," opined Miss Bishkow, and carried the $350 safely to the boss. Some heroine, we say.

Announces Sennett's Plans

E. M. Asher, Producer's Representative, Arrives in New York; to Open Office

E. M. Asher, personal representative of Mack Sennett, arrived this week in New York on the 20th Century Limited, coming direct from Los Angeles. He will open offices in this city in the interests of the Mack Sennett Comedies and brings with him the five-part super-production, "Down on the Farm," the previews of which, he says, promise a sensational success.

That "Down on the Farm" will hit the bullseye of popularity Mr. Asher believes is certain, because it projects all those elements of story-telling that never fail, when garbed in "different" aspect, to win the enthusiastic approval of the public. The scene is rural and so are the characters. The unique quality of "Down on the Farm" arises from the blending of three different strands of picture expressiveness—comedy, serious drama, and travesty. It is a work in which the comedy genius of Mr. Sennett finds its highest and most ingenious form of expression, says Mr. Asher.

The most important item from a news standpoint is Mr. Asher's announcement of Mack Sennett's determination to occupy the field of largest endeavor—without abandoning in the least his devotion to comedies of brilliance and brevity. Mr. Sennett promises a sensation when he releases his first seven-reel production. This will be followed during the year by two or three more creations of equal size and importance. These will be called Mack Sennett Super-Productions. Even the first will be no experiment in the genius of Mr. Sennett, since his capacity to handle pictures of larger measure has been triumphantly demonstrated in "Mickey."

Second will be a series of productions of five-reel proportion in the size and spirit of "Down on the Farm." These will be identified in the Sennett schedule as "Special Comedy Features" to distinguish them on the one hand from the seven-reel super-productions and on the other hand from the two-reel productions. Ben Turpin, Marie Prevost, Louise Fazenda and Phyllis Haver will be featured individually in these comedies.

United Theatre Men Meet

Syracuse Scene of Important Session
Five New Members Admitted to Concern

POSSIBLY one of the most enthusiastic and beneficial meetings held was the United Picture Theatres of America meeting, which took place at the Yates Hotel, Syracuse, N. Y., on the 22nd. At least 50 per cent. of the franchise holders in Northern and Western New York were present. Many important improvements and policies were suggested, voted on and adopted at this meeting. A classification committee was appointed which was as follows:

Emmet Cornell, Eckel Theatre, Syracuse, chairman; J. S. Burnham, Temple Theatre, Cortland; W. A. Callahan, Regent, Rochester; J. J. Walker, Lincoln, Schenectady; James B. Kelly.

Part of the results of this meeting was the admittance of five new members, and the general endorsement and adoption of all policies as laid down by the United Picture Theatres of America up to date. One of the chief subjects of discussion was the dominating entrance of Wall Street into this industry, and plans and policies were proposed which will eventually offset outside interference toward any members of this wonderful circuit of theatres.

Another meeting of United Picture Theatre Exhibitors was held at the Hayward Hotel, Rochester, Wednesday, Jan. 28th, at 2 p. m., at which Mr. J. A. Berst, President of the United Picture Theatres, and Mr. Harry Hall, Vice-President of the United Picture Theatres of America were to be present.

methods and conditions which he said prevailed in California studios. He said that the waste of time and film was almost unbelievable, and that it was high time for the exhibitors to take a hand towards putting a stop to this waste.

Mr. Quinn declared that the majority of claims being made by producers as to the cost of five-reel negatives was either the talk of paid publicity men or that their own methods were responsible for the waste and for the consequent high figures of production. The speaker said that there were today a number of young and ambitious companies in the field fully able and anxious to demonstrate their ability to produce as good pictures as are now being turned out at from 60 to 75 per cent below the cost which is now claimed by many producers. Mr. Quinn asked for the support of the exhibitors for his organization. A committee will be named to confer with Mr. Quinn in getting at the best methods of cooperation toward bringing about the production of good and at the same time moderately priced features. This committee will report at the state convention.

Among those present today were: Sydney Cohen of New York, president of the league; Jules Michaels, Harold Franklin, Buffalo; J. A. Quinn, S. I. Berman, Samuel Sheer and J. J. Whittman, New York; Fred Elliott, George Roberts, Albany; Morris Silverman, Schenectady; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; W. H. Linton, Utica; Irving Salyeards, Rochester; Emmett Cornell, Syracuse; Henry Manus, Brooklyn, and J. Schwartzwalder of Auburn.

Brunet Elected to Commerce Board

Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just received another honor in being elected for a two-year term as a member of the Directorate of the Franco-American Board of Commerce and Industry. This organization is comprised of the most prominent men of the United States engaged in promoting the best business relations between this country and the sister republic.

Along with Mr. Brunet, there is included in the Board of Directors of the Franco-American Board such well known and influential New Yorkers as Albert Breton, Vice-President of the Guaranty Trust Company; Joseph T. Crosby, Vice-President, National City Bank; Paul Fuller, Jr., of Coudert Brothers; Ernest Iselin, of A. Iselin & Co.; Arthur B. Leach, of A. B. Leach & Co.; H. Michelin, of the Michelin Tire Co.; Jean Revillon, of Revillon Freres, and J. R. Munoz, Vice-President of the Cosmopolitan Shipping Company.

It was only a short time ago that Mr. Brunet was accorded the great distinction of being elected an Administrateur of Pathe Cinema of Paris, the great international motion picture organization. Mr. Brunet is the only Vice-President of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who has been paid this high tribute.

Simplex Undisturbed By Fire

E. M. Porter Issues Statement Outlining Extent of Damage by Blaze

THE glaring newspaper headlines occupying front page position in the New York press of Saturday, January 31st, carried beneath them a story which would indicate that the entire Simplex plant had been fire-swept and was entirely wiped out. This idea is quickly dissipated by a statement issued by E. M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Machine Company, which gives the real facts concerning the fire and resultant damage.

E. M. Porter

"The Simplex banner is still flying," says Mr. Porter, "and we want all of our friends to know that while it is true that we lost one of our buildings we are in no way crippled so badly as the first news stories carried in the daily press would indicate. In explaining our reasons for not being so badly affected, it might be well to say that our manufacturing plant covered four distinct buildings.

"The offices, mechanism, repair and general departments are located in the twelve-story building at 317 East 34th street; the carpenter and lamphouse shops are on the opposite side of the street; the lens factory is at Morris Park, L. I., while the printing, nickel plating, electrical, enameling and screw machine departments occupy the five floors of the building at 327 East 34th street.

"It was the latter building that was burned on Saturday last when a fire broke out in a manner that has not yet been determined, at 4:30 a. m. While the fire fighters were still pouring water on the flames, a meeting was called in our Executive Offices and plans were quickly evolved whereby our production program would be carried out as nearly as possible to schedule. This will be made possible through the putting on of a night force in the main building where duplicate machines of those in the burned building are located. The nickel plating, enameling and screw machine work has already been arranged for on the outside for the time being, and with the completion of tools for our Type 'S' lamps and pedestals there is no reason why the turning of Simplexs out in regulation quantity should in any way be affected.

"At the same meeting referred to in the foregoing, new leases for additional floor space equivalent to that in the burned building were entered into and the equipping of these floors is already under way. There is no question but what this fire affects our plans, but in the matter of over-production only as we had just completed a program that called for increased production far above that maintained last year. With the equipping of several other floors in our main building this program will be resumed and things go along as planned before the fire.

"Fortunately, all the work carried on in the burned building was such that can be taken care of in other ways in this emergency and need not force us to take advantage of the many offers that have been made to us from other quarters. Our distributors have responded wonderfully and it is a source of intense gratification to us to know that we have an organization built up that does not even pause when faced with the loss of one of its buildings."

Mr. Porter adds that he appreciates very much all of the messages that have poured in upon him from Simplex users as well as from the representatives of the industry and wishes to take this opportunity of thanking them for the spirit that prompted the sending of these messages.

DUDLEY THEATRE
2200 WASHINGTON STREET
ROXBURY, MASS.

Tuesday, January 27, 1920.

Mr. Jenner,
Manager United Artists Corp.,
43 Winchester Street,
Boston, Mass.

Dear Mr. Jenner:---I have refrained from boasting of the business done by any picture in any house with which I have been connected during the past 20 years, yet I feel that it is no more than a just tribute to Mr. Griffith and his wonderfully artistic "Broken Blossoms" to say that in the face of the worst snow storm and blizzard that Boston has experienced in years, Saturday, January 24, this picture broke the house record at The Dudley Theatre by nearly $100.

In the corresponding three days, during the life of the house, the record is topped by but one other feature, and in this case it was vacation and holiday week, with advanced prices on the holiday, that helped in swelling the receipts.

The Dudley caters to the middle class of people---whole-hearted and whole-souled working men and their families, and while it has been said that "Broken Blossoms" was distinctly a picture for the "higher-ups", to the credit of my clientele be it said, that the dissenting opinions as to story, types of characters, development and atmosphere, were few and far between.

Very truly yours,

Geo. A. Haley
Manager.

WHEN "Broken Blossoms" received its New York premiere it was hailed as a triumph of artistry by the critics—especially those previously inclined to scoff at the screen art. When it began its career as a regular picture theatre attraction there were those who said, "It will go fine with the high brows, but not for the 'ordinary folks." And then to our hands comes this letter above citing experiences with a "working class audience." What's the answer? Are picture audiences growing more appreciative of that intangible thing called art? Or are "film men" inclined to set too narrow limits on the public's tase?

The Press Book by the Men Who Use Them

A Series of Articles Secured by C. L. Yearsley, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the First National Exhibitor's Circuit

THE series of articles under this heading is proving quite a number of things among which is that both the exhibitor and the photoplay editor are really looking for aid in their work of exploiting pictures. The contributors to this week's page are no exception. They want help and they tell what kind of assistance they desire. The first article is by George R. Newman, managing editor of the Louisville Evening Post, a competent newspaperman who knows his business. The second is by O. Woempner, manager of the New Park theatre of Minneapolis, a suburban house which makes a specialty of advertising its attractions in up to date ways. Both articles are interesting and instructive. Read them.

By GEORGE R. NEWMAN

Managing Editor, Louisville Evening Post

SAMUEL G. BLYTHE wrote an article on England a few years ago in which he described a visit to the Tower of London.

Far up on the battlements of the Tower, Mr. Blythe discovered a sentry passing to and fro. There was nothing in sight for him to keep watch and ward over save a lonely, isolated cell.

Mr. Blythe's American mind at once formed the inquiry with regard to the sentry, "What is he here for?"

Investigating he discovered that some two hundred years ago an important prisoner had been placed in that cell, which was left unguarded. The prisoner escaped. To prevent a repetition of such a calamity, orders were given that a sentry should be posted at that part of the tower. A sentry had been kept there ever since, when Mr. Blythe made his visit.

The reasoning was that what had happened once might happen again and though long years had passed since any prisoners had been kept in that cell, the sentry was still posted and paced his rounds because Lord so-and-so had escaped two centuries before.

We laugh at the English for this trait but we can detect the same failing running through such keen institutions as American newspapers and, by inheritance perhaps, in such thoroughly modern creations as the advetising adjuncts of the motion picture.

They do things because somebody else did those things once upon a time and made a hit. They forget that the original feat, or the custom, may date back fifty years; that the successful stunt may have been imitated to the point of frightful staleness or the custom have died away altogether.

In the column of death notices of papers in the largest cities of the country you will often see a notice of death with a line similar to this "Boston, Philadelphia, Schenectady and Moline, Ill., papers please copy."

Every newspaper knows that no other paper copies death notices by request. Yet because this custom prevailed at some time far back in the stage coach, tallow candle days, it still lingers.

Once upon a time an actress had her diamonds stolen. The newspapers of that day printed stories about it and the actress and her business staff found that it was real advertising.

At another era it was discovered that eccentric behavior on the part of people of the stage, such as taking milk baths, having snakes or alligators for pets and wanderings from the high-ways of accustomed things would insure a certain amount of notoriety that was mistaken for real advertising.

Diamond stealing, milk baths, etc., are antiquated but inquiry of exhibitors and motion picture editors in Louisville indicates that the inspiration for press sheets is drawn from the same source. There is too much exploitation of the exaggerated and the fanciful. They play up the personal affairs of the stars and place them in extraordinary attitudes before the public.

Picture patrons of course are interested in motion picture stars but not to the extent of wanting to hear fantastic stories or fairy tales about them.

It likes to read about the idols of the screen, their careers and their affairs but these chronicles are far more effective when they carry conviction.

"Why are the strong points in a picture so often neglected in the press sheets?" is a query heard from many exhibitors.

Often a picture will have a wealth of attractive features which could be used to the greatest advantage in advertising and exploitation but which the exhibitor does not know about until he sees the picture run in his theatre. Then it is too late to take advantage of them.

The men who prepare the press sheets have a certain guide that is available in any part of the country as to what the public wants. Let them consult motion picture fans, go out and ask the first people they meet what they like to read about pictures.

Here are some points gathered in Louisville:

Don't give the story of a picture complete. Give an idea of what it is but keep the surprise and the suspense intact.

Reading all about a picture and knowing how it will end dulls the zest. It takes the tang from it.

Exhibitors see patrons come in toward the close of a picture and stand with their backs to the screen that they may not see the end.

They want to be carried along with the picture and experience the excitement and emotion that accompanies the development of the plot.

Reading the story complete is like listening to the person in the seat back of you who has seen the play before, tell what will happen next.

Give the careers of the different players. The stars do not absorb the interest of the patrons. They are alert to the other members of the cast. Remind them that a certain player played such a role in another famous film. The degree of interest that can be aroused here will be found surprising.

The names of every important member of a cast should be given on the press sheet with a brief summary of his or her record in pictures. The directory of the Motion Picture News can be consulted with benefit in preparing press sheets.

Exhibitors and editors agree that this is a feature of unusual interest to the public and no feeling of jealousy should be permitted to interfere with its thorough presentation. The fact that a player did excellent work in the picture of a rival producer will serve to increase interest in your picture in which he is now appearing.

There is more interest now in true life stories than in romances. This should be borne in mind in telling the public about the stars.

A story of the early struggles of Mary Pickford carries deep and genuine interest.

A far fetched story that Mary Pickford is descended from the Kings of Ireland doesn't fool anyone.

A motion picture editor in Louisville received some publicity matter about a famous star. The story was that she possessed an Oriental rug which some Eastern potentate had presented her father, "the late Mr. ——" when he was traveling abroad. The editor knew that the star's father was still engaged in his work as a railroad man in Louisville; that he had probably never been east of Pittsburg in his life and that the story of the star's rise from obscurity and hardships to the place she had gained would afford far better reading than the Arabian Night fictions the press sheet maker had woven. So, too, with the story that a certain star was born in Egypt, when he knew she was a native of a nearby town.

The advice of the exhibitors and the motion picture editors of this section to the gentlemen who prepare the press sheets is to cease trying to dazzle the public and make a diligent, genuine effort to learn what the public likes to read about motion pictures and motion picture actors. Then they will have a better understanding of what to put in their sheets to make them of value.

By O. WOEMPNER

New Park Theatre, Minneapolis

GIVE us more practical suggestions on inexpensive methods of exploitation.

Cut down the amount of space devoted to the life history of the star, her pet poodle and her ingrowing toenails.

Put a little ginger in your advertising samples and make them briefer. Stronger language and less said would get better results. No one wants to wade through a lengthy and weighty advertisement.

And above all else make your synopsis shorter; we want to get at the meat of the story with the least possible delay and with the least possible confusion.

Of course, we simply could not get along without the press sheets, for we cannot grab our information about the pictures from thin air, but there does seem considerable room for improvement.

While we, like all other suburban exhibitors in the Twin Cities, do little or no newspaper advertising, we are solely dependent upon the press sheet and advertising accessories to get out our handbills, prepare our screen advertisements and arrange our lobby.

We must understand our subject and the chief source of our information has always been the press sheet. More power to those who are trying to help us in this understanding.

Personally I consider the press sheet gotten out by Paramount-Artcraft to be the best. Metro's is not bad, while First National's is fair.

Recently we showed "Daddy Long Legs" at the New Park for two days, and of course we had to depend on the press sheet to help us put it over.

Horater Divises New Advance Sale Plan

Pantheon Theatre Manager of Toledo Plays to Thirty-two Thousand Admissions in a Week

FORTY-THREE shows within a week, including a New Year's eve matinee, showing to nearly thirty-two thousand people in a theatre with a seating capacity of one thousand, is the record set by the Pantheon theatre, of Toledo, Ohio, and which was made possible by the successful installation of the selling of advance sale of admission tickets, and the refusal of seating anyone after the performances of "Broken Blossoms" began. Harvey C. Horater, managing director of the theatre, turned the trick, which worked beautifully without any confusion or annoyance to anyone, and he himself states that "less than twenty tickets were exchanged or money refunded during the engagement."

The plan that he worked and which can be followed by other live-wire exhibitors in the country is best explained by Mr. Horater himself. "The Pantheon has a seating capacity of 1,000," he says, "and the performance of 'Broken Blossoms' ran for one and three-quarters of an hour, fifteen minutes intermission and another fifteen minutes for the prologue, overture and prelude.

"The theatre opened each day at eleven o'clock and there was a performance regularly, every two hours thereafter, always on the dot. When the show began, we closed the doors and allowed the people inside to have an undivided and attentive view of the picture. Naturally we kept people as comfortable during the waiting hours, as was possible, but we did not do anything more or less than had been announced in our advertising. They were not discontented, because after their turn came, they had seats in the theatre and were never disturbed for a single moment. Then too, there was that added advantage of having the crowds standing in the lobby of the theatre, waiting to get inside, all of which is of wonderful 'word-of-mouth advertising' advantage. Once the show over, it took less than ten minutes to clear the house and seat the next audience.

"These crowds came continually during the entire week, not once or twice, but continuously, more than ever attended any theatre or production in Toledo. This is remarkable, too, by reason of the fact that there was snow and rain during the week.

Lobby of the Pantheon showing employees in costume and the decorations used

"Here's the trick I did with reserved tickets. There were 938 tickets printed for each performance, each day's tickets being of a different color; for instance, Sunday, red; Monday, white; and so on throughout the seven days. I had the 11 o'clock series printed with a large A on them, the one o'clock series with a B and so on for the entire series of performances until the nine o'clock series for the evening.

"The advance tickets were put on sale two weeks before 'Broken Blossoms' came to town, and only seven hundred of each show were sold in advance, while 237 tickets of the remaining tickets were held at the box office for those who cared to go anytime and 63 tickets, the remaining seats, were not sold, they were held for holdovers, or those who cared to remain longer than one performance.

"Remember, no one was seated after the rise of the curtain. This in my mind was remarkable, since we sold nearly five thousand tickets in advance of the first performance. The attendance for the 43 shows was over 31,000 paid admissions. Can you beat it?"

There is no reason why Mr. Horater should not be enthusiastic over the success of his scheme on advance sale of tickets, but he goes further by saying that he left no publicity or advertising medium unturned to bring about ultimate success. Three weeks before the opening they started to advertise in all the daily papers, using nearly two thousand inches of space, and for two weeks before the show they conducted a billboard campaign in the city and surrounding territory, using 150 twenty-four sheets, 200 six sheets, 200 three sheets, and 100 sixteen sheets, all for a two weeks' stand and 500 one sheets, one week, the latter to freshen up the centralized section; 7,800 sheets in all were used.

Exploitation of the picture did not finish with the work done in advertising, billsboards and publicity, but the management gave the performance every attractive advantage. The stage of the theatre was beautifully decorated with a Chinese setting, effectively lighted in dark amber, the lobby and vestibule of the theatre was rich in its profusion of apple blossoms, foliage and interspersed with lanterns lighted with different colored electric lights. The ushers and other house employees were gowned in new silk costumes, especially made for this occasion, and several cages of singing canary birds did their part to make an attractive entertainment.

Grauman Scores With Elaborate Prologue

"Living Paintings of the Old Masters" Proves Artistic Event in Los Angeles Amusement Circles

SID GRAUMAN, managing director of the Grauman Theatrical enterprises in Los Angeles, hose swift strokes of genius have been comented upon many times in these columns, scored other distinct artistic triumph the week of Januy 12, in fact, to even be more explicit, he scored double triumph!

Sid Grauman is the one exhibitor who oftimes sents more than one unique act incidental to a gram, as exemplified recently on one occasion a Toy Ship act and an Indian concert pianist he latter being presented with weird atmosphere, duced by scenic and lighting effects), and on anher occasion by a Human bird act and a Backood's spectacle.

However, the first of his most recent duo of hievements was to present "Living Paintings of e Old Masters," some of the greatest works of rt of Rembrandt, Rubens and Van Dyck being produced. The act opened, revealing, with the rting of the curtains, the interior of a vast art llery. Here and there were small paintings and hings on the walls, while in the center, in a ssive gold frame, were posed the living characrs, immovable and immobile as marble, seeming r all the world a part of the painting. In fact, e public was puzzled, remarks overheard indicatg that many thought Mr. Grauman was exhibitg some original masterpiece! Then the characrs stepped out of the frame, which was immeiately enclosed by purple drapes, and danced a umber interpretative of the theme of the painting. he usual beautiful shafts of colored light played pon the whirling dancers, and with so exquisitely n artistic background, the scene was truly enhanting. Each painting was a subject absolutely iffering in character from the one preceding, and ust so each dance differed. The applause following the termination of the final number was deafning, and was significant of a tremendous triumph or Sid Grauman.

Views of Sid Grauman's novelty number described in the accompanying story

Edwin Schallert, dramatic editor of the Los Aneles Times, a man of wide experience and deep rtistic sensibilities, proclaimed the act a distinct tep forward, lauding Mr. Grauman for his courge in presenting an obviously classical act in so ppealing a manner as to command the plaudits f a middle class audience. He further stated that he act was prophetic of an era of artistic greatss in motion picture theatre presentation.

One would be inclined to believe that the average showman would be satisfied with this unusual achievement, but Sid Grauman has always by his side the Angel of Discontent. A man happened in to his office one afternoon and stated that he was manager of a troupe of Maoris, who are the aboriginal New Zealanders. They represented five cannibal tribes, and performed war dances, canoe dances, and "Haka" dances, besides singing native melodies. Sid Grauman tried them out, and concluded that their fierceness, fantastic dances, and strange appearance would prove a novelty. The next thing to figure out was a mode of presentation. The upshot was that the act was presented in the following manner: A Burton Holmes Travelogue, "The Maoris of New Zealand," cut to about one-half its original length, was thrown on the screen. The public thought this was just another film number, and the native habitat of the Maoris, the grotesquely carved wooden idols, the tattooed cannibals, the village rites, ceremonials and quaintly ludicrous dances proved of extreme interest. The final scene to be depicted on the screen was a boat scene, with native Maoris at the oars. As the picture irised out to a pin point, the screen raised in the dark without the audience discerning it, and there irised in the same scene on Grauman's stage, with the Maori warriors shouting and the Maori women weirdly chanting. The effect was dynamic, and again the cheers of an audience carried away to the very heights of enthusiasm symbolized another Grauman success.

It certainly did the work. We got out between 4,000 and 5,000 handbills and circulated them in the neighborhood, and for four weeks before the showing we advertised "Daddy Long Legs" on the screen.

Did it get results? I'll say so. We raised the admission price to 25 cents, and in the two days of the showing we did the biggest business in the history of the house.

Despite Bitter Cold Weather Personal Appearance Attracts Record Business

MONDAY, January 11, is a day which will long be remembered by the amusement public of Hartford, Conn., and incidentally its police department. On that day, Richard Barthelmess, a former student of Trinity College, which is located in Hartford, returned to the scenes of his Alma Mater, and the whole town turned out to do him honor. The excuse for Barthelmess' presence in Hartford was the presentation at the Palace theatre of "Broken Blossoms," a picture in which he is the co-star with Lillian Gish.

The seating capacity of the Palace theatre is 2,000 seats, and Barthelmess was scheduled to appear in person twice that evening. An hour before the afternoon performance was dismissed crowds began to assemble on the streets for the first evening show. Hartford, as many people know, is the insurance centre of the United States, and all the insurance offices are within close proximity of the Palace. They dismiss usually at 5:30. When this hour arrived the crowd in front of the theatre was augmented by the clerical forces of these institutions, and, to make a long story short, the police reserves had to be called into action. Even with this assistance doors were broken, women fainted, while some of the latter, on discovering their inability to gain admission through the lobby of the theatre, rushed the stage entrance, and were only driven back by the strong arm work of a couple of bluecoats.

The theatre was crowded before 5 o'clock and the police succeeded, after the mob had been informed that no more seats could be obtained until the second evening show, of forming two lines, both of which extended on Main street in two directions from the theatre for more than a block.

The presence of Barthelmess in Hartford was in response to an invitation from J. F. Clancy, manager of the Palace theatre. They have known each other for years, their friendship dating back to a time when Mr. Clancy was the manager of the Dominion theatre, at Ottawa, Canada. Barthelmess was his stage manager during a summer season of stock. When "Broken Blossoms" was booked for the Palace by the Poli booking department, Mr. Clancy wrote Barthelmess, inviting him to come to Hartford the opening night of the picture. His letter remained for weeks unopened in his hotel, he being at the time in Florida with Mr. Griffith, on a trip which incidentally almost cost the lives of Mr. Griffith and h tire party. Upon Barthelmess' return to York, he immediately replied to Mr. Clanc cepting the invitation.

In honor of Mr. Barthelmess' former cc tion with Trinity College, Monday evening set aside as Trinity Night. The theatre was orately decorated in blue and gold, the colo Trinity, while the members of the faculty a party of Barthelmess' fraternity brothers pied the boxes. Another party of friends of thelmess, who had enthertained him at di were also among the guests. Barthelmess wa troduced at the two shows by Mr. Clancy, the former in two well prepared speeches ga his auditors some very interesting side light the personal side of Mr. Griffith and his g as a director.

The picture was advertised within a radiu 20 miles, and probably no other production "The Birth of a Nation" was advertised as tensively. The papers for weeks ahead ca special stories about Mr. Griffith and the pic while at every turn was a billboard or wir card calling to mind the coming of the pic A special orchestra, under the direction of Ar Schwartz, played the special score.

To sum up, "Broken Blossoms," in spite the coldest week of the winter and snow sto which almost blocked suburban traffic, playe one of the biggest weeks in its history.

cians, the latter playing native instruments, used during the performances, giving a contin musical setting to the picture, with the Chi music forming a very attractive feature. The tive musicians played from "off stage" at m portions of the picture, giving it all a wonde mystical effect.

Mr. Horater enthusiastically states in the con sion of his communication that "altogether 'Brc Blossoms' unquestionably was the biggest th pulled off in a movie house in Toledo."

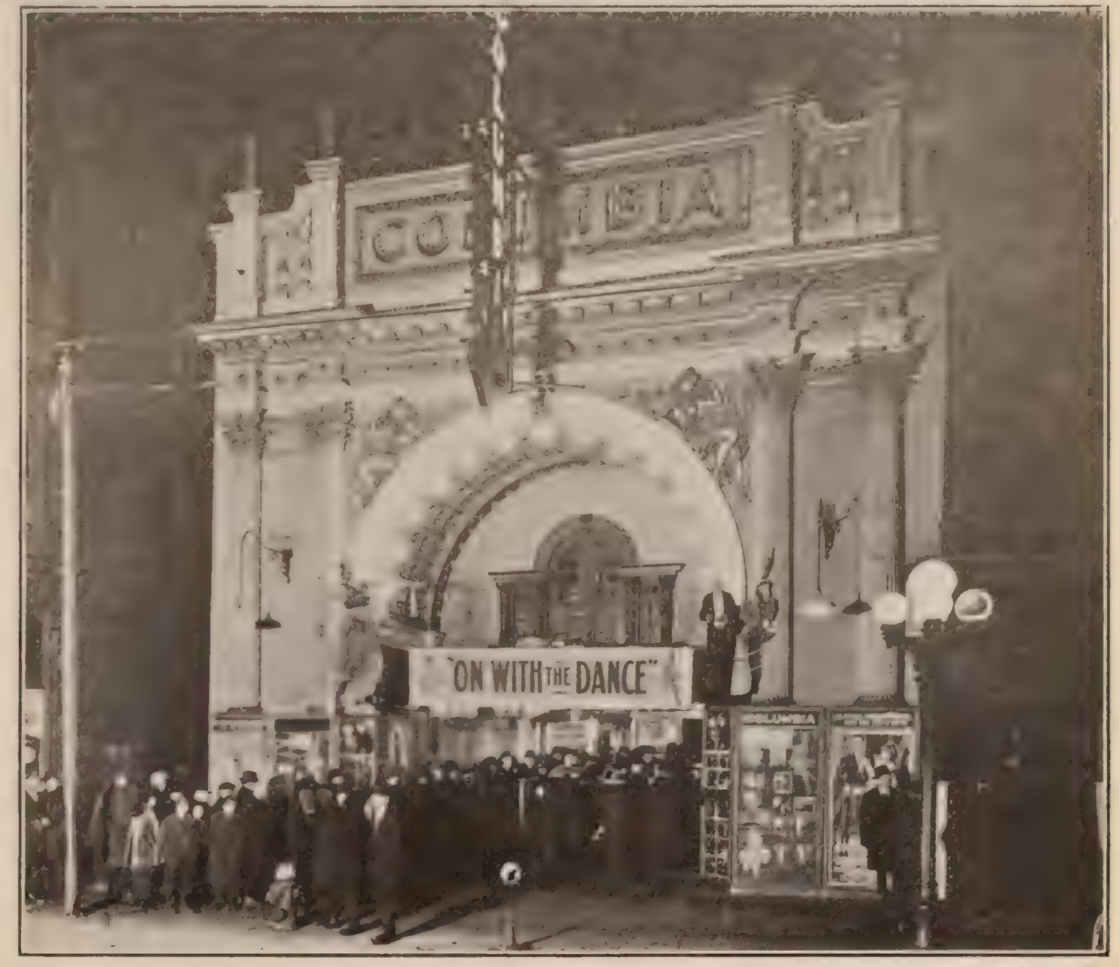
Charles Gross, Manager of the Columbia Theatre, Dayton, Establishes New Record in Newspaper Exploitation



Front view of the Columbia theatre where "On With the Dance" received its premiers showing

ONE of the most extensive exploitation campaigns ever conducted for the showing of a picture in Dayton was accorded "On with the Dance" by Manager Charles Gross of the Columbia theatre of Ohio's capital city, assisted by an exploitation man from the home office of Famous Players-Lasky.

It was decided to make the biggest play through the medium of newspaper publicity, so the exploitation man immediately got in touch with W. K. Mathews, Sunday editor of the Dayton Journal. They decided to publish, as the feature of the Sunday Journal, a three-color ten-page section entirely devoted to the picture and its various features.

But difficulties presented themselves. Because of the shortage of paper it was thought for a time it would be impossible to print the special "On with the Dance" features, even after the advertisements and copy were in type. However, the exploitation man was persistent, so it was arranged to omit the paper's regular magazine section for that one day to allow the section to go through. The front page carried an artistic layout of scenes from the picture, combined with three-color art work by F. E. Appel, a staff artist of the Journal. The back page was devoted to a three-color full-page advertisement of the theatre and picture.

The inside pages carried advertisements of local firms, each advertisement featuring the title and carrying one or more pictures of Mae Murray. Only page and half-page advertisements were admitted, and many advertisers, who heard of the elaborateness of the section, were refused space because their applications were received too late.

The edition made such a sensation on Journal readers that it was sold out completely early Sunday morning.

A music store arranged a window display featuring the song "Patches," which was used as the musical setting for one of the dance episodes in the picture, and a banjo orchestra at one of the leading hotels also featured this tune and used a card to tie it up with the picture.

Another hotel displayed a frame with stills from the picture arranged after the manner of a lobby display of a theatrical production.

A large piano store adjoining Keith's vaudeville theatre arranged one of its windows as a stage and for twenty minutes each afternoon and evening, as the audiences passed, a dancing girl did several special numbers.

Large cut-outs of Mae Murray and David Powell and a banner announcing the picture were displayed on the front of the theatre.

In all of/ the advertising and in the feature stories in the special section of the Journal the fact that the picture was being given its world premiere showing in Dayton was played up. Additional emphasis was given to the fact that the picture showed New York life of to-day and presented many metropolitan scenes.

Press Book Idea Which Registers With Us

THE Goldwyn press book for "Water, Water Everywhere" contains the following practical suggestions for exploitation of this latest Will Rogers picture:

If the length of your engagement of "Water, Water Everywhere," justifies your using a fairly elaborate stunt, it is suggested that you get up a small booklet embracing about four or more pages. The outside front cover should contain the following in scare-head type: "Rumor that 'Blankville' Will Go 'Wet.'" The inside front cover should contain a large picture of Rogers and the caption: "The man whose ideas may kill prohibition in Blankville."

The first page should contain a "bumper" story of how Redstone turned "wet" and about Will Rogers, whose ingenuity turned the trick, and how it inspired the men of your town to contemplate a similar coup. This story should contain no mention of "Water, Water Everywhere," but should serve merely as a follow-up "teaser" to get the interest of readers up to a high pitch.

The following pages should contain the big smash, announcing the engagement of "Water, Water Everywhere," at your theatre, a selection of scenes from the picture and a photo of Will Rogers. In planning this spread be sure that it ties up strongly with the "teaser" copy that has gone before.

Another logical objective for cooperation is your local shoe store.

Cleveland Exhibitor Gives "Beloved Cheater" Good Billing

PERHAPS no picture of recent release has brought forth quite so much difference of opinion as to the proper manner of billing as "The Beloved Cheater," Lew Cody's latest starring vehicle.

In this connection an interesting example of exploitation comes from the Stillman theatre of Cleveland, where M. A. Maloney, advertising manager of the Loew circuit of Cleveland houses, has recently played the picture to very satisfactory business.

In the main Mr. Maloney followed out the suggestions of the producers press book, which was to bill the star and use epigrammatic bits of selling talk relative to the "Beloved Cheater's" knowledge of women and the way to handle them, especially those which originate in the titles of the film itself, such as "I can win any girl I can kiss." Solomon must have felt the same way about it—but they trained mothers-in-law better in those days." "A kiss you can't remember seldom amounts to anything. Sanitation and eugenics never enter into a serious love affair."

He used small space daily with a line cut of Cody's very distinctive profile at the left of the column. On the right he made his announcement, with the selling talk of the variety mentioned added. That was all, except the liberal use of a booklet gotten up along the same general lines as we have indicated, which he distributed freely about the city.

The whole campaign was reasonably close to being a novelty. There is always a reading market for epigrams, even if they be platitudes. People read Mr. Maloney's pointed quips and became interested. They went to see the picture, found much that interested them and went out and told others who had not been attracted by the advertising. The result was a very satisfactory business from a very small advertising appropriation, since Cleveland exhibitors now go in for half pages regularly, which cost considerable money.

"There are only eight notes in the scale," Maloney said, speaking of his methods of advertising, "and still no two tunes are alike, but some will be punk and others will be good. It's the same with motion picture publicity. We all have the same material to work with. Only once in a while is there an opportunity to spring something altogether new. But, as a rule, we all start off together. Whether the results are successful or not depends upon how well we adapt the material at hand to the public needs. When we hit a harmonious chord then we have pulled off a successful campaign. But when we don't, then the discord can be heard half way round the world."

Novelty Idea for Christmas Performance

A DISTINCT novelty in Christmas gifts was offered to residents of Nashville, Tenn., by Harry Sudekum, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre. He had special booklets printed, with covers of holly decorations and other Yuletide greetings, each containing twenty tickets of admission to the Knickerbocker, good at any time during the coming year. The books were sold at a slight discount from twenty times the regular admission and made a wide appeal as gifts to lovers of motion pictures.

The supply ran out before Christmas in spite of the fact that Mr. Sudekum used only two lobby displays in advertising them. The one display was at the Knickerbocker and the other in the lobby of the Princess theatre, a vaudeville house, also controlled by Mr. Sudekum. Constance Talmadge in "The Virtuous Vamp" was the Christmas week attraction at the Knickerbocker, and the two lobby displays were linked up with the picture by a little placard containing the words:

"A Christmas invitation from the Virtuous Vamp."

Gives Patrons Chance to Beco Dramatic Critics

APPEALING to one of the most suscep senses of the human being, C. Teorey, m ger of the Orpheum theatre, Williston, N. D., accomplished a distinct novelty in the cause of ploitation for a special feature production.

When "The Hoodlum" was booked at the pheum, Mr. Teorey was determined that his motion matter should be vastly different from other campaign he had ever launched. He previously played "Daddy Long Legs" and exploited the fact that this production was Pickford's initial attraction from her own stu to be distributed; that when "The Hoodlu playing date came near he wanted to strike something new to promote this second Pickf special.

The story, he found, proved to be good explo tion matter. He featured "the drop of a rich h ess through a coal chute" and other such phra while thinking deeply in his hunt for the elu "something new."

Finally he found it. Instead of touting the traction with a high personal endorsement or t of leading citizens he determined to give every p son in Williston a chance to become a dram critic.

Thus was born one of the most unusual exploi tion campaigns and one of the most popular e thought of in that vicinity. Through an arran ment with a local newspaper it was agreed t prizes would be offered for the three best critici of "The Hoodlum."

Especially were those people who had tri scenario writing asked to contribute. The opp tunity, it was stated by the editorial department the newspaper, offered a good chance for any a bitious screen writer to give his own ideas abo the production.

Although the contributions were limited to 3 words, it kept the newspaper judges reading un late at night to decide on the winner.

The "friendship" spirit had a great deal to with the success of the campaign. Residents Williston reading an opinion of a person they kne were anxious to get an individual impression on t picture.

"The Hoodlum" proved to be even a great success than "Daddy Long Legs."

Harris Gives Newsboys Fre Show

WILL D. HARRIS, the enterprising manager o the Grand theatre of Columbus, Ohio, gav Mabel Normand's "Pinto" its premiere, with th audience composed of Columbus newsboys. In s doing he not only gladdened the hearts of some o America's future presidents, but boosted the Stran theatre into the news pages of the papers for som free publicity, which included kind words for bot the theater, Mr. Harris and "Pinto."

The good will of the newspapers and the news boys is something that should not be neglected. A little liberality in free shows is always a sur method of producing the desired result.

Omaha Sun Entertains Distinguished Guest

General Pershing is Persuaded to Attend a Showing of "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Sun Theatre

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING, himself, occupied a box in the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., last week to witness "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production.

Petroleum kings and European royalty may visit the Sun theatre some day, but the picture palace will never again see the glory of last week when General Pershing was there.

The famous soldier's visit came in response to the invitation of Harry Goldberg, live-wire showman, who learned that his home town was next on General Pershing's itinerary, and who decided that the visit would be incomplete without a view of the American adventure story.

A telegram was dispatched to headquarters of the Pershing party in Lincoln, Neb. Through one of General Pershing's aides came back a response which was not over-encouraging, but which spurred Mr. Goldberg on to put through his ambitious plans. Acceptance of the invitation depended upon consequent arrangements to be made by the city authorities when the Pershing entourage appeared in Omaha, according to advice from the General's aides.

Did Mr. Goldberg come to the conclusion that it was a rather impossibly big stunt to get one of the greatest and most famous soldiers of the world to come to his theatre and witness the current attraction? If he felt that way he didn't show it in his activities with the city authorities, persuading them that the General really ought to see the picturization of Davis' great novel.

There were many other attractions and much competition for General Pershing's presence, but the perseverance of an exhibitor won again, as it has been doing so often of late.

General Pershing came to the theatre, accompanied by a formidable looking staff. Crowds gathered. Photographers got busy. And the newspapers quite naturally gave the Sun theatre liberal publicity.

"It is a fine entertainment," General Pershing told Mr. Goldberg, "and the battle scenes are excellent."

The famous soldier's staff was equally enthusiastic. One of them declared the viewing of the picture was one of the most pleasant and relaxing hours of the General's strenuous day in Omaha.

Of course, after the picture had been shown Mr. Goldberg had no trouble in inducing General Pershing to stand in front of a welcoming, home-made three-sheet to be photographed. The General was very busy and there were no gaps in his schedule, but "Soldiers of Fortune" had compensated in advance for the delay.

Advertise Your Big Ones in a Big Way

"WHEN a big picture comes to town advertise it in a big way. If you don't nobody will know it. If you do everybody will talk about it, whether they have seen it or not. While motion pictures are booked well in advance, a theatre must concentrate its advertising on the current showing and can pay only little attention to future showings."

That is the policy of the New Casino theatre, Jacksonville, Fla. As a consequence, when this theatre booked the Universal production, "The Right to Happiness," and picked it as a picture above the ordinary, they planned an advertising campaign to take the city by storm.

Every theatre advertises in the newspapers. The Casino wanted its ad to be the dominating one of the week for "The Right to Happiness."

Jacksonville awoke on the Sunday of the first showing of the picture and took the newspapers off the doorstep. There was the usual run of feature articles and sections to the Sunday Times-Union. Printed in four colors was a special section of four pages devoted almost exclusively to "The Right to Happiness." A huge double page spread advertisement occupied the center pages. By clever composition the pages fairly breathed importance. Big letters added force to the ad, while a string of pertinent questions captured the reader's interest. The front and back pages were taken up with pictures and sketches of the production and little articles on members of the cast. Enough outside news items were interspersed to keep the "news" value of the sheet. Enough subsidiary advertising was done around town with posters, sniping, etc., to keep the name of the picture before the public.

The Casino management found that by advertising the picture in this big way it was unnecessary to use any other exploitation stunts. They are careful, however, not to make a habit of this advertising, as a constant repetition of the same for any but the best pictures would deaden its effect. Because of this policy, when they do advertise big the city knows they are featuring a special production and the house plays to S. R. O.

Strand of Denver Gave Serial a Good Start

GIVING a serial a good start is important all exhibitors will admit. With this in mind the Strand theater of Denver, Col., left nothing undone to inform Denver theatre goers of the merits of the Ruth Roland production, "The Adventures of Ruth."

The Strand chartered a flat car from the street railway company and mounted on it two 24-sheet and a 6-sheet. On the front was a powerful siren that was kept in full blast. The flat car was coupled to a work car and drawn over every line in the city on January 17th and 18th. In addition to this stunt, the Strand displayed twenty-five 24 sheets on the serial, distributed 10,000 cardboard keys on which were printed the announcement of the serial and also distributed 10,000 blotters similarly marked. The House management reported tremendous crowds for all showings on the two days.

The Strand theatre is one of the William Fox houses and caters to a high class patronage. The success of the first episodes of the Roland serial was marked and the Strand management is convinced that the exploitation given the picture before its opening entered largely into this fact.

A most effective window display arranged for the "Auction of Souls" engagement at the Hippodrome theatre, Lancaster, Pa.

Lancaster Pa. Famous For Something Besides Modest Priced "Torches"

PARTLY to vindicate exploitation as a generality, but mainly to live up to his reputation as one of Pennsylvania's stellar showmen, G. M. Kruppa, manager of the Hippodrome theatre, Lancaster, recently accomplished the greatest theatrical feat in the history of his city with a special feature attraction that had been timidly declined by two prominent exhibitors of Lancaster.

Reason for the polite turn-down of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian, was a matter of money. As in a number of other cities, the maximum receipts which a picture might inspire had been determined in Lancaster. Above that was the dead-line of impossibility. At least managers of two important houses felt that way.

But there was one exhibitor—G. M. Kruppa—who took a chance through the inducement of a percentage engagement. With the running expenses of an 850-seat theatre at stake, this exhibitor offered exploitation that brought a few more than 2,750 paid admissions into his house the opening day of "Auction of Souls." This means that during the day and the three performances, about 200 Lancasterites stood up to witness his attraction. Here's the way he went about it——

The first of the six exploitation devices adopted by Mr. Kruppa to put over "Auction of Souls" was a daring step. He bought every available inch of billboard space in Lancaster. Outside of the cigarette ads, "Auction of Souls" was the most prominently displayed phrase in the city during that eventful week.

The second step was an innovation in Lancaster. Through an arrangement with the local street car company, every trolley car carried a sign advising that "Auction of Souls" would show at the Hippodrome three days of December. The thousands of peopde who relied on the street cars for transportation were unquestionably impressed.

An attempt to reach the transient population of Lancaster was made through the medium of placing artistic stands in the dozen hotels of the city. Prominently located in the lobby of each hotel, this promotion scheme was a constant reminder to visitors who doubtless were anxious to discover a means of passing time.

The fourth step was in the form of a tie-up with local song-shops and dance orchestras. Mr. Kruppa arranged with his orchestra to cue "My Armenian Maid" in the music score for "Auction of Souls." Through the courtesy of the local McCrory store an effective window display was arranged and a good-sized display announcement gave the details of the showing of "Auction of Souls" at the Hippodrome. During the few days preceding the picture local dance orchestras featured this fox-trot and announced the playing of this number in conjunction with the showing of the picture at the Hippodrome.

As a fifth plank in the platform of his exploitation campaign, Mr. Kruppa arranged for the placing of a window card in 300 of the most prominent business houses in Lancaster. In addition to this, twenty-five one-sheets were placed in new positions. These sheets were printed special and designed to meet local needs.

The newspaper exploitation was launched five days previous to the first showing of the attraction. Large display ads featuring the "fact, not fiction," element of the picture and vividly relating the tense moments that could be expected in a picture which pictured the experiences of a Christian girl in a Turkish harem were used. Sensing the novelty of the attraction and in reciprocation for the display ads, the editorial departments of the various newspapers became liberal with news space.

Each of the foregoing methods used by Mr. Kruppa was a complete and thorough exploitation campaign in itself. Many times had motion picture attractions been brought before the Lancaster public with no more exploitation than the amount used in any one of Mr. Kruppa's six steps. The money expended was larger than the amount ever appropriated for an exploitation campaign in the history of Lancaster, and it was with unhidden interest that rival exhibitors in that city and nearby towns awaited the results.

New Wrinkle in Advertising That Costs Little and Does Much

E. W. COLLINS, the enterprising manager of the Jonesboro Amusement Company, operating the Grand, Empire and Liberty theatres, at Jonesboro, Ark., is the originator of what he terms a new "wrinkle" in exploitation, and certainly it is one which will recommend itself as practical and efficient to every exhibitor who lives in the smaller towns where a personal canvass of the news stands is possible.

Mr. Collins' idea is to make practical use of the National advertising some of the producers are doing. Through an arrangement with the owners of the various newsstands of the city he is able to insert on the same page with every ad for pictures in the magazines being sent out to Jonesboro residents a "sticker" reading, "These pictures are shown in Jonesboro at the Grand, Empire and Liberty theatres." He also has a free ticket printed on gummed paper which he implants on the page of the magazine containing an ad of a feature he is to run which entitles the bearer to an admission. In return for this the dealers all agree to advertise the fact that this free ticket goes with the magazine and in this way he hopes to create new readers for the film magazines, and in consequence, create more interest in the houses and their offerings. Here is an inexpensive and novel advertising idea which can be utilized indefinitely by nearly every exhibitor. Give it a trial and thank Mr. Collins for originating the idea.

St Paul Vies with Sister City i Exploitation

WHAT may well be termed the most elaborat presentation any film play ever got in th city of St. Paul was given Anita Stewart's "I Old Kentucky" at the New Liberty theatre re cently.

St. Paul is recognized as the birthplace of th stage drama by Charles T. Dazel, hence when th film version of the play, which had held up fo twenty-seven years as a stage play with unrivalled success, it behooved Manager R. E. Braddock of the New Liberty to give the play the acme of artistic presentation. And he did. And he did it in a way that will live long in the minds of St. Paul theatre folk.

In the newspapers B. C. Ferriss, publicity man, and F. C. Hinds, adveritising director, gave the film play an exceptional "send off," making Mr. Braddock's work of carrying out the high standard established a difficult one indeed. However, encouraged by the reception given his artistic presentations of "Back to God's Country," "Broken Blossoms" and "The Miracle Man," Mr. Braddock evolved a series of exploitation stunts which put the finishing touches on a good job to the complete satisfaction of many thousands.

In addition to a street parade twice daily put on by a pickaninny band dressed in gaudy uniforms, Mr. Braddock carried the atmosphere of "In Old Kentucky" to the extent of making his entertainment a truly double show. An augmented orchestra started the entertainment on its way with an overture composed of Southern melodies. As the strains of a Southern fantasie faded out the curtain rose and disclosed a dozen pickaninnies on the stage in front of a plantation cottage. The darkies trummed banjoes, hummed and sang "Dixie," "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground," and other tunes that will live as long as the Ethiopian race. Little pickaninnies danced a number of original dances, and so true to life was the music that even the score of chickens who lent atmosphere to the scene by their presence hopped about in unison.

The prelude lasted about twenty minutes and the film was flashed on the screen amid colored light effects and faded off the screen in the same manner. When the race scenes came upon the screen in the fifth reel, "pluggers" behind the screen lent atmosphere to the scene by cheering the horses in reality giving voice to the moving but silent figures on the silver sheet.

Mr. Braddock took full advantage of many opportunities offered for lobby advertising and arranged his spacious lobby to resemble various scenes from the film.

As the result of the 100 per cent. exploitation of "In Old Kentucky," the film broke all records established by any picture ever played in St. Paul by several hundred dollars and created such a strong demand for a repeat showing that Manager Braddock has booked the film for a re-run the first week in February at his original prices.

The High Lights of Broadway's Shows

ONE of the first subjects to be shown as moving picture entertainment was Jules Verne's "Trip the Moon." Now some twenty years later a w "trip to the moon" is quite as much of a velty and certainly a most wonderful improve- nt over the original production. We refer to a dwyn-Bray strip in this week's Strand Topical view titled "A Trip to the Moon."

To begin with this bit of film in its first part strates to the nth degree what motion pictures do as a practical educational medium. The part is a marvelous demonstration of the in- uity of the camera man. You witness a "trip he moon" with such realism that it is not hard imagine yourself aboard the radium propelled ket."

On the same program is a two-reel O. Henry ure called "The Call Loan," which also stands as one of the real "high lights" of this week's s at the Broadway houses. Vitagraph has made e mighty good entertainment out of the O. ry stories, but this to our minds is a master- e. It is not so involved with mystery before ets to the "O. Henry twist" and has plenty of on all the way.

Up at the Capitol, the latest wrinkle in picture sentations is being given its initial try-out, the ing of short length operas sung in English in nection with the photoplay program. The first ring which opened Sunday for a week run, the itol now announcing a complete change of bill h week, is "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," being famous Longfellow poem set to music by S. eridge Taylor, and staged by W. C. Stewart. is hardly fair to call this an opera in as much it more closely resembles a cantata, most of the ing being done in chorus. In fact there is only solo and no other smaller divisions in the mbers.

In front of a stage setting designed by John nger, depicting a primeval forest with big trees wings the cantata or opera is sung by a company probably one hundred voices. The chorus is ked on either side of the stage and remain tionary during the whole performance. The incipals move about as the ceremonies of the ast call for action. Pantomime is employed to nvey to the audience what is not otherwise told the words of the poem, no speaking lines being ed. Hugo Reisenfeld is also giving the Rialto patrons musical treat this week. For his overture num- r he is using the grand finale of the second act "Aida," rendered by orchestra, a cast of prin- pals of unquestioned ability and a chorus of enty trained voices. No attempt is made to act e opera, the principals standing on the stage in ont of the velvet drops with the chorus grouped one side. The portion of the opera sung con- umes some twenty minutes, and at its close is eeted with enthusiastic applause which leads us to render the opinion that picture patrons are not averse to having grand opera served on the bill. This conclusion is also strengthened by the fact that a violin solo, "Concerto in E Minor," which runs for fully twenty minutes is accepted quite as enthusiastically as is the opera selection.

The Rivoli's contribution to "high-lights" this week is not large. A musical number, the singing of "In the Gloaming" in front of an interior stage setting by Betty Anderson, soprano, and Sudworth Frazier, tenor, with a chorus of female voices off stage proves very enjoyable.

The number is not unusual for the Rivoli, but we are just old fashioned enough to enjoy these good old songs well sung with a nice scenic investment to appeal to the eye. The novelty of this number is in the fact that it followed directly after a strip in the Rivoli current events number in which several women are shown parading up and down Broadway in the costumes of 1850. The current events strip is faded out on a black net which masks the raising of the picture curtain and the stage setting for the vocal number is disclosed almost without interruption of ceremonies.

Going back to the Strand again, we might mention the Chester Outing Scenic as something out of the ordinary. The reel is called "Moosing Through Kippawa," and is surely a very beautiful strip with an additional interesting view of the moose as he is in his native home. Just how the cameraman was able to get so close to the pair of moose we are unable to state, but the shots are remarkable.

Likewise to be included in the list of commendable entertainment events at the Broadway houses is the staging of a prologue for the Capitol feature, "The Willow Tree." Artist Wenger has supplied an original stage setting which is rich in the atmosphere of the Orient and before the screening of the feature a Japanese girl performs an interpretive dance of her race with much grace and to the apparent interest of the audience. The stage is gradually darkened until the lowering of the curtain cannot be observed, and then the front curtains are drawn for the screening of the announcement title, to be parted again as the opening scene of the picture is reached. The number is titled "A Japanese Temple." The music used is "Intermezzo Chinois," and the artist who dances is Yasu Katyana.

An event of importance is also occurring at the Academy of Music in the presentation of a revival of "A Tale of Two Cities," the William Farnum classic released on the Fox program some years ago. The success which the feature is achieving is proof that a revival of a good picture, especially one where the matter of styles in clothing does not enter into the case is not to be termed poor showmanship. Without a doubt "A Tale of Two Cities" is going over as well as any feature which has been on the Academy of Music program since the engagement of "Blind Husbands." We might also render an opinion that it is meeting with a greater degree of success than when first released on the theory that our National taste for photoplay has improved. Anyway from the New York showing we would judge that the new prints on this picture will not lay on the shelves and prove an object lesson to the producer that he would rather forget.

Timely Tips on Short Subjects

India

Colored Scenic Released by Educational

THIS reel is a panoramic offering with much of the scenic wonders of India shown. It is gorgeous in its colorings, shows many interesting shots of East Indian temples with plenty of natives and elephants thrown in. Not particularly exceptional in any way but a good fair one-reeler of its kind. Shown at the Capitol.

Moosing Through Kippawa

One Reel Travelogue—Chester—Outing

LARGELY views of a small river far from the usual haunts of man with two moose ahead of the camera lens. A bull is seen swimming across the stream, his huge head, with its long antlers, being about all that is visible. A cow allows the craft, which we judge is being used to navigate the stream, to approach to within a few rods before she ambles off into the woods.

The offering is unusually fine as a scenic number and has been tinted to just the right shade. Will meet with rapt attention from the nature lovers and prove interesting to those who do not enthuse over the scenic reel. Shown at the Strand.

A Trip to the Moon

Probably About 500 Feet—Goldwyn Bray

THIS is a combination of an educational subject showing many interesting scientific facts about the earth and the moon, among which is the distance between the two planets compared to the circumference of the earth, etc. It then becomes purely imaginary and demonstrates how a giant rocket airship might be hurled to the moon by means of radium engines. You see the projectile start from its ways, and watch its journey through space with a landing on the moon. You are then given a view of the moon's surface as it is said to be by the astronomers. As an example of the art of the cameraman and of what can be accomplished with trick photography this has never been excelled. It is worthy of being featured on any bill and can hardly fail to please. Shown at the Strand theatre as a part of the Topical Review.

Love's Labor Lost

About 200 Feet—Goldwyn Bray Cartoon

THE Bray studios have turned out an average cartoon in this "Krazy Cat" number. It is not funny but will mildly amuse most people and be a winner with the children since all the characters used are animals. The elephant, hippopotamus and the mouse are put through the conventional cartoon stunts. Part of the Strand Topical Review.

Milwaukee First Run Theatres Advance Prices to Meet Increased Costs

ALL of Milwaukee's principal downtown motion picture theatres but one, have raised their prices of admission to 28, from 25 cents with 3 cents war tax to 35 cents including the tax and 50 cents for boxes and smoking sections. The theatres making the advance are the Alhambra, Strand and Merrill, the Butterfly theatre management deciding to maintain the prices abandoned by the other houses.

No loss in patronage was expected by the heads of the three houses.

"The adoption of the new 35 cent price means a big saving to us in time and trouble," said Manager Frank Cooke of the Strand. "Every day we have had to use hundreds of pennies for change, greatly hindering the handling of crowds at our box office. It is strange that more theatre managers throughout the country have not adopted the even amount for admission. Many of our patrons have voiced their approval of the slight advance in price as it makes it easier for them to pay. Our cashiers tell us that many persons left the two or three odd pennies at the window rather than bother handling them."

"Thirty-five cents does not seem a large admission to pay for photoplay productions any more," said George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra. "The motion picture houses today are giving such stupendous offerings that 35 cents is an ordinary price to pay.

"No longer does the average citizen regard a "movie" show as a place to kill a few odd moments but the photoplay theatre is now a place to secure an evening's entertainment.

"I think prices will continue to go up as the standard of pictures advances. Many large cities are now charging regular prices of 50 cents and it is taken as a matter of course. The motion picture industry is one where profiteering has not been found. Prices have not been raised simply because it was being done in other industries.

"With fewer and better productions we are now paying 1,000 per cent. more for productions than we did a few years ago. In the manager's offices of our leading theatres we never hear of those almost forgotten $50 a day contracts. Today we speak in thousands, percentages and advertising guarantees.

"The public realizes to what heights the photoplay is soaring and it is willing to pay legitimate advances in prices."

"However the exhibitor must give people their money's worth and not attempt to 'gyp' them" adds Mr. Fischer, because in doing so he would endanger his reputation and that of his theatre and we all know what that leads to."

The Local Events Number a Feature

THE local current events strip as a busines ter is again proven by the experience o California theatre of San Francisco, when in junction with the Fox news camera men the fornia was able to put views of a local fiel events on the screen within two hours afte races had been run.

The San Francisco Bulletin has managed a s ing event called the "cross city races" for years, the contest being held at 9.30 a. m. on Years Day. Thousands of San Francisco's zens line up along the course to see the ru pass. So it was that Mr. Pincus the Califor publicity representative and E. H. Roth, man decided to tie-in on the event.

Bert Moisant and Gene Castle, Fox camer and the California staff went after some view the event. Then came a race to get the neg. developed and positives printed in time for opening of the California show the same day. made it and in consequence the current events was the big thing at the California all the we

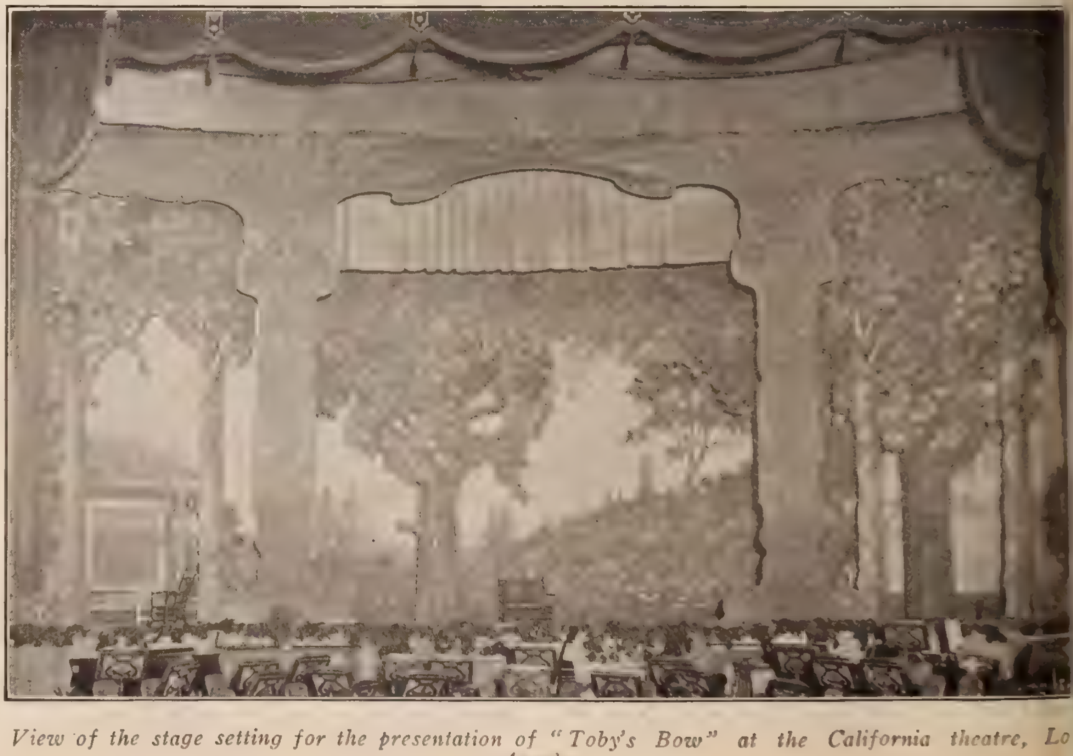
The Bulletin gave the California some publicity on the stunt and the cars used for cameramen carried the announcement of what doing, as will be noticed by the accompanying tograph.

California Stages Attractive Prologue Number

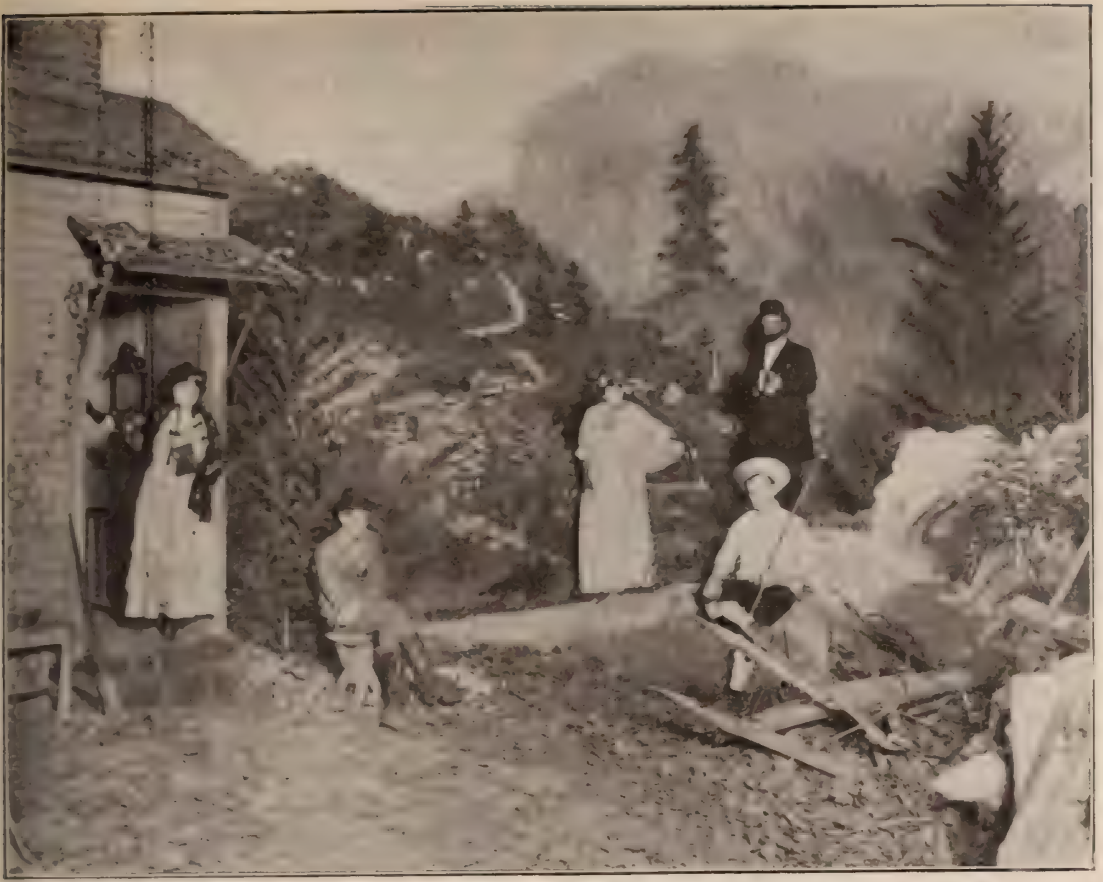
A VERY attractive prologue number was sta by Manager Poole of the California thea Los Angeles, for the week of Jan. 24, entitled Semi-Classical Song Circle."

The number opened with the curtains par at the left with a woman sitting before a win in which appears a vision of her lover. The s used was "Just a Wearyin' for You." The ligh effect here was sunset and the scene finally fa out by dawning, at which time the drapes close open on the scene on the extreme right.

This section is a river scene with moonli effects and there the tenor sings "I Hear Callng Me." The lovers meet in the third epis of the song number when the center drapes p and they sing three verses of "Because." The lig ing effect of the last scene is to represent ni and the moonlight effect upon the bay is very tractive.



View of the stage setting for the presentation of "Toby's Bow" at the California theatre, Lo Angeles



Stage setting designed by Manager Al. St. John of Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, for "Pollyanna"

"Pollyanna" Given Artistic Presentation at Los Angeles

THE heights to which the stage setting and prologue may reach is illustrated by a description of what Clunes's Auditorium of Los Angeles did in the number staged for Mary Pickford's latest feature, "Pollyanna."

Since the first part of the picture's story is staged in the Ozark Mountains, famous as one of nature's beauty spots, the Auditorium artist was instructed to paint an exact scene of one of the most beautiful views in this section.

The prologue which was staged in front of this cyclorama, which, by the way, is one of the largest even constructed in Los Angeles, encircling the whole stage opening with its arch forty feet in height, was the idea of Manager Bert St. John. The number required five players, who made up in the costumes of Si Grinder, and wife, Symantha Grinder, Amandy Perkins, Jerry Snags, Zeb Hathaway, characters in the Ozark portion of the story of "Pollyanna."

Although the picture version of the story does not dwell particularly on this portion of "Pollyanna's" life, the quaintness of the characters introduced and the opportunity for staging a prologue with them, with a strong scenic background, has led many exhibitors to give these early sequences attention in this manner. The idea also serves as a sort of an extra reel to the picture, bringing the famous people of the first part of the story more into prominence.

The prologue as staged by Mr. St. John had a decided musical value. Grinder and his wife sang "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," with the other three characters following in "Climbing Mountains." For the last number the quintet sang "In the Gloaming."

During the rendition of this number the lights were faded out and before the drapes were closed and the picture screen lowered to position, a giant rainbow appeared behind the mountains.

The lighting effects of the prologue are worthy of special mention. As the shadows fall, lights appear in the windows of the village in the background, one by one. Finally the church is lighted and the people of the vicinity are called to prayer meeting by the church bells, thus carrying out the idea of the singers practicing for singing in the choir by their singing in the early part of the prologue.

Harris Is Putting Ohio Capital City on the Movie Map

WILL D. HARRIS, manager of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ohio, is one of the most dyed-in-the-wool showmen in the country. He doesn't book a picture that he hasn't faith in, and so, believing in his productions, he goes after the business in big fashion. Harris is the sort of fellow who will go the limit when it comes to exploitation. His recent campaign and setting for "Eyes of Youth," which just completed a phenomenal engagement at his theatre, is an excellent example of Harris's methods.

Now, most exhibitors are through when they go in for big newspaper exploitation. But not Manager Harris. "Well begun is half done" is the motto that he employs most religiously. So he followed up his spread in the papers with extensive billboard advertising that covered the surrounding territory fifty miles out of Columbus in all directions. One thousand of 'em he scattered broadcast over the country in the most conspicuous places.

After reaching so many people with the announcement of the approaching engagement of "Eyes of Youth" at the Grand theatre, Harris then proceeded to give his patrons their full fifty-five cents worth after answering the call of the playbills. He engaged a Hindu crystal gazer to give a sort of informal session before each performance. The Hindu was Marjah, well known for his clever mind reading. He carries his own scenery, which is appropriate to his performance. Heavy curtains, attendants dressed in Hindu costumes with the turban headgear, soft lights and an atmosphere of mysticism. Marjah volunteered to answer any questions propounded to him by members of the audience. Hundreds responded to the call, and Marjah was kept busy foretelling the future to the inhabitants of Columbus who flocked to the Grand theatre in a steady stream from early morning until the last performance at night.

With the co-operation of two department stores, two women were displayed in prominent show windows in a state of levitation, the condition having been brought about by the Hindu Marjah. Literature to this effect was in the windows, and crowds gathered constantly to watch the women, who remained in their state of trance for forty-eight consecutive hours.

This is big exploitation. And it covered every avenue of publicity. In fact, it was the most comprehensive exploitation feat of the season that has come to our attention.

And the result? That's easy to guess.

Heralds from Sky Announce "Soldiers of Fortune" at Ideal Theatre

THE delivery of the message to Garcia had nothing on the stunt pulled by Lieut. Roscoe Turner U. S. A. (retired) last week.

The former aviator had ten thousand heralds to deliver to the good folks of Columbia, S. C., announcing "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Ideal theatre. He stood on the edge of his plane and having gathered the populace on the State Fair Grounds below him, Lieut. Turner delivered his message. Simple? Not at all.

Exploitation by means of the airplane may be getting rather ordinary, but the number of men who can do a hand-stand on the edge of a plane in mid-air is limited to such a daring few that until the law of gravitation is repealed this trick will continue to be a real drawing card.

George Warner, manager of the Ideal and Broadway theatres in Columbia, arranged the flight as part of his exploitation campaign for the Allan Dwan feature. There were other good maneuvres, equally effective, principally a special showing sponsored by the Columbia Record at which Gen. George W. Read, commandant at Camp Jackson, spoke.

Mr. Warner tied up his picture showing with a big circulation library and with the larger provision shops. It was a common sight to see some woman propagandist carrying a bag bearing the announcement in large red letters: "Buy your provisions from C. D. Kenny Co., Teas, Coffees, Sugars. See 'Soldiers of Fortune,' by Richard Harding Davis at the Ideal theatre, 3 Days, January 12, 13, 14, 1920. 3 Days."

The Timrod Library not only gladly allowed a printed announcement to be placed on the back of the book-covers that go out with all their volumes but quantities of book-marks with valuable advertising matter were distributed by the literary organization. The book-marks were made up in simple, inexpensive style and decorated as follows: "See Richard Harding Davis' 'Soldiers of Fortune' at the Ideal Theatre, January 12th, 13th, 14th. Get the book at Timrod Library."

The book covers bore the following exploitation printed on the back covers: "Now in Motion Pictures, 'Soldiers of Fortune,' by Richard Harding Davis. A Love Story that Fascinates. An Adventure That Thrills. An Entertainment Supreme at the Ideal Theatre."

The benefits of the tie-up with the big Timrod Library were impossible to calculate, according to the Columbia showman. With a tremendous family circulation the volumes of the library carried the Ideal Theatre advertising to thousands of individuals.

Front page space in the Columbia Daily Record was the result of the link-up with that newspaper, whereby the Record tendered a showing to an audience comprising the Columbia Boy Scouts, the newspaper carriers of the Record and the children of the Epworth Orphanage.

The acceptance by General Read of the Scouts' invitation to address them made the affair of actual news importance, and as such it got considerable publicity. The Scouts marched to the theatre in parade formation, and the youngsters of the Epworth Orphanage were brought in special trolleys marked by advertising banners. This type of exploitation was not only successful from the human point of view, because of the pleasure it gave to the children, but as a publicity stunt it was much talked about and much written about.

The crowning feature of Mr. Warner's exploitation activities was the flight of Lieut. Turner the day before the regular opening. The aviator rose performed a series of hair-raising stunts, the clmax of which came when he stood at the extreme of the wing and scattered "Soldiers of Fortune" heralds on the heads of the people far below.

Later Lieut. Turner returned to the field, dropped his pilot, and took on the society editor of the Columbus Record.

How the Viewpoint of a Woma Supplied New Exploitation Angle

HOW the viewpoint of a woman exhibitor applied to the exploitation of a special featur attraction supplied just. the necessary appeal fo the box office success of that picture is the experience of the Opera House, San Bernardino, Cal., o which Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger is manager.

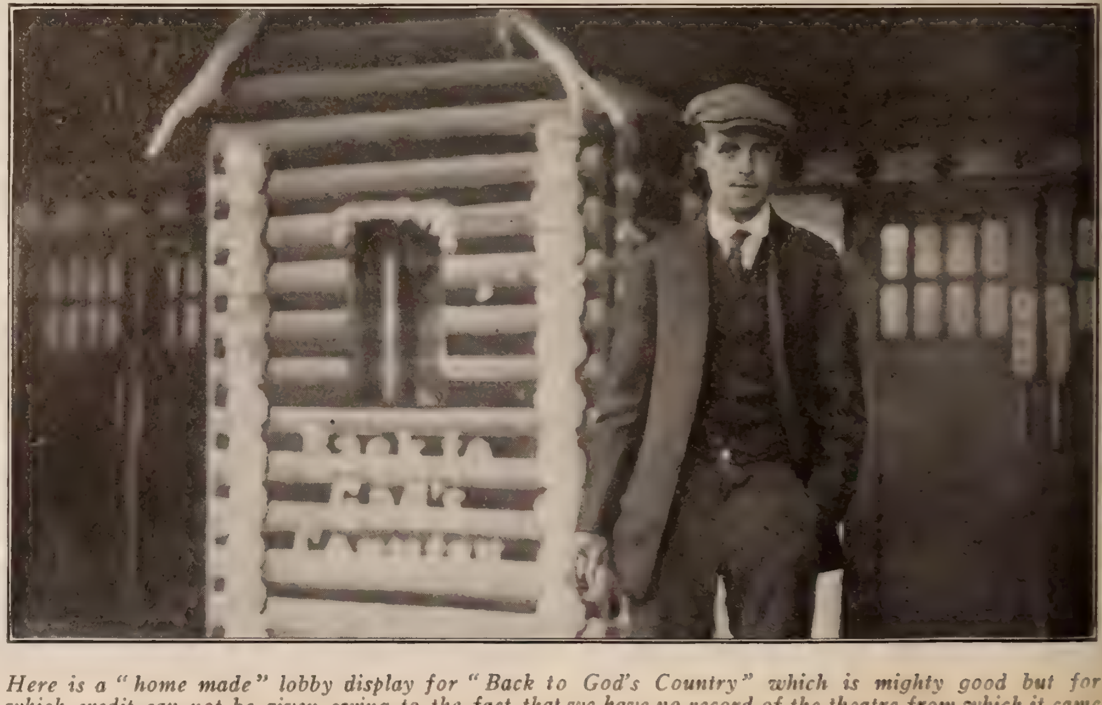
Different from other California exhibitors wh scored successes with "Auction of Souls," Mrs Kiplinger decided that illustrated matter showing scenes depicting women tied to horses and othe startling incidents in the photoplay was not th reason for the previous successes of the picture.

The departure in promotion methods on the par of Mrs. Kiplinger was made after she had studie the picture and compiled an unusual amount of data showing the means used by rival exhibitors t put the picture over. The result showed itself in Mrs. Kiplinger's newspaper exploitation when display ads were characterized by the displaying of the name of the theatre, the playing dates, the star and the title in bold face type, and the supplying of an unusual amount of descriptive word matter in smaller type.

"The greatest picture ever shown in this or any other theatre, the only film ever screened in America at $10 per seat, eight reels—5,000 people—83 principals depicting the trial of the terrible turk in ravished Armenia, were among the features which Mrs. Kiplinger stressed.

Using a personal statement in her display advertising, Mrs. Kiplinger stated: "Miss Mardiganian is the sole survivor of half a million Christian Armenian girls. The film shows truthfully and without exaggeration what she and her companions stood during the two years in Turkish Harems—in the hands of Turkish soldiers and roving bands of Kurds before she escaped to America. Every incident is vouched for by the British Investigator, Lord Bryce and the American Ambassador to Turkey, Henry Morgenthau."

The decision to feature word matter and not illustrations was a new thing in exploitation in San Bernardino. Also, box office receipts substantiated Mrs. Kiplinger's opinion that the greatest exhibitor argument in "Auction of Souls" is the sensational story and the fact that it is portrayed by a girl who really experienced many of the incidents shown.



Here is a "home made" lobby display for "Back to God's Country" which is mighty good but for which credit can not be given owing to the fact that we have no record of the theatre from which it came

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

Buffalo Advertising Elicits Praise

THE Strand theatre, Buffalo, had the whole town talking about "Piccadilly Jim" when this attraction was shown recently, through a series of excellent exploitation stunts, the most important of which was the promenading of two men dressed to represent Piccadilly Jim and his valet. It seemed that no matter where one walked in the downtown streets he bumped into this amusing pair, and with the bumping he was again reminded that the Strand was showing the picture. The valet carried a suit case with a sign on it. This was changed daily. During the week it carried slogans like:

"Piccadilly Jim, the Town Rounder!"

A sign on the back of the valet attracted more attention. It read, "I'd rather be a valet and see the world series than be a lord and not see it." These men walked the sidewalks of the downtown section from 10 a. m. until 2:30 p. m., from 4 to 6:30 p. m., and from 7:30 to 9 p. m. During their tours they visited each office building, stopping in as many offices as possible and asking for James Braithwait Crocker. Of course this stunt created a lot of comment and when the signs were read on the suit case the Strand box office benefitted.

Among the other stunts put over was the distribution of 2,000 heralds in the downtown office buildings on the Saturday morning before the opening day of the picture. A large full-sheet card was placed above the lunch counter in Ellicott square, the busiest spot in the city, and arrangements were made to continue this card permanently for the Strand. This counter is the gathering place for thousands who work in Buffalo's largest office building, and the card should be a valuable bit of advertising for the theatre. In addition to the above stunts, the Strand placed special newspaper publicity and advertising, some very attractive photos being landed in the rotogravure sections of the Sunday papers and several special stories in the daily columns. "Piccadilly Jim" did excellent business at the Strand. Assisting Manager E. O. Weinberg in his exploitation work was "Andy" Sharick, attached to the local Select publicity staff.

Circus Elephants Carry Goldwyn Announcement Through Three States

L. B. REMY, resident manager of the Goldwyn exchange at Dallas, Tex., is responsible for an unusual exploitation stunt that for the past four months has been carrying the name of Goldwyn Pictures through the highways and byways of Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. Ever since the early part of September, two circus elephants wending their way along country roads, and stopping at even the smallest towns and villages on the route, have been faithful servants of the Goldwyn exploitation department.

The elephants in question are a part of the Gentry Dog and Pony Show, owned by Ben Austin and Jake Newman, who for many years have been friends of Mr. Remy. When the show visited Dallas last summer, Mr. Remy thought it would be a good idea to get a traveling advertisement of Goldwyn Pictures in parts of the country that are difficult to reach through the customary publicity channels. Messrs. Austin and Newman expressed a willingness to be of service, even to the extent of permitting their elephants to give a broadside display for Goldwyn.

Large white sheets were attached to the blankets worn by the elephants, and printed on the sheets in black letters was the announcement: "This is a Goldwyn Year—Goldwyn Pictures—L. B. Remy manager, 1922 Main St., Dallas, Tex." Over the hundreds of miles traveled by the circus this Goldwyn statement was carried, and it brought direct results in many comments and letters of inquiry addressed to Manager Remy. This is credited with being the most original exploitation stunt ever put over in this section and one of the most effective.

Universal's Publicity Manager Resigns

Universal announces that Harry Rice will resign as director of Universal's publicity department on February 15 and will return to Chicago. Mr. Rice's work in his managerial capacity has proved most satisfactory, and the news of his intended departure has occasioned much regret. The reason for his resignation is said to be a purely personal one and a desire to get back to the environs of Michigan Boulevard and the "Windy City." Joe Mayer, the New York district publicity manager, is regarded as the probable successor to Mr. Rice

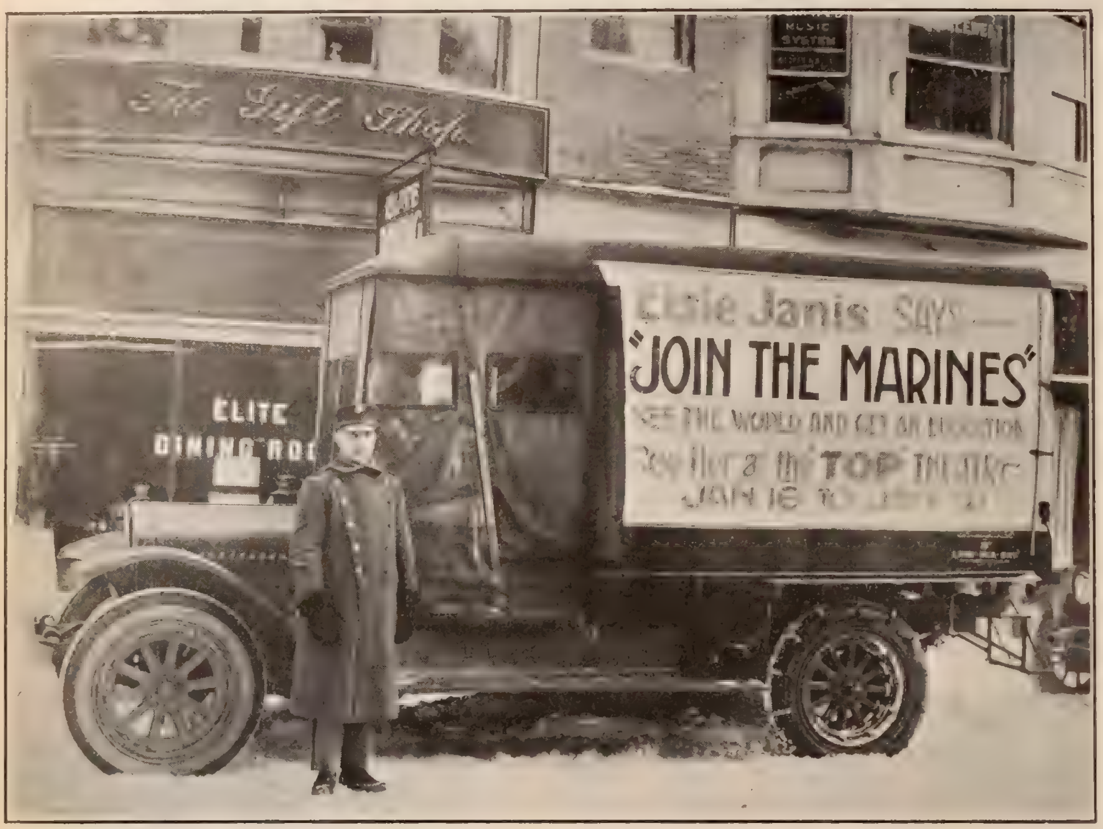
Aschmann Blames It On His Wife

This is a story of an exchange manager's wife, Mrs. William Aschmann by name and wife of the manager of the Pathe Milwaukee office. It is Mrs. Aschmann who is largely responsible for the Milwaukee office winning the diamond ring offered by the Pathe people for the biggest increase in business by any branch office during November.

Bill Aschmann gives all the credit for winning the ring to Mrs. Aschmann, but friend wife modestly declines the honor. However, she is wearing the ring.

"Mrs. Aschmann frequently accompanies me on my trips through the state," said Mr. Aschmann, "and she has met and helped entertain many of the state's exhibitors. She is intimately acquainted with many of the wives of the exhibitors and all of these women were working every minute to help us win the ring. And the women folks can do a great deal whenever they make up their minds to."

What the Exchange Experts Are Doing



Here's the way the Top theatre advertised the "Janis" feature

"Over the Top" With the Top Theatre of Syracuse

WHEN the Top theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., played Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl," the only folks who did not know about it were those "stopping" at the jail and even these "tourists" must have heard some of the noise created by the management of the Top, Andy Sharick, exploitation man of the Buffalo Select office, the members of the American Legion posts and the Marines' recruit-officers and enlisted men. Mr. Sharick made a special trip from Buffalo to the Salt City to aid in putting "A Regular Girl," over and that he was successful is testified in a chronicle of the various publicity stunts pulled for the engagement.

A Tie-up with a candy store

Four of the leading candy stores consented to put on special window displays advertising "Regular Candies for Regular Girls." Of course the Top cards on "A Regular Girls," were right in the midst of the displays. The Woolworth store gave up its large window for eight days to displaying the "Regular Girl" song hit and Edwards' department store gave up a window to Elsie Janis' book "The Big Show," and a card to one side of the display bore the following: Now on sale "The Big Show," a regular book by a regular girl. A humorous story by Elsie Janis of her work in France. See Miss Janis in "A Regular Girl," at the Top Theatre, January 16 to 21."

Two thousand tags were tied on downtown office doors with the reader, "Good Morning Meet Elsie Janis Tonight in "A Regular Girl,' at the Top Theatre." This stunt was an original one and created much talk among the fair fans in the offices.

One of the biggest factors in the exploitation was the co-operation of the Marines. The Devil Dogs gave up both sides of their big truck, which they used on Main street with bugler inside to attract attention. The truck was on the street each day during the showing. A parade was arranged with the "First to Fight" boys and the Boy Scouts for Monday, but this had to be called off on account of the severe weather the city being practically snowed in the first two days of the showing.

The Marines put out 10,000 hand bills in the plants and factories and the theatre put out 6,000 more in the residential districts. The Marines also arranged with the Syracuse Journal to publish a photo of the decorated truck, the ten soldiers who helped plug the picture and th front of the Top theatre which was used with story as a special feature layout.

Sergeant Cologne of the district recruitin office appeared at the theatre each night an spoke for two minutes on "Why Elsie Janis i a Regular Girl," telling anecdotes of his persona experiences with "Els" overseas. Anothe valuable stunt was the tacking of half shee cards on all the Marine "A" boards and othe places where the Devil Dogs had advertising The cards carried this message, "Elsie Janis Says Join the Marines—See Her in "A Regula Girl at the Top Theatre. Now Playing."

Stelling Gives "Broken Blossoms" Good Exploitation

BROKEN BLOSSOMS" continues to be a feature which inspires theatre managers to go to extra pains in the way of decoration and lobby display.

We record this week, an account of what Ernest Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind., did in this line during his run of the picture which recently ended.

Mr. Stellings reports that his theatre was decorated with Japanese lanterns, flowers and other material which would carry out the general idea which has been the keynote of nearly all the "Broken Blossoms" engagements.

Special colored lights were installed to create atmosphere for the picture. They were used while the feature was being shown.

On the exterior every light was covered with a Chinese lantern. During the engagement at the Grand, snow and ice were plentiful in the streets and the colored lights showing over the street from the edge of the porchaine, were brought into prominence by this fact.

Mr. Stelling's newspaper campaign was one of the most extensive of his career as a manager. Special attention was given to the musical setting for the picture, and was particularly successful with an organ solo.

Live News from the Producers

Goldwyn Has Purchased "The Great Lover"

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Great Lover," by Leo Dietrichstein and Fred and Fanny Hatton. This is the fourth important play which Goldwyn has purchased from Cohan and Harris within the last few weeks. It was produced in New York City at the Longacre theatre on November 10, 1915, and ran for a full season in the metropolis before going on the road.

Louis Burston Coming to New York Soon

President Louis Burston, of Burston Films, Inc., wires the New York office in the Longacre Building from the coast where he has just completed his third serial thriller, "The Hawk's Trail," that he will soon be on his way to New York. Mr. Burston is now working on another, thus far nameless serial, which is also nearing completion.

MacLean and May Star in Stage Comedy

Thomas H. Ince's young co-stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, come to the screen in their second production, "What's Your Husband Doing?" on January 25, the date of the picture's general release on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule. This is an adaptation of George V. Hobart's stage comedy, which was produced at the 39th Street Theatre, New York, in the fall of 1917.

Selznick Buys Novel by A. Payson Terhune

Picture rights to "The Fighter" a novel by Albert Payson Terhune, have been purchased by Myron Selznick. This is the second story by Mr. Terhune to be bought by Myron Selznick, the first being a serial which will be written specially for the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Ethel Clayton Starts on New Picture

Ethel Clayton this week began on a new picture, which is a screen adaptation of "The Ladder," a short story by Harold Vickers, which was published in Snappy Stories. The new Ethel Clayton picture will be directed by Tom Forman.

New Republic Release

Republic announces another release for February. It is "The Gift Supreme," with a cast that includes Melbourne MacDowell, Seena Owen and Bernard Durning.

Ohio Gets "Deliverance" First

THE first general showing of "Deliverance," George Kleine's great picture portraying the life of Helen Keller, and in which this wonder woman appears, is to be in Ohio.

Mr. Kleine has engaged Arthur S. Hyman to handle the booking and exploitation of the picture in the Buckeye state and Mr. Hyman has left Chicago for Cleveland to start the exploitation campaign which he plans shall be on a scale commensurate with the importance of the production, declared by critics to be one of the greatest in the history of the screen.

The people of Cleveland, Cincinnati and Columbus will be the first to have an opportunity to see "Deliverance" and the initial showing in the three cities will be on the same date, when the picture will open for a long run in one of the largest moving picture theatres of each of Ohio's leading cities.

Helen Keller

The announcement of the initial plans for exploiting "Deliverance," which have been awaited with great interest by the industry, have been made only after many months of careful preparation during which Mr. Kleine has had the film cut from 40,000 feet to six reels, new titles prepared and the continuity carried out in such a way that the story of Helen Keller's development from the little wild animal, cut off from the outside world by her inability to see, hear or speak, to a highly educated woman with noble ideals and charming personality, is shown on the screen with a dramatic intenseness, interspersed with charming bits of humor, which grips and thrills an audience.

Satisfactory test showings have recently been made in Atlanta, Madison, Wis., and one or two more cities and in each instance the picture won the highest praise of the critics and called forth editorial comment of a highly favorable nature.

Paul Stevenson writing in the Atlanta Georgian said:

"Great pictures have come and gone, great lessons have been taught in many classic photodramas and out of the swirling current of trash and tommyrot in the deluge of moving pictures a large amount of good has come, but since the beginning there has been nothing produced as uplifting, as clean and as inspiring as 'Deliverance,' with Helen Keller."

The Atlanta Constitution said:

"That 'Deliverance' is one of the most wonderful pictures ever conceived or filmed will readily be granted by every one who sees it."

"The Honey Bee" Released Soon

IN line with the announced policy of the American Film Company, Inc., to devote its entire Santa Barbara, California, studios to the production of special features, announcement is now made of the forthcoming release of "The Honey Bee," a reproduction of the book by Samuel Merwin. The subject, which has been published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, is said to be one of the six best sellers in the United States.

The cast introducing this special feature is headed by Mme. Marguerita Sylva, the grand opera star. The direction was in charge of Rupert Julian, who established himself so ably in his direction of "The Beast of Berlin" and "The Fire-Flingers." In the cast are such actors as Thomas Holding, Nigel Barrie, Albert Ray, George Hernandez, Harvey Clark, Dell Boone, Ethel Ullman, Charlotte Merriam, Ruth Maurice, Harry Tenbrook and the noted puglist, "Kid McCoy."

"The Honey Bee" is in six reels. It is preceded by a prologue from Maeterlinck's "The Life of the Bee." It draws an analogy between the life of the bee and human life and presents many remarkable opportunities for Mme. Sylva to portray the emotional roles which gained her such pronounced success in grand opera.

President of American Film Company Makes Statement

In discussing the presentation of "The Honey Bee," Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., who recently returned from the California studios, where he supervised the production of the subject, said: "I believe we have accomplished in 'The Honey Bee' what the high-class exhibitors throughout the country have been asking for. Many of the large exhibitors have said to me time and again, 'Give us novelty! Give us something out of the beaten path. Most subjects are too much alike, too much along the same lines.'

"In 'The Honey Bee' I believe we present the answer to the exhibitors' appeal for novelty. For here is a subject by one of the most popular writers in America, Samuel Merwin, that draws an analogy between human life and the life of the bee. It points out the powerful moral lesson concerning which Maeterlinck writes so graphically.

"The opportunity for emotional acting given Mme. Sylva in this subject can be visualized. I believe she portrays the title role in a masterful style which proves her immense dramatic versatility. It is, as one might imagine, a difficult role to perform, that of a business woman who finds, like the bee, that the true mission of a woman in life is motherhood.

"While I was in California 'The Honey Bee' was in the making, and I saw the prize-fight scene staged. The story relates of a fight in Paris between Carpentier, the French champion, and the American champion. To portray the role of the French champion we secured the famous pugilist, 'Kid McCoy.' The part of the American champion is taken by Nigel Barrie. The fight was staged in the large glass studio. An audience of 3,000, most of whom were in formal dress, makes this one of the most elaborate prize-fight scenes I have ever seen staged for pictures.

"I think we were exceptionally fortunate to obtain the services of Rupert Julian to direct this picture. We wanted everything of the very best. The story by Samuel Merwin gave us a powerful subject. The star, Marguerite Sylva, gave us tremendous emotional ability to interpret the title role. The cast was selected carefully, each character being chosen with relation to the particular role. Our success was achieved through adding to these the masterful direction of Rupert Julian."

Bryant Washburn's New Vehicle is Started

" Other Men's Shoes " Is Selling Very Fast

Edgar Lewis' venture as a producer of special productions for Pathe distribution, has received a flying start with "Other Men's Shoes," the picture version of Andrew Soutar's great novel, according to reports received from all territories, says Pathe.

Among the exhibitors in the United States who have booked the big Lewis special are Marcus Loew and William Fox.

"The production was released on February 4, but a week before release date nearly a thousand bookings had been recorded on the picture," announces a report from the Pathe office.

M. J. Mintz Made Serial Manager by Hallmark

M. J. Mintz, formerly connected with Clark-Cornelius as field manager, has been appointed by Frank G. Hall, president of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, as manager of serials for Hallmark. Under Mintz' direction of sales and distribution will come the new Ben Wilson serial, "The Screaming Shadow," co-starring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber; and the Benny Leonard serial, "The Evil Eye."

Will Rogers Liked in New York

Judging from the reviews in the New York dailies on the morning after the first showing at the Strand, and the enthusiasm of the audience, "Water, Water, Everywhere" will equal the record of the two earlier Will Rogers releases.

Typhoon Fan Co. Reports Increased Business

The Typhoon Fan Co. is experiencing at the present time a marked increase in its business activities. Installations are being carried out in Kansas City, Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines in charge of Engineer Edward Peck. Ernst Glantzberg, president of the firm, stated that the increased business so early in the season was no doubt due in part to the great number of new theatres being built throughout the country.

Consolidate Fox News Units

Declares the Fox News Service Will Have the Celerity of the Newspaper

THE consolidation of all the units that are concerned with the turning out of the Fox News reels in one building—the new Fox plant in West 55th street—will lead to a more efficient and up-to-the-minute screen reproduction of current events, in the opinion of the Fox News officials. "A news reel, like a newspaper," says Mr. Fox, "should be conducted as nearly as possible in one large office, because of the need for rapid communication among the men and women who make the product. Therefore the News now is installed, so far as the directorial, editorial, camera and business branches are concerned, in a commodious room on the second floor of the new building.

"The list of camera correspondents is continually being increased," informs the Fox statement, "not only in the United States but in all countries of the globe, so that Fox News is living up to its slogan of 'See What This World Contains.' In the editorial offices a fire alarm is being installed so that the news editor will be informed at all times as to fires occurring in the city. Motorcycles are to be provided to enable the cameramen to get about New York and vicinity speedily to 'cover' news events of screen value. Plans also are being made for the construction of a motor truck that will carry with it an emergency development plant. When news events of importance are 'shot' close to the 'deadline' on make-up days, this special motor will bear the cameraman on his assignment and develop his film on the way back so that the negative may be speedily viewed in the projection room."

Neilan Plans Formal Debut

His Initial Production, " The River's End " to Get Elaborate Presentation

IT IS announced that Marshall Neilan's initial production, "The River's End," will be given an auspicious presentation at a private screening to be held in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Biltmore on the evening of February 16. The affair is to be of a formal character, and a dinner will follow the screening. The audience will consist exclusively of members of the Canadian Club of New York City. Members of the trade press will be invited to secure a pre-review of the production.

In view of the fact that the Neilan picture discloses a tale of the Canadian Northwest, it is entirely fitting that this production will receive its premier before the members of the Canadian Club of New York City. Arrangements are being made to present the film in a most elaborate manner with an attractive prelude in which the song "The River's End," inspired by the picture, will be rendered by a famous singer. A special orchestra has been engaged to accompany the presentation of the film, and careful attention is being paid to the preparation of the score.

If other plans do not prevent it, Marshall Neilan himself will make the trip from California to New York in order to be present, as will James Oliver Curwood, author of the story.

"The River's End" is now finished and receiving its final treatment at the Rothacker laboratories in Chicago. In the cast are such well-known players as Lewis Stone, Marjorie Daw, Barney Sherry, Togo Yamimata, Jane Novak, Charles West, and others.

Reports a New Daring Feat

C. Hutchison, Star of " The Whirlwind " Serial, Tries " Stunt " Not in Script

ONE afternoon recently at Pablo Beach, Florida, Charles Hutchison, star of Allgood's big new serial, "The Whirlwind," gave an unusual exhibition of skill and daring, it is stated.

According to a report from the Allgood Pictures Corporation, "The script called for a thrilling chase with Hutchison on his ninety mile per hour motorcycle pursuing an airplane which was ordered to skim close to the ground so that the villainous crew of the plane could accomplish some heinous deed. All Hutchison was supposed to do was to foil the action of the airplane crew. With everything set to shoot the scene the action was started, airplane, crew, Hutchison on his motorcycle, and cameramen in high-powered automobile following.

"As the plane neared the ground Hutchison with lightning speed approached and instead of merely chasing off the maurauders, leaped from his speeding motorcycle and by the narrowest possible margin caught a flying rope ladder that was dangling beneath the plane."

The account of the incident tells that Hutchison with much difficulty ascended the rope-ladder to the plane without any aid from the crew aloft, who were unaware, it is said, of what had happened below until the daring star had actually reached the body of the aeroplane, "On descending, the report from the Allgood offices continue, "Hutchison was promptly bawled out by Joseph A. Golden, director of the serial, who, while appreciating what a thrill such a scene in the serial would mean, let Hutchison also understand that had Hutchison lost his life in attempting such a perilous stunt, the serial would have ended then and there."

TWO COMPANIES JOIN ON COMING SPECIAL

C. B. PRICE Co. and the Clark Cornelius Corporation have jointly purchased the rights to a spectacular production concerning which an air of mystery is being maintained. The owners of the rights confidently expect it to be one of the big hits of the 1920 season. It will be distributed on a state rights basis.

Aside from the fact that the production has an "all-star cast" the only further details that can be learned are that the production portrays historical episodes of American history in the course of its action. An extensive advertising campaign will soon be launched.

Report Many Bookings on " 12:10 "

Among the recent booking reports received from the Republic Distributing organization are the following showings on "12.10," the Herbert Brenon-Mario Doro production:

"Everett Square of Boston, Keith's Prospect of Brooklyn, the Elite of Sag Harbor, N. Y., the Arena and Arcade of Astoria, N. Y., the library of Pittsburgh, the Globe of New Haven, and the New Theatre of Lexington, Va.

"The Blue Pearl" and "The Amazing Woman" have been booked by the New theatre at Lexington for early showing, and the Globe of New Haven and the Princess of Baird, Texas, have booked "The Amazing Woman."

First "Wonders of Nature" Is Released

The week of February 1st saw the release of the initial subject in the "Wonders of Nature" series to be handled by Tyrad. Concerning these single reelers the later organization has issued this statement:

"In compiling these pictures, Prof. Brind was careful to arrange them so that their entertainment value was not lost, but rather enhanced by catchy titles of a humorous nature,—in themselves, an amusing feature. There will be fifty-two subjects released, one each week."

Al Hall Ass't Director of " The Evil Eye "

Animals in Tarzan Film Kept Actors on Toes

If the exciting experiences undergone, as related by Gene Pollar, Armand Cortes and other members of the company who have recently completed the newest of the Edgar Rice Burroughs stories, "The Return of Tarzan," for Numa Pictures Corporation, have registered on the celluloid with half the force with which they have been imprinted upon the minds of the players, the film should have remarkable vitality.

The account of Gene Pollar, narrating his experiences with peevish lions within the animal enclosure during the filming of the action, is especially impressive. "It was only because I remembered that my future with Numa was at stake," says Pollar, "that I didn't turn turtle and climb for dear life."

Aids for "The Charming Mrs. Chase" Ready

Pathe announces the following exploitation aids for "The Charming Mrs. Chase," the first of Mrs. Drew's "After Thirty" series of comedies, which has been scheduled for release by Pathe on February 22nd: a set of colored lobby display on each comedy; 22 x 28 of John Cumberland (stock); set of black and whites on each comedy; one and three sheets on each comedy; slide on each comedy; stock slide on series; one and two column ad cuts and mats; thumbnail, half column and single column cuts of Cumberland (stock) combination broadside and campaign book on each comedy.

National Film to Make Short-Subjects

By special arrangements with Marion Kohn, 90 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, the National Film Corporation of America has begun production on three short subject releases for exclusive distribution by Mr. Kohn. The stars in the new series will be Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones. Miss Cunard, who will be supported by Cole Hebert, will produce two-reel thrillers, while Polly Moran will issue one-reel "slapstick" comedies. "Smiling Bill" Jones will also appear in one-reelers of the "polite" comedy sort. Each star will make a series of twenty-six pictures.

Robertson-Cole Makes Statement

ROBERTSON-COLE COMPANY has just issued a detailed statement in connection with its forthcoming release, "Who's Your Servant?" that devotes special attention to the star, Lois Wilson, appearing in the production after her recent success in the Paramount-Artcraft release, "Too Much Johnson." Julian Johnson, the writer, is said to have succeeded in realizing his objective of producing a picture-story that would prove interesting and instructive and at the same time contain elements of a box-office "puller." "After he had written his plot and completed details which would prove a boomerang for the exhibitor, states the Robertson-Cole report, "the producer set about to secure a star capable of displaying for the screen the leading feminine role of Who's Your Servant?. After looking over the field, it was decided that Lois Wilson, the girl who gave up teaching for the silver sheet, was just the one to put over the part in real dramatic fashion. So tense are the scenes of this production of a hundred exploitation possibilities, that the producer had to favor a star whose work was in keeping with the role assigned her.

"Miss Wilson has a part in "Who's Your Servant?" which will boost her stock sky highward. Fresh from her success in the Paramount Artcraft release, "Too Much Johnson," this rising young star by far eclipsed her past record. In her own words, Miss Wilson modestly declares that her part in "Who's Your Servant?" is the best she has ever portrayed.

Praise for Lois Wilson, Star of "Who's Your Servant?"

Lois Wilson is not worrying about the servant problem when there are flowers to take up her attention. The star appears in the Robertson-Cole Special, "Who's Your Servant?"

"It was easy to carry out the thought in acting in 'Who's Your Servant?'" said Miss Wilson. "Mr. Johnson wrote a plot which has interest in every foot of the film, and so dramatic are the situations that we just lived the thought on the screen. I am certain that the play will flood every first run house in the country for its uniqueness and originality linked with the title force it to be one of the best box office attractions of the year. It is a play that will never grow stale and the more you see it the more direct does the plot center about the home.

"This film brings home in a startling manner the advantage which the plotting servant has over his trusting master and shows the lengths to which the servant, bent on accomplishing an illegal end at any cost, will go. In 'Who's Your Servant?' the central characters are a clever but unprincipled valet, a high American naval official, and his pretty daughter.

"An all-star cast is seen in Who's Your Servant? Included in it besides Lois Wilson are Yukio Aoyama, Andrew Robson, Albert Morrison, William Scott and Frances Burnham. The picture is founded on the celebrated play by Julian Johnson, which startled New York and the country, during its stay at the Princess theatre, New York. Holbrook Blinn was featured in the original stage version of the picture. The picture's scenes are laid at one of the biggest United States naval bases, giving it an authentic and thoroughly impressive background.

Clothes Lend Color to the Film

CLOTHES and their relation to the photography of the screen is the subject of a report just issued by the Equity Pictures Corporation in connection with Clara Kimball Young's latest vehicle, entitled "The Forbidden Woman." The statement from the Equity offices follows:

"Much has been said on the subject of the psychology of dress on the screen and the part clothes play in the indication of character, but Clara Kimball Young is said to enjoy the distinction of being the best dressed woman on the American stage or screen. This claim to supremacy is based upon magnificence of attire and materials, attractive and unusual designs, picturesqueness, and actual valuation.

"In 'The Forbidden Woman,' the second Equity release, which will have its premiere showing at the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, February 15, Clara Kimball Young will be seen in the role of Diane Sorel, a charming young French artiste. The wardrobe requirements for this role call for nineteen different costumes, including priceless creations in the way of evening gowns, afternoon frocks, dinner gowns, armloads of furs, hats and jewelry sufficient to satisfy the hearts of all her feminine admirers, the value of which is said to exceed twenty-six thousand dollars.

"'The average outsider knows nothing whatever of the distinctions to be obtained by certain colors under the minute photographic lens,' Miss Young declares, 'or that red photographs black, pale blue an indistinct white, while other colors change their identity in a most confusing manner. Another most important consideration is that the color scheme of the gowns worn must harmonize with the various interiors, drapes and hangings used in the different sets, so that all strong, primary colors, shadings and gradations of tone are arranged for composition effects. In "Eyes of Youth" I was forced to wear certain shades of cloth and the Yogi character was dressed in white. This color combination created the problem of arranging backgrounds of such shades that while I was properly silhouetted in a scene, the Logi would also stand out. A number of days were spent by the director and myself before we struck the happy color schemes, and in one instance it was necessary to make use of a bare wall with hangings of tapestries as a background.'

"'If one were to judge my gowns from the standpoint of street wear and availability, some of the color combinations would seem hideously out of place and clash outrageously. For this reason, many of the gowns worn by me in "The Forbidden Woman" have been created and designed solely for use in this one picture, for by virtue of the peculiar combinations of color, they could not be worn for any other purpose or occasion.

"'I never wear a gown twice for the simple reason that each new production demands a radical change in period, style and dress, and thus entails an absolute and complete new wardrobe. For instance, the clothes I wear in "The Forbidden Woman" could not possibly be used in my next picture, "The Soul of Rafael," laid in the period of 1850.'"

"The Forbidden Woman" Is Said to Show Unusual Gowns

State-Right Feature is Hit in Cleveland

Robert McLaughlin's state-right feature, "The House Without Children," is now in for a big exploitation in Ohio without the road show, according to Leon Netter, of the Masterpiece Exchange in the Sincere Building, who controls the rights. The picture is reported to be setting records in Cleveland. At the Fairyland it did the biggest two-day business in the history of the theater, and at the Sun it is the only picture to date that did more business the second day than the first, according to the Masterpiece office.

Dividend Announced by Major Film Corp.

An annual meeting of the Major Film Corporation stockholders was held at the home office, 16 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass., on Thursday afternoon, January 29th. E. J. Farrell was re-elected president and general manager and W. W. Aechtler treasurer and secretary. A 10 per cent. dividend was declared for the year ending December 31st, 1919.

New Curwood Story Filmed

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" Now Under Production in the Northwest

VITAGRAPH announces that actual taking of scenes for "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" has begun in the mountainous regions north of Los Angeles, around Truckee and Donner Lakes, under the direction of David Smith. The picture is based on another of the Canadian Northwest stories by James Oliver Curwood.

Pauline Starke will appear as Marge O'Doone, the young daughter of the Little Missioner, who was stolen in her childhood and brought up in "The Nest," the stronghold of the mountain whiskey smugglers; and Niles Welch will play the role of David Raine, the wanderer, who travels hundreds of miles through a wilderness of snow seeking to rescue the girl whose picture has come into his possession. George Stanley, a Vitagraph veteran, will appear in the character lead of the Little Missioner, and others will include Boris Karloff, Billie Bennett and James O'Neill.

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a distinct story alone; it introduces many of the characters already beloved by thousands, who read Mr. Curwood's novels of the north country, or have seen Vitagraph's picturization of them. The same dog that won so much favorable comment in the Vitagraph feature, "Baree, Son of Kazan," will be seen in the new production, again appearing as the outlaw wolf-god, vicious except with David and his friends.

The casting and general preparations for the filming expedition consumed weeks, and the company set out from Hollywood for Truckee upon the receipt of news that weather conditions among the mountain peaks were just right. It is believed that "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" will be a literal record of the courage of this special camera-clan who are braving an unbroken wilderness with the bravery of "forty-niners." The company had to snow-shoe for many miles beyond the end of regular paths and roads.

One of the biggest "punch" scenes will be an actual fight between two enraged grizzly bears; another is the gradual taming of an outlaw wolf-dog.

One of the cabins built for the picture is located within 200 feet of the Donner monument, erected in memory of the Donner family and its companions who perished in the winter of 1847, two years before the big rush for the goldfields. An old settler who came West as a boy with the 49'ers acts as guide for the company.

Changes at Universal City

New Studio to Provide for Companies Shortly Engaged in New Productions

WHEN Carl Laemmle visited the Universal plant recently, he is said to have laid out such an elaborate program of productions for the coming year that the technical department decided it would require additional floor space to house the new companies that will soon be engaged in making features. Mechanics were at once put to work to erect an additional light studio, measuring 400 by 150 feet, and capable of accommodating an average of twelve settings.

Constant changes are being made at Universal film city. There is scarcely a week which does not see some new improvement in the equipment, it is stated, some acquisition in the production department or some facility installed for the making of better films.

Streets of every nation dot its acres; villages depicting all corners of the earth are represented with fidelity; on its stages, and in its many-covered studios, there are under construction every day settings of every type ranging from hovel to palace.

Three new feature productions have been started at Universal City this week. These are: "The Girl in the Mirror," Philip Hurn's adaptation of the novel by Elizabeth Jordan, starring Frank Mayo under direction of Jack Ford; "Luck," a drama of the great West, written by John Frederick and starring Harry Carey under direction of Lyn Reynolds; and "Her Five Foot Highness," a comedy-drama, directed by Harry Franklin, and featuring Edith Roberts.

Haynes Makes Statemen

Says That Brentwood Aim is Product Based on Right Living and Thinking

IN a statement recently received, L. C. Haynes, president of the Brentwood Film Corporation, puts forth those basic policies which he alleges are the guiding-lights of the Brentwood workers in turning out their productions. "All those associated with me in guiding and developing the affairs of the Brentwood, said Mr. Haynes recently, "recognize the great influence of the screen in moulding public character, and, as far as our modest efforts are concerned, we determined when we started this company that we would do our utmost to see that every picture we sent out should carry an element of encouragement, practical commonsense uplift and good cheer; and that all Brentwood pictures might be counted upon as tending to develop the best in human nature and endeavor because they should be founded upo the very fundamental truths of al Right Living and Right Thinking.

"To date we have sent forward fo release by Robertson-Cole company si pictures, produced under the directio of different directors; but each, I feel from our initial success, 'The Turn I The Road', to our latest, 'Seeing I Through', very distinctly carries th brand which we started out to establish. Under Henry Kolker's direction we are now making our seventh picture 'Bright Skies' featuring Zasu Pitts, in what promises to prove a sweetly pathetic comedy with all those broad touches which Miss Pitts' eccentricities call for and again with its message of good cheer and encouragement and its suggestion of the good side of human nature."

Production Pleases Writer

Grace Miller White, Author of "Polly of the Storm Country," Praises Work

GRACE MILLER WHITE, the author of "Polly of the Storm Country," Mildred Harris Chaplin's second Mayer-made First National attraction, was a visitor at the studio preview of the picture in Los Angeles a few days ago.

That she was highly pleased with the production and particularly with Mrs. Chaplin's interpretation of her dream-heroine, is putting it lightly.

"I believe," she said, "that 'Polly of the Storm Country' will be my greatest success, and I further believe that Mrs. Chaplin is one of the very best types to interpret the role of Polly. I am positive it will prove such a starring vehicle for her as my 'Tess of the Storm Country' proved for Mary Pickford and 'The Secret of the Storm Country' for Norma Talmadge."

The picture should have a universal appeal because its theme is the equality of men and the eventual righteousness over the forces of sin. It is filled with suspense and punch and the photography is an artistic masterpiece.

The picture was directed by Arthur Rosson and was photographed by Hal Rosson. Simultaneously with the release of the picture, the novel will be issued in book form by the Little, Brown Co., publishers, of Boston. The production has been cut and titled and is now en route East, where prints will be made for early First National release.

"High Speed" is Booked by Loew Circuit

"High Speed," Hallmark Pictures Corporation's January 17th release on the Famous Director Series, has been booked over the Loew's circuit of theatres in rgeater New York.

Fox Reports World-Wide Demand

Says Call for Picture of "The Strongest" Is Universal

ACCORDING to a report from the offices of the William Fox Film Corporation, the demand for the motion picture based on Clemenceau's story, "The Strongest," is not only urgent but world-wide in its scope. "From all parts of the world," says the Fox statement, "from Japan, China, South America, Egypt, Australia, India, even from the late "Central Empires" of Europe, have come requests for early bookings on this mighty story. 'The Strongest' starts its career as a Fox release with the most universal appeal of any picture that has been issued by the greatest motion picture concern in the world,

"William Fox's representative for what until recently were the Central Empires is located in Berlin. He reports by cable that the demand for Georges Clemenceau's solution of the world problem, the mighty Frenchman's great answer to the question, 'Does the soul of woman rule the world?' has surpassed anything that he has known in his long experience in the selling of motion pictures in foreign fields.

"France, naturally, is awaiting with keen anticipation the release of the story from the pen of her most eminent citizen. Great Britain wants it, and wants it as quickly as possible. Frederick Mordaunt Hall, managing director of Fox Films for Great Britain, reports from London that British exhibitors are clamoring for the right to secure the great picture which will be offered to the American public this month.

"Australia has raised a cry for 'The Strongest.' H. E. Ross Soden reports from Sydney that no sooner had the announcement been made that William Fox had secured the screen version of the mighty Clemenceau's mighty story than the exhibitors in Australia and New Zealand began writing and wiring to the Fox office asking the earliest possible date on which they could advertise the fact that they would show the big screen production.

Buck Jones, the new Fox star, who has gotten away to a good start in "The Last Straw"

"South America, according to reports from the leading centres of Rio de Janeiro and Santiago, have advance orders for "The Strongest' that will surpass those for any American-made production yet shown in those countries.

"A Japanese exhibitor who thought he did not get sufficiently quick action from the Japanese office of Fox Film Corporation, wired direct to New York asking that a print, titled in Japanese, be rushed to him in Yokohama, and setting upon this a price that is the largest ever offered for a screen production in the Land of Nippon.

"R. A. Thorne, one of the largest motion picture exhibitors in Alaska, has set a record price in that territory for the Clemenceau production, agreeing to pay for the picture for three weeks and in addition at the rate of $2 a pound for shipping it from Seattle—so that he can show it one night in Fairbanks, Alaska. He is willing to pay for the twenty days of travel required to make the round trip, so that he can have the honor of being the first man in the northern territory to show the masterpiece of the master mind of France.

"There never has been a better exploited picture than "The Strongest." Its advertising has been printed in thirty-two languages, and its appeal is so great that it is sure to be in great demand for years."

Realart Pushes Americanization

Sends Four of Its Men on Road to Help the Movement Along

REALART has four men on the road making special arrangements for insuring co-operation with the Federal Government in its plan to obtain recognition by the theatres of Lincoln's Birthday as an occasion for promoting the Americanization movement.

The matter is having the personal attention of J. C. Ragland, Realart's general sales manager, who left New York last week to visit branch offices in the central and eastern parts of the country and make certain that all of them are prepared to assist exhibitors promptly in carrying out plans for special exercises during the week of February 12.

Mr. Ragland's itinerary includes Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Atlanta, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. Other Realart offices throughout the country will be visited by the company's special representatives, Melville E. Maxwell, E. S. Flynn and J. E. Hennesey.

Realart's desire, according to J. S. Woody, general manager, is to assist exhibitors in every way possible to make the Americanization campaign a success. Mr. Woody suggests that the entire week of February 8 to 14 be featured as Americanization week and that there be special exercises each afternoon and evening.

There should be no difficulty, he believes, in arranging really interesting programs. The music, of course, should comprise compositions exclusively of American authorship. The Southern melodies which lately have been so strongly featured in concert singer's repertoires are suggested for use and with these should be played patriotic songs. Much can be added to the value of the musical program, it is suggested, by having the orchestra leader invite the audience to sing several of the numbers. Emphasis is laid on the fact that the music should include only American numbers that are valuable from a standpoint of patriotism or quality.

With this special music, Mr. Woody suggests should be provided short addresses by speakers of recognized ability. It is not the opinion of the Realart general manager that it will be worth the trouble involved unless the addresses are short and snappy. Warning also is given against the possible danger of remarks that might be offensive to certain classes of audiences. "The safe way," says Mr. Woody, "is to give the speaker a very definite understanding of your clientele. To the strictly native audiences the appeal should be directed with a view to arousing personal interest in the Americanization movement. In cases where many or most of those present are foreign born, the speaker will naturally make a sort of welcoming address which will be a tactful appeal to his hearers to become naturalized citizens."

"Realart is not suggesting pictures to be utilized on the program," says Mr. Woody. "We believe exhibitors who are sufficiently interested to make Americanization Week an event in their theatres are quite competent to select the productions best suited to their plan.

"Our principal desire is to do all that we can to interest exhibitors in the Lincoln's Birthday and Americanization Week idea. If our managers can be of service to exhibitors by making suggestions, or otherwise, we trust they will be freely called upon."

Work Begins on Third Kaufman Weekly

"Puppy Love" is the title of the third picture for the Herbert Kaufman Weekly which is being made by Selznick for release through Select. Work began on the picture Monday at the Fort Lee studio under the direction of John Lopez, assisted by William Duffy.

The leading role is played by Albert Hackett. Supporting him are many capable players.

Comedy Making Now Stable

So Says Pat Dowling, Christie Representative, Who Recalls Earlier Days in Contrast

"COMEDY making no longer is a hole-in-the-wall enterprise," says Pat Dowling, Advertising Director of the Christie Film Company, Los Angeles, who is making his headquarters with Reginald Warde, Exporter, of New York, before the completion of a tour of the important exchange centers of the United States.

"Time was," said Dowling in his chat about changing conditions, "when comedies were produced in any corner of a studio—it didn't require much in the way of a set to give range room for the hurling of a custard pie! Moving picture fans gained their idea of production conditions from this class of comedies, probably, for any number have expressed surprise and polite incredulity when I have mentioned the fact, casually, that the Christie studio in Los Angeles covers an entire city block. That's right, you know, the studio is an entire block in area, and it's crowded at that. Why, theres' a forty-foot stage 310 feet long down one side of the studio!

"And it's no longer a matter of spending a few hundred dollars to produce a comedy, either. Costs are mounting higher and higher—that is, costs of comedies which are of a quality to go with the productions offered in the high class theatres every city has nowadays. And the costs are going higher, too.

"But, appreciation of comedies is growing at the same time. They used to be regarded as just something to fill in, to break the gap on the program. Now comedies are regarded as important as the feature in making up the program; exhibitors devote much care to selecting just the right thing in comedies to go with the character of their feature offered.

"And there is coming to be more and more a use of at least one night each week of short subjects which include several comedies and omit a long feature altogether. Exhibitors who are trying this plan find it pleases their patrons—there is bound to be some one or two of these short subjects to please patrons, while, with a long feature and one short subject, a goodly percentage of the audience may not be pleased at all.

"With the increasing demand for short subjects of a high calibre, it is expected that within a short time, comedies will be sold on their merits. In other words, the practise of exchanges which handle both short subjects and features, of "throwing the comedy in" at a low price with a feature, will cease, and exhibitors will be expected to pay full value for comedy attractions. The former practise of charging losses on comedies against the profits on the features they accompany, has been ruinous to many a comedy producing company. If a comedy is worth billing as a real attraction in the show, it is worth a fair rental price on its own merits, think the producers.

"There is a constant competition of the fiercest kind in producing comedies. The Christie studio has just been compelled to add several members to its scenario staff in the effort to keep the flow of comedy ideas up to the standard. And the competition for the ever-necessary pretty girls is more than fierce, what with their marrying off and yielding to offers from rival producers. Everyone has to be kept at the highest pitch all the time to keep up with the procession in the comedy game.

"In reference to the change in comedy producing conditions, it may be recalled that the present Christie studio was a small roadhouse only a few years ago. Al Christie rented the roadhouse, then began adding, year by year, to the buildings until the entire city block is covered. It is a city block now, by the way, but was in the country way out at Sunset and Gower, when Christie went there.

"Since 1911, the plant has grown until it is one of the biggest comedy plants in the country today. There are thirty dressing rooms and the entire stage space covers close to 400 by 100 feet; there are property rooms which resemble a huge warehouse, scene rooms and scene painters' studios, a shipping room, from which go out the comedy prints in scores each week and offices along the street side which house the executive departments. And, of course, besides all this, there must be parking space for hundreds of automobiles in which the stars and the Film Follies—they call the Christie Chorus girls Follies, you know—come to work and beat it for home or wherever it is they go after work."

House-Leaders Adopted by Many Exhibitors

The Screen Fun Animated Follies, Inc., announces that three years ago The Strand Theatre in New York ordered from Luis Seel, its secretary, an animated house-leader. The Strand expended considerable money in advertising the well known design of this leader as its trade mark. This novel method of opening the performance with an original house-leader is being used by every progressive exhibitor. Seel is now supplying the world with animated films of this kind. Master Productions, Ltd., 49 Greek Street, London, W., are exclusive representatives for England and Europe.

New Duncan Serial Selecte

First of Six Serials Ordered in New Contract Named "The Silent Avenger"

"THE Silent Avenger" has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagrap.h as the title of William Duncan's new super-serial. Mr. Duncan appears as Phil Read, unjustly sent to prison, who is believed to have been killed in making his escape. The story deals with his successful attempts to prove his innocence and to punish those guilty of depriving him of his liberty. Mr. Duncan is now well into the fourth episode at Vitagraph's West Coast studio and other points in California, and those already filmed will be cut and assembled in ample time to be released early in April.

"The Silent Avenger" is the first of a series of six serials which Mr. Duncan will make for Vitagraph during the next three years under his new contract. The new agreement, signed recently by the serial star and W. S. Smith, manager of the West Coast studio, representing Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, provides f the expenditure of from $1,000,000 $1,500,000 on each of the Duncan pr ductions, including the star's servic as actor and director.

Vitagraph plans to make all of serials at the West Coast studios whi have recently been greatly increased acapacity, not alone in the constructi of new and additional buildings, but t recent acquisition of more land. Ne buildings will also be erected on t newly acquired land. While the enti project is a Vitagraph enterprise, M Duncan has been furnished with a con plete company of players and a tec nical staff and has assumed the respo sibility for the prompt completion each serial. Edith Johnson, who h been the heroine in several of M Duncan's serials, is again his leadi lady and the "heavies" are played Jack Richardson and Virginia Nightingale.

Name Principals for Weber Production

Announcement was made this week of the principal players to be seen in "Children of Destiny," which is to be the first of the series of twelve pictures made by Weber Productions for Republic release. In addition to Edith Hallor, who will be starred in this series, William Courtleigh, Elmer Johnston and Arthur Carewe will be seen in important parts.

William Courtleigh, who has appeared on the stage for years in addition to his screen activities, is probably one of the best known players in America. His first stage appearance was in "Brother and Sister," under the management of John Dillon, but he did not register a hit until he played with Fanny Davenport in "La Tosca" and "Cleopatra."

The scenario for "Children of Destiny," which is being produced in California, is by Edward J. Montagne, who has contributed "Out Yonder" and "The Woman Game" to the Selznick list of features.

Some years ago "Children of Destiny" was produced in New York as a stage play.

Semon Finishes First New Contract Film

Larry Semon has finished his first comedy under his new Vitagraph contract. It is called "The Grocery Clerk." Mr. Semon is now busy on another comedy which involves, it is said, many dangerous scenes on the top of tall buildings in Los Angeles. He prepares a thorough continuity before the camera starts on any of his pictures, it is stated, and he attempts nothing that does not carry a logical plot to its logical conclusion. That s the Vitagraph policy for all future comedies, announces W. S. Smith, manager of the Hollywood studios.

Mutt and Jeff Cartoon a "Phone" Comedy

Captain Bud Fisher, father of Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, has incorporated the funniest of telephonic comedy-situations in "I'm Ringing Your Party," which will be released by William Fox this month. Undoubtedly some of the most comical experiences of the day have occurred in calling a telephone number, according to Fox Films, it was the personal experiences of Captain Fisher that inspired him in the cartoon, "I'm Ringing Your Party."

American Film Company's popular star, Margarita Fisher, whose latest feature is "The Dangerous Talent," to be released through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Irvin Willat Becomes Producer

Will Distribute through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation

THE first direct results of W. W. Hodkinson's recent announcement that he would provide the way for individual directors of pictures to become producers in their own right came to a head this week with the further announcement of Irvin Willat productions of which the Hodkinson Corporation is to be the distributor.

Contracts have been signed with Irvin Willat to have his own organization make a limited number of exceptional pictures annually from powerful novels by big authors, it is stated by W. W. Hodkinson. An indication of the rapidity with which the Hodkinson-Willat negotiations progressed will be found in the news that the first of these productions will be under way in early March for spring-time release.

In announcing its affiliation with Irvin Willat, the statement from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation reads as follows:

"In his direction of many of the bigger pictures for the Thomas H. Ince organization, Irvin Willat has established standards of his own of recognized power. The whole background of his training in the industry has been sound and progressive, and he possesses a technical mastery of production and a knowledge of the camera that few other men have despite years of association with picture-making.

Irwin V. Willat

"Mr. Willat now enters upon a separate career as an independent producer backed by the many resources of the Hodkinson organization and assured that he need do nothing in haste to detract from the care with which he wishes to construct his pictures. Within a few weeks he will have assembled his own organization in California to benefit personally and for his new associates by the splendid capacities that he possesses.

"Formation of the Irvin Willat Productions under which a new independent producer is created shows the direction in which W. W. Hodkinson's mind is working at a moment when much confusion exists in almost every department of the motion picture industry. Mr. Hodkinson has long known that the most successful motion picture development could not come through big producer-distributor machines; that organizations committed to making and distributing their own product while ignoring the best outside product of the picture market would be weakened by having to force on the exhibitors their weaker product, whereas lifting out the best available product of independent producers would give new blood, vitality and improved quality in production.

"For a year the Hodkinson organization has been modeled on these lines and the result has been the entry into the production field of producers capable of maintaining such standards as J. Parker Read, Jr., set in his 'Sahara' and 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter,' big productions starring Louise Glaum; 'The Westerners,' 'Desert Gold,' 'The Sagebrusher,' powerful productions representing the fine intelligence and literary capacity of Benjamin B. Hampton."

New Corporation Is Acclaimed

Arthur S. Kane is the Recipient of Hearty Congratulations

ACCORDING to a report from the offices of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation at 452 Fifth avenue, New York, the news of the formation of this new organization has brought in a flood of congratulatory letters and telegrams, wishing the corporation God-speed and promising ready co-operation. "From all parts of the country, says the report, "telegrams are pouring into the offices of the infant concern, wishing the organization and its founder the best of success and pledging support in a material way to the efforts of the new producing organization. This establishes a unique situation of friendliness between two factors in the business and points to an unusual co-operation that is predicted to mean a speedy success for the Kane Organization.

"Officials of the young company were unanimous in declaring that the faith of American exhibitors in the square-dealing of the Arthur S. Kane Corporation would be met in the same honest spirit, and that the best efforts of the company would be earnestly directed toward the raising of the standard of motion pictures, and that co-operation would be of the finest toward the end that both elements of the industry would secure the utmost financial return.

"With Tom Moore, the Washington showman, rising from a sick-bed to offer his "wholehearted co-operation" in a gratifying telegram, with hundreds of similar congratulations coming from other exhibitors, and with the inspiring remittance by W. E. Whitson, of San Diego of "one hundred dollars deposit on your first production upon your own price and condition and whenever available," the Arthus S. Kane Pictures Corporation got off to a brilliant start.

From the mass of communications submitted in the report from the offices of the Arthur S. Kane Corporation, the following have been selected as typical of the expression of best wishes, pouring in on the new organization from many points throughout the country:

From S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., came the following message:

"May I be included in the list of well-wishers for your new enterprise. I feel that the personality and business methods of Arthur S. Kane will always mean much to our industry. With sincerest best wishes, S. Barrett McCormick, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis."

George Mayne, general manager of the Swanson Circuit at Salt Lake City, Utah, found the announcement of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation awaiting him when he returned from a trip to New York City.

"Just returned to the city," wired Mr. Mayne, "and found your announcement. We are for you and know that you will put over anything you undertake. If we can help you, just shout. Swanson Theatre Circuit, George Mayne, general manager."

From below the Mason-Dixon line, Ken E. Finley, manager of the Broadway theatre, Richmond, Va., was the first to send on his greetings and offer of backing to the Kane Corporation. In regard to the announcement, Mr. Finley wrote:

"This should have happened long ago. You will have my 100 per cent. co-operation in the South. It is only necessary for you to call, I will be there with the answer. I believe I am speaking for every one of our organization. Keep me posted as to your policy, etc., and I will co-operate in every possible way. Again congratulations, Ken E. Finley, Broadway Theatre."

Mayer Buys a Novel of Kathleen Norris

It is announced that Louis B. Mayer has purchased the motion-picture rights to "Harriet and Piper," a novel by Kathleen Norris, running serially in the Pictorial Review. The picturization will be used for a starring vehicle by Anita Stewart. On the completion of the story in serial form, it will be published.

Mrs. Drew's Second Comedy Finished

With the "shooting" of the last scenes of "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton" at the Wyckagyl Country Club in Westchester County, Mrs. Sidney Drew finished her second domestic comedy featuring John Cumberland in her "After Thirty Series."

Five "Eminent Authors" Already on Screen

A telegram from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City gives a long list of the activities of Eminent Authors Pictures, for whom five productions have been completed, one for each author. The sixth author in the group, Gouveneur Morris, has returned from San Francisco with Wallace Worseley, director, where they selected locations for Morris' "The Penalty." The cast announced gives the leading feminine role of Barbara to Ethel Grey Terry, who will be supported by Lou Chaney, Kenneth Harlan and Charles Clary. The actor for the extraordinary role of Blizzard, the legless wizard, has not been named.

"Earthbound," by Basil King, is now being staged under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter, who directed Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury."

Sidney Olcott is to direct the Eminent Authors picture "Scratch My Back," from the pen of Rupert Hughes, and T. Roy Barnes of vaudeville fame, will play the leading male part. Opposite him will play Helene Chadwick.

Mary Roberts Rinehart, now at the Goldwyn Studios, has completed the editing of her first production for Eminent Authors, "Dangerous Days," directed by Reginald Barker, and announces that her second picture will be based on her story "Empire Builders." For the boy's part in "Empire Builders" it has been decided that Cullen Landis will be used. Landis won a five-year contract with Goldwyn on account of his work in Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside." He has "Pinto," "Upstairs" and "Jinx."

First Dempsey Episode Released Feb. 15th

The first episode of the Pathe serial, "Daredevil Jack," entitled "The Mysterious Bracelets," will be released on February 15. Commenting on the release of this, the first episode of the serial starring Jack Dempsey, Pathe states:

"In keeping with the rest of the production, no objectionable 'circussing' or unwarranted 'spot-lighting' based on the star's personality accompanies his introduction, or, in fact, his appearance on the screen at any time during the entire fifteen episodes. His pugilistic fame is at no time used to force him into the centre of the action. He is merely Jack Dempsey, a motion picture star, not the heavyweight champion of the world."

"Flu" Fight Aided By "U" News Reel

International News No. 4 is a reel which will be welcomed by motion picture houses throughout the country. Influenza is dealt with in the movies for the first time in this film. Every exhibitor who finds the epidemic is causing him to lose business will appreciate the opportunity to reassure their patrons through the authoritative voice of Dr. Copeland, New York's Health Commissioner. He appeals to the common sense of people not to become unduly alarmed, and bids well persons to benefit by the diversion of the theatres.

Myron Selznick Signing the Smiths' Contract

MR. AND MRS. R. CECIL SMITH ENGAGED ON SELZNICK CONTINUITY STAFF

A LONG-TERM contract was signed this week by Myron Selznick, R. Cecil Smith and Ella Stuart Carson, which is said to have involved one of the largest financial considerations ever made for the service of continuity writers on a staff, and which assures the Selznick organization of the exclusive services of the Smiths for a long time.

Mr. Smith and Miss Carson have been matrimonial, as well as business partners, for a number of years. They won their reputation on the coast, having been Thomas Ince's stars, afterward going with Ince to Triangle, and remaining with his forces when Ince left the Triangle organization.

When John Lynch, who also was formerly with Ince, came East last summer to head the Selznick Scenario Department, he brought Mr. Smith and Miss Carson with him. They always write together, signing their names separately on alternate scripts. Their work is notable for imagination, swift action and unusual situations.

Since their arrival at the Fort Lee studio, they have written the continuity for "The Country Cousin," "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," for Elaine Hammerstein; "A Fool and His Money," for Eugene O'Brien; "Sooner or Later" and "His Word of Honor," for Owen Moore, and "Keep Him Guessing," "Mysterious Moments" and "Prince of Pines," three pictures soon to go into production.

United Is Advancing Steadily

Distribution and Production Activities Are to Be Increased in Future

THE United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has issued a report following the acquisition of its new group of exchanges, in which the assertion is made that the United business is fast pushing the organization to the front among the larger units of the industry. The statement follows:

"The new distributing arrangements are working smoothly. The Triangle pictures, the Hallmark productions and United's own features and comedies are now being given a wider distribution than ever before. The various exchanges throughout the country report business as unusually good, bookings being made that will break all previous records, while exhibitors here, there and everywhere are flocking to United and securing franchises. The fulfillment of promises and the active operation of plans outlined previously are said to have awakened the industry to the very large part United will play in the future of the motion picture business.

"The recent deal with the Hallmark Pictures Corporation means that United has consummated an arrangement which will bring in considerable revenue, placing the organization on a still firmer foundation and making it more powerful than ever before. The obtaining of the S. A. Lynch Exchanges completed a chain of excellently organized distributing offices, which enables United to serve well both the theatre owner and the producer whose product it contracts to distribute.

"Not only as regards distribution has United gone ahead rapidly, but in the matter of production as well. The United Picture Productions Corporation has recently purchased two well-known stories which are to be filmed without delay."

Fox Builds New Sta in Los Angeles

The motion picture producing ind try in Los Angeles and its envir will boast another large stage when one under construction at the Willi Fox studios at North Western ave and Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood finished in a few weeks. Sets are ing erected for several companies. F dramatic groups, it is said, will be shooting pictures there as soon as place is available.

The stage is 220 feet long, 70 f wide and 25 feet high in the clear. ' it is the experience of Hollywood rectors that glass and open stages difficult and expensive, this has b built as a dark stage, on which o interiors will be taken. The attem to combine both natural and artifi light have been failures; and the gl stages are often darkened so that ray of light can penetrate while teriors are being shot," says the F report.

Earle Metcalfe Leads "The Memento"

Earle Metcalfe, who had an impo ant role in Vitagraph's screen versi of "The Fortune Hunter," will Corinne Griffith's leading man in h next Vitagraph production, "T Memento."

Active work on "The Mement has begun under the direction of E ward Griffith. The scenario was p pared by two writers—Lucien Hu bard, who arranged the vaudevi scenes, and William B. Courtney, w did the same for the "small to stuff." It is a good story, thorougl in the style of O. Henry, and w provide Miss Griffith with an unus role, it is stated.

Realism Director's Ke note in Fox Feature

The Fox Film states that "T Devil's Riddle," starring Glad Brockwell, and directed by Fra Beal, offers many opportunities f startling effects, including some scen of Northwestern blizzards, that M Beal has pictured with an eye to i teresting details. Realism is the ke note of the background in this pr duction, says Fox, and the situatio depicted are further enhanced by t creditable acting of the star and h leading man, William Scott.

United's New Release Schedule

Two-Reel Comedy Every Week and Five Features Every Six Weeks Is Planned

IN an announcement just received the United Picture Productions Corporation states the schedule that is to be followed in releasing the productions that come under the control of the organization. This schedule will see a United feature released about every second week, a Triangle Recreated Play every second week and a two-reel recreated Keystone Comedy every second week. In addition, there will be released a two-reel Cuckoo Comedy every fourth week, and a two-reel Cissy Fitzgerald Comedy every fourth week. Thus, there will be released through the United Picture Exchanges a two-reel comedy every week and five features every six weeks.

This releasing schedule goes into effect on February 15th when "Tiger Girl," a Recreated Triangle Play with Lillian Gish and Roszika Dolly is to be published, together with "His Day of Doom," a one-reel Triangle comedy. On February 22d, United's famous filmization of Alexander Dumas' "The Corsican Brothers," starring Dustin Farnum, will be released with "Bombs and Brides," a two-reel Keystone Comedy, in which Charlie Murray, Mary Thurman and Louise Fazenda are the featured players.

February 29th is the date set for the releasing of "The Hick," a Recreated Triangle Play starring Charles Ray and Bessie Barriscale. Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston will be released on the same date. Following this on March 7th, "The Worst of Friends," a two-reel Keystone Comedy starring Weber and Fields will be issued.

On March 14th, "Female of the Species," with Dorothy Dalton, and a two-reel Cissy Fitzgerald Comedy will be released. On March 21st, "Women Men Forget," starring Mollie King, supported by Frank Mills and Edward Langford, will be the release, together with another two-reel Keystone Comedy.

"The Iron Strain," with Dustin Farnum and Louise Glaum, a Triangle Recreated Play and a two-reel Cuckoo Comedy, title of which will be announced later, are to be released on March 28th.

Publication of Novel Helps

Wide Reading of Miss Norris's Novel Helps "The Luck of Geraldine Laird"

ADDED impetus is given the start which "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," Bessie Barriscale's new picture, is enjoying through the wide publication over the country of the Kathleen Norris novel, upon which the production is based, in dozens of daily newspapers. When Miss Barriscale in her own studio produced this novel for Robertson-Cole, she felt sure of its great appeal to women, and first showings of the picture bear out her judgment, it is stated by Robertson-Cole.

"The Luck of Geraldine Laird" originally was published in the Pictorial Review serially. Then it appeared in book form, and now, coincident with the production of the film, the story is being given newspaper publication. The use of the story in so many different forms is proof of the soundness of its theme, and of its certain appeal to women.

In this latest of a series of three Kathleen Norris novels which she picturized, Miss Barriscale employed a new director, Edwin Sloman. Praise which has been given to the detail of the picture and the general direction proves that Mr. Sloman took splendid advantage of the many opportunities which the story furnishes to make a human and vitally interesting picture.

Dr. Crane Likes "Pollyanna'

And His Editorial in the Globe About the Photoplay Gets Much Poster Space

Dr. Frank Crane's comments on "Pollyanna," which have been placed on three sheet bill-boards, throughout the country, in connection with Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists, has created an extraordinary amount of enthusiasm among exhibitors. They have commented upon it as being one of the best pieces of exploitation that they have ever had to use in connection with a big production, her production. The editorial which was originally printed in the New York Evening Globe, is reproduced in part in the following:

"I may as well own up. It is sure to get out. Several people know it now. My wife knows it.

"I am in love. I fell in the other night. It was at a theatre and with a female person on the stage. I don't care. She has captured me, body and boots.

"It was love at first sight. The minute she came on the stage my heart stopped and then went on again with a galumph. She took my feelings and wrung them.

"When I confessed by heart wol blings to my wife, she said: "Wel why don't you? I love her myself."

"Who, or rather, whom? Wh 'Pollyanna,' of course. She's a dea precious lamb, angel, darling, exquisit child.

"Also a she doctor that's doing mor good than the Rockefeller Institut the free clinic, and two hospitals. Fo she's curing us all of what ails us, b the most curative and potential agenc known—the glad ray.

"If you can just make people gla they'll get over whatever it is the have. Gladness beats all the pill boluses, panaceas, serums, fomentations, baths, massages, diets, fasting mineral waters trained nurses, though cures, besides osteopathy, Swedis movement, et cetera, going.

"'Pollyanna' is one of the season' new plays. It is pure joy. It is huma from skin to heartbone. It is fun. I is wholesome as a healthy child, clea as a burst of sunshine."

K. Baggot in "The Cheater"

Is to Play Opposite May Allison in Picturization of Henry Jones' Play

KING BAGGOT has signed with Metro to play Judah Llewellyn opposite May Allison in "The Cheater," an adaptation by Lois Zellner of Henry Arthur Jones's stage drama "Judah." King Baggot has the part in which E. S. Willard starred when "Judah" was first played in London in 1890 at the Shaftesbury Theatre and in New York the same year.

King Baggot's first screen work was with the old Imp company, which at that time included Thomas Ince, Mary, Lottie and Jack Pickford, their mother, Owen Moore and George Loane Tucker. Later he was sent to Paris by Universal to play in "Absinthe, with a company of French Cinem actors.

Mr. Baggot appeared for Metro i "Kildare of Storm," starring Emil Stevens, in "The Man Who Stayed a Home," a Screen Classics, Inc., production. He went to the West Coas six months ago to appear in a seria for Burston, "The Hawk's Trail." Hi latest appearance was in "The Dwelling Place of Light," from Winsto Churchill's novel. "The Cheater" i now under production at the Metr studios in Hollywood.

"Dangerous Hours" Seen at Broadway Theatre

Thomas H. Ince's newest production, "Dangerous Hours," described as "a gigantic and spectacular drama of today," came to B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre for an engagement beginning last Sunday. The supplementary stage attraction was Seymour Brown's tabloid musical comedy, "Pardon Me," with a cast of twelve girls.

"Dangerous Hours" is a Paramount-Artcraft Special, directed by Fred Niblo, from Donn Byrne's Saturday Evening Post story, "A Prodigal in Utopia." The cast includes Lloyd Hughes, Barbara Castleton, Claire Du-Brey, Jack Richardson, Walt Whitman, Lew Morrison and Gordon Mullen.

Hugh Ford at Hollywood to Start Work Soon

Hollywood's latest addition to its film colony is Hugh Ford, who arrived last week. The well-known director for Paramount Artcraft has returned to the West, after a stay at the Atlantic coast, to make an elaborate special production at the Lasky studio. Accompanying him are Joseph Boyle, his assistant and Hal Young, cameraman. Work is to be begun in about ten days on the new picture, details of which have not been divulged as yet.

Far Eastern Special Films for Bray

E. Alexander Powell, Famous War Writer, Starts Trip for Goldwyn Ally

JAPAN, the Island of Formosa, China, India and other places in the Far East are to be visited by E. Alexander Powell, the famous war correspondent in the interests of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs and other releases of the Goldwyn-Bray organization. Mr. Powell and his cameraman, E. L. Hawkinson, have already started on the trip.

Goldwyn's statement concerning Mr. Powell and his plans follows:

"As a correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, the London Daily Mail and Scribner's Magazine during the war, Mr. Powell added to his already enviable reputation. Among his widely read books published by Scribner's are 'Italy at War,' 'Fighting in Flanders,' 'The Last Frontier' and 'The Army Behind the Army.' It is expected that his present expedition will be of six months' duration, during which approximately eighty reels of film will be photographed.

"The first pictures will be secured in the neighborhood of Yokohama. Tokio will be next visited, and then the party will proceed to Peking. The Great Wall of China, Kalgan, Khadsin and the Gobi deserts will provide material for the camera, as will the trip through Central China on the recently completed railway to Hankow. The little-known French possessions of Annam, Cochin China, and Cambodia are included in the itinerary.

"Other scenes certain to be far out of the ordinary will be taken at Bangkok, capital of Siam. An automobile will carry the travelers through the jungles of the Malay Peninsula. Pictures rich in color and human interest will be available in March, when the festival of the Coming of Buddha is recognized by great pilgrimages to Buddha's Footprint on Adam's Peak and to the Sacred Bo Tree at Anunadhepura. Also in the early spring the Kings of Kandy hold their annual elephant hunts, when hundreds of elephants are driven into huge stockades called kraals. Then, at Puri there is the great festival of Juggernath, when the god is drawn through the city streets to the Black Pagoda in an immense white car while the fanatical pilgrims throw themselves under the wheels.

E. Alexander Powell, on Far Eastern tour with a Goldwyn-Bray camera

"A series of pictures of the more spectacular examples of Indian magic will be secured at the monasteries of Sikkim, the seat of Indian mysticism and magic. Tiger hunting in the jungle, the most thrilling of all sports, also will be photographed during Mr. Powell's stay in Sikkim. Benares, the holiest city of India, and the mecca for millions of pilgrims, is rich in picture material. It is the home of the so-called 'holy men,' who lie on beds of sharpened spikes, hold their limbs in fire, live for years on the top of pillars and in other ways appear to defy the laws of life.

"At Jaipur, the central square is a pit filled with man-eating tigers. The Maharajah entertains his distinguished guests with elephant fights, two elephants being turned loose in a great arena where they fight to the death. Mr. Powell counts on scenes of the elephant fight to provide some of the most sensational screen material ever secured."

Love-Letter Contest Is Getting Wide Notice

In an announcement made by Robertson-Cole in connection with the love-letter contest held to exploit the Gasnier production, starring Lew Cody, it is stated that "During the past two months more than 15,000 missives from all sections of the country have been received by Mr. Cody and it is predicted that before the contest closes on March 3, more than half a million letters will be offered for prize money.

"First prize for the best love letter written to Mr. Cody will net the winner $150.00; second prize is $100.00; third prize, $75.00; fourth prize, $50.00 and the next five answers will each receive $25.00.

Two Vitagraph Short-Subjects on B'way

Two of Vitagraph's two-reel subjects are being shown on Broadway this week. "The Grocery Clerk," Larry Semon's latest comedy, is at the Capitol; and "A Call Loan", a stirring episode of the great West, based on the story of the same name by O. Henry is at the Strand.

"The Grocery Clerk" is Semon's first comedy since he entered on his new contract with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. "A Call Loan" is quite one of the best of the O. Henry pictures. It is a little gem and has met with hearty approval by the large audiences that have seen it at the Strand.

Fox Moves Into New Quarters

Latest Facilities for Production and Comfort Provided

THE various activities of Fox Film Corporation in and about New York City were completely moved by Jan. 31st to the mammoth new Fox building in West 55th street. The transfer of all equipment and personnel to the new home of the organization was accomplished without a hitch, it is stated. The New York Exchange remains at No. 130 West 46th street, where it now occupies the entire tenth floor.

Many beautiful floral pieces from friends in New York and other cities were sent to William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, as were scores of telegrams, felicitating him upon the forward stride which is marked by the entry into the new structure. Great satisfaction was expressed by the heads of departments over their new quarters, which afford a much needed relief from the crowded conditions that prevailed in the old building.

The new building was opened for business without ceremony, Mr. Fox having in mind a celebration at a later date. Moving in the midst of its most flourishing season, Fox Film Corporation finds it necessary to devote undivided attention to the actual business at hand; therefore exercises that have been discussed for some time have been postponed until some time in May. At the time of the formal opening, the public will have an opportunity to inspect the building, which embodies many new ideas in the production of motion pictures.

The business offices were the first to make themselves at home in the building, and the various Fox companies now working in the East are being installed as rapidly as the state of the interior work in the various other Fox studios in New York permit. Directors were enthusiastic in their praise of the arrangements, in the gigantic studio in the new building. Twenty companies, it is said, can act simultaneously on the great stage floor on the third story, and the ample supply of dressing rooms, the huge carpenter shops, wardrobe scene loft and other appurtenances afford every facility for the making of surpassingly good features.

In the way of comfort for those who act before the camera the building offers every facility. Besides well-appointed dressing rooms, there are rest-rooms for the women and a gymnasium for the men. Similar rooms are provided for the other employees and also a restaurant which furnishes to all workers wholesome food at reasonable prices.

Fox News has been well cared for. There are extensive offices for the administrative branches and splendid dark rooms and quarters for the staff of cameramen daily engaged in filming important news events for the screen. As it is necessary for the cameramen to be ready instantly to hurry to the scene of a new happening, the value of well-equipped dark-rooms for loading magazines and for inspection of films can be appreciated.

Another feature of enormous service to the Fox Corporation is the large laboratory that has been already put in operation. This branch boasts the very latest in film devices and will enable the organization to turn out 3,000,000 feet of film a week,—having, in addition, several secret processes that will be a revelation to the industry, it is claimed.

Exhibitors have referred with pleasure to the comfort of the projection rooms, which are built among the lines of the best Broadway motion picture theatres. The floors are sloped, the seats are upholstered, and the length of the rooms admits of long shots and consequent big images that display the pictures to the best advantage.

Additions Made at the Hollywood Studios

A two-story addition has been built for the home of the scenario department at the Lasky Studio, Hollywood. The research department under Elizabeth McGaffey has grown to such proportions that it has been found necessary to move it into a larger building, where its files of material can be accommodated. The publicity department, under the direction of Adam Hull Shirk, will be augmented by the advent of Barrett C. Kiesling, who begins work next week.

Selznick Reports Banner Month

January's Reports Show Big Business Growth and Fine Outlook

THERE is every evidence from reports received in the Selznick home offices that the month of January was the banner month for the various Selznick enterprises. Every report received indicated not only an increase in business but the prospects of even greater business for the remainder of the year. Every member of the Selznick organization is said to be, working at "high speed," this being especially noticeable in the sales branches.

A report from Boston states that "A Regular Girl" scored last week the biggest hit of any picture ever shown there. It was the feature attraction of the Boston theatre's sixty-sixth anniversary, and Boston newspapers are said to have devoted some seven columns during the week to praise of the Elsie Janis production.

In exploiting this same picture in Syracuse, the Select Buffalo exploitation department had a chance to give the Prizma productions a boost. Every theatre that ran "A Regular Girl," also showed a Prizma subject, and a tie-up with the Marine Corps was effected by running a slide. "If you join the Marines you will have a chance to see the wonderful places shown in the Prizma pictures."

A new photograph of Olive Thomas, whose latest Selznick picture is titled "Society People"

The Detroit branch office reports an increase in the sales of the Prizma subjects and points out that the two leading theatres of Detroit, "The Broadway Strand" and the "Washington" both showed Prizma subjects last week.

The report from the Indianapolis exchange notes that loyalty to Select was never more evident than that shown by Hilton Little, branch shipping clerk, who recently worked more than twenty-four hours straight in order to make sure all shipments of films would arrive on time. This was during the recent snow storm in the Hoosier capital.

One of the most interesting branch-office announcements is that of Manager Siegel of the New York exchange who states that the initial Americanization subject, "The Land of Opportunity" is booked solid in his territory. He has made arrangements to obtain the unusual number of extra prints that will be needed when this production starring Ralph Ince, is given its release this month.

Manager J. U. McCormick of the Washington Select exchange recently took a trip through his territory visiting the smaller towns, to verify the report that the Elaine Hammerstein production "The Country Cousin" was making a record. He not only found this to be true but expresses the opinion in his report that the Elaine Hammerstein productions will be among his best sellers from now on. Mr. McCormick also reports that "The Broken Melody" is meeting with unusual success. Many exhibitors have told him he stated, that this is the best film ever made with O'Brien.

Make Screen Wholesome Medium

Relegate "Vamp" to Rear Declares Opera Star Now in Film Role

MADAME MARGUERITA SYLVA, the Belgian opera singer, who appears on the screen in this country for the first time in American's adaptation of "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, is the latest diva to desert the song world for that where a golden voice is superfluous.

Madame Slyva, whose husband is a United States Marine Corps Major, returned to the United States when this country entered the war. Prior to that time she realized from her personal observation that the American motion picture producers had largely invaded the continental field, supplying a large majority of the film exhibited in all continental countries. She saw clearly that America was leading the world in the motion-picture industry, and determined to devote a part of her time, at least, to this branch of the amusement industry. Through the American Film Company she accepted her first contract as star in "The Honey Bee."

The singer, who is one of the really great dramatic actresses of the stage, as well, believes that any subject exploited through the films, should be one that makes for a better civilization and therefore for happiness, as the motion picture is the best means of education for the people at large. "Why not use this wonderful means of stimulating the imagination by presenting wholesome people in wholesome themes?" Madame Sylva demands, "For instance, there are in the world other women besides 'vampires,' but if most of the films feature one type of woman, the inference being that her type is universal, the result is a morbid attitude toward life and its problems.

"Humanity always strives toward an ideal, and the screen can help this ideal by putting one before the people. They want a healthy, happy world, so why not show them an ideal that can be realized? If the people are tired of a film 'vampire' they have only to intimate it, for it is the public whose desires, in the last analysis, govern the producer; the people are the final censors, their power the greatest power in deciding what moving picture shall be shown to the public.

"It is like the use of fire-arms," the diva declared between rests at the "Flying A" studios. In the hands of responsible people they are all right, but they are hardly a proper plaything for children. The so-called 'vamp' is a well-defined life character, and that she exists we all know. I have sung the roles of 'Delilah,' 'Carmen,' 'Cleopatra,' 'Thais' and others. From the days of Adam and Eve to these of the Peace Treaty and Prohibition the vampire, given literary expression by Kipling, has been a conspicuous historical figure. But this does not justify the moving-picture producers in giving her the preferred position on all the films made.

"The motion picture film is the greatest public agency in all the world. It is patronized by the 'people' in all that the name implies, and the glorification of objectionable characters works great harm in the minds of the immature, inexperienced and youthful. We are apt to find too true the old warning that vice is at first abhorred, but seen too oft, we become accustomed to its face and embrace."

ne. Marguerita Sylva, the world famous Belgian prima donna, appears in American's otonovel, "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, her first appearance on the scheen in America

A most unique characterization is given Bert Lytell in his latest Metro picture, "The Right of Way"

"The White Moll" Unit First in New Studio

Pearl White, who is at work on Frank L. Packard's underworld story, "The White Moll," for Fox Film Corporation, had the honor of being the first Fox star to work in the new studio of the company by which she is featured. The entire company making the "White Moll" moved to the new Fox building in West 55th Street, on Saturday, January 31, and Miss White immediately started the last few days' work on her first Fox special production.

Richard C. Travers, former Essanay star, has an important role as the hero of this Packard story. Eva Gordon, who is cast for a very difficult part, gives excellent support to the star, it is stated. John Woodford, Jack Baston, William Harvey and Blanche Davenport all have worked hard to make the production a successful vehicle for Miss White.

Changes the Title of "Glorious Youth"

Olive Thomas' sirth Selznick feature, "Glorious Youth," has been announced this week from the office of Myron Selznick, in charge of Selznick production work. This was done, it is made known, in order to select a better title, if possible, from a box office viewpoint.

"The Cheater" to Have Three Dual Roles

Dual roles fall to the lot of each of three principal players in "The Cheater," the Screen Classics, Inc., production in which May Allison stars and which was adapted by Lois Zellner from "Judah," the notable stage play by Henry Arthur Jones. The story shows the activities of a clever trio of pretended Hindu fakirs.

"S.R.O-12"

Second Report on "Big Six"

In Supplementary Statement Fox Film Describes Each Production in Detail

FOLLOWING its announcement of the revival of the "six big specials" in last week's issue of the News, the Fox Film Corporation has issued a supplementary report in which it describes in greater detail the various productions previously referred to. The report follows:

"'A Tale of Two Cities' is remarkable for its faithfulness to the artistry of the great novelist Charles Dickens, in whose mind it originated. The London and Paris settings of the late eighteenth century are in large measure responsible for the unique atmosphere of the picture—an atmosphere that harmonizes exquisitely with the powerful story. William Farnum sustains a dual role with his usual brilliancy.

"'Salome' has proved a sensational box office success. It palpitates with passionate paganism, and flaunts pompous grandeur. Scenes of unmatched splendor follow in stirring succession—a popular uprising in old Judea, a sumptuous feast and celebration, the dance of the seven veils. Theda Bara gives a splendid characterization of the siren Salome.

"A remarkable cluster of favorite stars makes 'The Honor System,' which is intrinsically one of the greatest human stories ever told, a powerful screen drama. It is the joint effort of a company of eight thousand, led by Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh, Miriam Cooper, Arthur Mackley, Milton Sills, and Charles Clary. It is being launched for a clean-up, with peculiarly striking broadsides and accessories to boost it.

"'A Daughter of the Gods,' with Annette Kellerman and her mermaids, is the million-dollar picture beautiful, and a production for all time. It is a story whose beauty and charm hold a universal and irresistible appeal; brimful of aquatic stunts and exciting narrative, yet as sweet as any fairy tale.

"'A gorgeous, gigantic wonder play' best describes the tremendous spectacle 'Cleopatra,' which created a profitable sensation when it first was thrown on the screen, and still is a production unrivalled for sheer proporitions and effect. Ancient civilization in Egypt and the Roman Empire during the glorious days of the siren of the Nile, Cleopatra—played by Theda Bara—is reconstructed at a big expenditure of money and labor."

Statement on "Blind Youth"

Not To Be Confused with "Blindness of Youth"; A Synopsis is Published

IN order that the exhibitors of the country will not confuse the titles of two productions of similar names, the National Pictures Theatres, Inc., issued a statement this week relative to one of its productions which is titled "Blind Youth." This picture is distributed by Select, and is not to be confused with "The Blindness of Youth," which is not a National Picture.

For the benefit of exhibitors National Pictures offers the following synopsis of the story, published for the first time: Henry and Maurie Monnier are two brothers, who at the opening of the story must choose the parent they are to reside with. Maurie chooses his brilliant, erratic father who is going to France and Henry stays with his society-loving mother. Maurie is an artist and he eventually marries his Parisian model. His father dies and later his wife leaves him ro run away with an army officer.

Meanwhile life for Henry is one of roses. He is courting a wealthy young girl and is meeting with success. Maurie returns to America. He meets a young girl who takes him to her home and gives him food and comfort. She poses for him and the work of art, a statue, called "Blind Youth," brings him fame. Meanwhile he has been given a cold reception by his mother and brother, but when he becomes famous Henry attempts to borrow money from him.

One day his wife, Connie, appears. She is bent on revenging herself against Maurie. She fascinates Henry and the two together almost succeed in spoiling his romance with the girl who has befriended him. Connie becomes so impressed with the girl's innocence and sweetness that she confesses she was the army officer's wife before she married Maurie. The officer died after she ran away from him and Maurie is now free to marry the girl he loves.

Geraghty is Responsible for Fairbanks' Tales

It is announced by the management of the Douglas Fairbanks productions, through the United Artists' Corporation, that reports giving credit to anyone outside of the star and Tom Geraghty, editor of productions, as collaborator in the story or screen adaptation of "When the Clouds Roll By," are false.

"The story was the original idea of Douglas Fairbanks and the scenario was written by Tom Geraghty. numerous articles have been published giving Louis Weadock mention as part author and as assistant in the screen preparation," says the United Artists' Corporation.

Blackton Films Last of Late Author's Work

No man in the motion picture industry was more grieved to learn of the death of Cyrus Townsend Brady, author of a score of film successes, than Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who, strangely enough, purchased and produced the first great film success written by Dr. Brady, "The Isle of Regeneration," and also produced and will release through Pathe "The Blood Barrier," the last film play written by the author.

Early in the winter Commodore Blackton commissioned Dr. Brady to write a thrilling mystery story for him, and the "Blood Barrier" was the result. Stanley Olmsted prepared the scenario and the Commodore finished directing the picture a few weeks ago. Mr. Brady had never seen the film.

Ray Takes A Brief Vacation

Completes Last Production for Ince; Starts Work Again in Mid-February

ARTHUR S. KANE announces that Charles Ray completed on Saturday, January 31st, his last picture for Thomas Ince, and will soon start work on his new productions for First National release. The star, whose affiliation with Mr. Kane was first announced last week, has left for the California hills, where he will take a much needed rest and will return to his own newly equipped studios in Los Angeles sometime in the middle of February to start the filming of his first pictures under the new auspices.

Construction is proceeding rapidly on the group of additional buildings which will house the production work of the star, and it is expected that the remodeling of the present property will have been completed by the time the star returns from his vacation. Extensive additions to the original studios are also under way. The Fleming street studios recently vacated by the Jesse D. Hampton Productions are being improved by the addition of another spacious enclosed stage to be built on the property adjoining. Ground for the structure has already been broken and building has begun. Other alterations and improvements will include a large generating plant and a complete lighting system.

Mr. Ray is considering several well known plays, and these are being contracted for by the local Kane offices. The rights to a number of stage successes and popular books have already been bought by the new producing company, it is stated. Mr. Ray will bring to his new productions several of the best directorial and technical men with whom he has been associated in the past. Jerome Storm, who has directed Charles Ray in many of his great successes, will continue to watch over the destinies of the star. Chester Lyons, the camera man who has filmed the star in all of his recent pictures is expected to join the rapidly organizing forces when actual work begins. Wesley Gilmour, who is reputed to be one of the most experienced studio men on the Coast, has concluded arrangements to come on with the Ray organization as studio manager.

Far East Scenes Are Filmed

Rubber Trade Negative Arrives Here; People and Scenery Are Also Taken

THE troubles of American motion-picture directors and cameramen on the other side of the earth are becoming acute, according to a wail by cable from Roswell Johnson of the Universal Educational Department's Far East Expedition. Decoded, a part of his latest message from Shanghai says:

"The money situation here is terrible and a disgrace to the United States. The American dollar is worth only eighty cents—$20 on every hundred for exchange. The prices for everything in the Far East are about double the prices in New York."

The wide use of the automobile at the present time and the subsequent need for securing a resilient substance with which to manufacture tires has made the subject of rubber one of considerable interest to the public. Moreover, rubber is being used for a thousand and one other purposes. Whence comes the rubber? Mr. Johnson's trip abroad was to answer this question, and the first part of the answer in tangible form has just reached New York, says Universal, in tin cans filled with some thirty thousand feet of negative motion-picture film.

Aside from the rubber industry, Mr. Johnson filmed the natives of Sumatra and Borneo, their manner of living and the scenic wonders of the Far East. When he had finished with the islands he went to India whence he sent additional thousands of feet of film. All this material, including the story of rubber, is to be released by the Universal-Educational Department for theatrical showing.

Hollywood Reports on Activities

Seven Features Nearing Completion for Paramount-Artcraft

GREAT activity is reported at the Lasky Hollywood studio, where the high water mark of production has been reached in seven Paramount Artcraft pictures, which are now nearing completion. The steady stream of production has taxed the resources of the studio to the limit, despite the fact that some of the companies have been away from the buildings part of the time, either on location or shooting scenes along the coast or at some mountain resort.

Charles Maigne, the director who produced the Paramount Artcraft super-special, "The Copperhead," and his company, doing "The Fighting Chance" as a Paramount-Artcraft special, returned this week from San Francisco and its environs, where Mr. Maigne had been taking certain scenes for this Robert W. Chambers' story, the scenario of which is by Will M. Ritchey. Among other scenes will be those taken at one of the beautiful homes in Burlingame.

James Cruze has completed Bryant Washburn's Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," and will commence work on "The Sins of St. Anthony," with the same star, this week. The scenario is by Elmer Harris. The story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and from all accounts has a plot that is both fascinating and distinctive.

Robert Warwick, who made a flying trip to San Francisco after the completion of his Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Thou Art The Man!", has returned to the studio and commenced work on "The City of Masks," by George Barr McCutcheon, which Thomas Heffron is directing.

Mae Murray, appearing in "On With the Dance," a Paramount-Artcraft picture, directed by George Fitzmaurice

Wallace Reid's newest enterprise is "Sick-Abed," the stage farce by Ethel Watts Mumford, on which work was commenced a few days ago. Clara Kennedy is the scenarist, while Sam Wood is directing the production. Bebe Daniels will be leading woman for Mr. Reid in this humorous comedy.

The production of William DeMille's big Paramount Artcraft special, "The Prince Chap," featuring Thomas Meighan, will be completed in about ten days, according to word received directly from his administrative offices. In the cast besides Thomas Meighan are Kathlyn Williams, Lila Lee, Casson Ferguson, Ann Forrest and others. It is said that the emotional work of Thomas Meighan and Kathlyn Williams, playing the leads, is of a high order. In the juvenile episodes, Peaches Jackson and May Giracci give a delightful touch.

Donald Crisp's special picture for Paramount Artcraft, "Held By the Enemy," is progressing favorably. The scenario was written by Beulah Marie Dix from William Gillette's play.

From location somewhere in the Sierras come indications of ardent work on the George Melford production, "The Round Up," featuring Roscoe Arbuckle. Still photographs and "rushes" depicting encounters with Apaches, broncho busting scenes and sheriff's activities are being shot in unique scenic surroundings. The company will remain in the mountains for another week at least.

Arrow Film to Issue New Series

Return of W. E. Schallenberger from Coast Brings Announcements

THE releasing of several series of new pictures was announced this week by the Arrow Film Corporation, coincident with the return to New York of W. E. Shallenberger. The Arrow executive has been visiting the production plants on the coast at work on subjects for distribution on the independent market through his organization.

The first series to be released will be produced by William Steiner. Three of these pictures are already finished and work has been started on the fourth.

Each of these pictures will have to do with a famous detective who will be known throughout the series as "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries." The part of "Tex" will be taken by Glenn White. Included in the cast will be such well known players as Leo Delaney, Jane McAlpine, David Wall, Alfred Warman, Robert Taber, Alex F. Frank, Joseph M. L. Striker, Joseph Sullivan, Chas. Graham, Marie Treador.

"Circumstantial Evidence" is the title of the first of these five-reel features and it has been reviewed by a number of independent buyers. "The Wall Street Mystery" and "The Scrap of Paper" are the next two. Other titles of features in this series are "The Bromley Case," "Flying Death," "The Sacred Ruby," "The Bond Ring," "The Trail of the Cigarette," "The Van Rensselaer Case."

A number of State Rights buyers have already contracted for this series of twelve features and a large advertising appropriation has been made by Arrow to advertise the series extensively. A big two-color press book is now in the hands of the printers as well as other advertising matter pertaining to the pictures.

One of the featured advertising novelties will be a one-sheet on which will appear four or five different scenes. A number of other novelties are being prepared to further advertise and exploit this series of detective stories.

Harold Lloyd's Fourth Two-Reeler

Pathe Says New Picture Will Sustain Success of Previous Ones

"HIS ROYAL SLYNESS," Harold Lloyd's new issue of the $100,000 two-reel comedies, is announced for release by Pathe on February 8. This is the fourth release of the new Lloyd series, its predecessors being "Bumping Into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids," and "From Hand to Mouth," the last of which has been hailed as the most fascinating of the trio.

In an effort to make the Lloyd comedies the peer of any on the market, Hal E. Roach, head of the Rolin Film Company, is said to have been unusually liberal in his expenditure on production. With "His Royal Slyness" he was even more generous, and the technical production was made on a scale that rivals the highest type of five-reel features, Pathe announces. "Sets costing many thousands of dollars were erected in the Rolin studio just for this one picture. His reward is gained in a most elaborate finished product, in which the antics of Lloyd are even more humorous than in any of the other two-reelers he has yet made."

The same company that rendered Lloyd support in his last multiple-reel release, "From Hand to Mouth," appears with him in "His Royal Slyness." "Snub" Pollard and Mildred Davis are the leading factors in the support.

A surprise is said to be in store for exhibitors and public alike, in the fourth Lloyd picture, in the introduction of a player who so closely resembles the great young comedian as to be virtually his counterpart. There are some who will probably insist that Lloyd plays a dual role, but the "double" is none other than the star's own brother.

William (Bill) Bailey, who is playing the male lead in the Pathe serial, "The Mad Talon"

"There is no doubt that Lloyd has met every expectation in his new series of two-reelers," asserts the Pathe report at hand. "Not a day passes that Pathe does not receive some unusual commendation of the young comedian's efforts. His pictures are playing in the finest theatres in the United States, and pleasing audiences that have had their fill of riotous slap-stick comedy and are eager for the better type of fun-makers. A typical criticism comes from B. W. Brentlinger, manager of the Liberty theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., who recently wrote Pathe as follows:

"I think the Lloyd comedies the best that have ever been in this house. His comedies keep the house roaring from beginning to end. There is no doubt that Lloyd is a clever comedian—in fact, the cleverest comedian on the screen today. If all the comedies he makes are as good as 'Bumping Into Broadway,' 'Captain Kidd's Kids,' and 'From Hand to Houth,' he is headed for success, and his popularity will ever increase. We are anxiously looking forward to his next release."

Spyros P. Skouras, of Skouras Brothers, owners of the West End Lyric, Lyric Skydome, Crystal Airdome, Shaw theatre, Lyric theatre, Olympia theatre and the Arsenal, in St. Louis, writes: "I have made arrangements to use the Harold Lloyd comedies in all of our houses. The first release, 'Bumping Into Broadway,' started its first run at the West End Lyric last Sunday, and went over in great shape. The picture pleased everybody and got us additional money at the box-office. It is our intention to exploit the Lloyd comedies as much as possible."

Metro's Cash Bonuses Awarded

Seven Managers Win for Showing on Volume for Business in 1919

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, that one Metro district manager and six branch managers have been awarded cash bonuses for the best showing on volume of new business done during the year 1919. The seven individual prizes are said to total up to a very substantial figure. The amounts of the awards were apportioned on a percentage of business done in each exchange.

The men to receive bonuses are H. Lustig, district manager in Southern California, with offices in Los Angeles; W. C. Bachmeyer, who is both branch and district manager at Cincinnati; B. F. Rosenberg, now in Denver, Col., but until recently in charge of the Metro exchange in Salt Lake City, Utah; Fred W. Voight, of San Francisco; H. L. Haldeman, of Kansas City, Mo.; A. Fischer, of Minneapolis, Minn., and C. H. Kessnich, of Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Atkinson's duties bring him in the closest touch, perhaps, of all the Metro executives with the salesmen of the Metro distributing organization. At the yearly convention of the company's branch managers, held at the Hotel Astor early last summer, Mr. Atkinson announced that Metro at the end of the year would pay bonuses on the largest percentage of increase in business piled up by six branch managers, and the best record by any one of the district managers. This announcement was made approximately at the time that Metro discontinued its program productions in favor of the policy of "fewer and better" pictures now in operation.

The preliminary statement showed the various managers only a small promise of what has since been accomplished. At that time "Lombardi, Ltd.," by the Hattons, "Fair and Warmer," by Avery Hopwood, "Please Get Married," by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, five big Drury Lane melodramas, and "The Right of Way" had been obtained for Metro-Screen Classic production.

The purpose of the contest was to stimulate rivalry in putting over "fewer and better" pictures. The various managers went to the job with a rush, and the first round consisting of Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd." May Allison in "Fair and Warmer" and Viola Dana in "Please Get Married" scored a clean-up for the exhibitors and the company, it is stated.

It was substantially these three productions that brought in the percentage of increase upon which the bonus award was based. The second round of pictures, which included Alice Lake in "Should A Woman Tell?" Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way," May Allison in "The Walk-Offs," Viola Dana in "The Willow Tree" and the Taylor Holmes production, "Nothing But The Truth," were not ready until December or early in January, and did not figure in the award except as advance-booking attractions.

Big Call For Glaum Vehicle

W. W. Hodkinson Says "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" Is Among Big Current Hits

IT is the opinion of the W. W. Hodkinson organization that J. Parker Read, Jr., has produced another record-breaking picture for Louise Glaum, in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," the big Louis Joseph Vance special, released through the Hodkinson organization. The big first runs of the largest cities are said to have cleared their slates to handle this production without delays.

Among the latest of the first run houses to sign for this picture are Talbot's America Theatre, Denver; the Finkelstein and Ruben first and subsequent runs in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth; Charles H. Williams, Strand in Providence; the Colonial Theatre, Seattle; the Savoy, Wilmington, Del.; the Poli houses in Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, Pa.; the Comerford chain of theatres in Central Pennsylvania; the Hill, Newark, N. J.; the Liberty, Colorado Springs, Col.; and the Starland, Anderson, Ind.

"The success of this production, its drawing power for exhibitors, instantly has made it one of the most sought after pictures of the season, says W. W. Hodkinson, "and so heavy is the exhibitor demand for it that in its fifth week from initial release ten additional prints have been placed in certain Hodkinson offices to meet its booking requirements. In the Chicago territory alone "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" had booked for seventy-five per cent. of its territorial quota within four weeks after the first prints had been delivered to the office."

"Empty Arms" Exploitation

Names Associated with Picture Said to Offer Exhibitors Possibilities

THE Photoplay Libraries, Inc., in a statement just issued, affirms that one of the strongest exploitation angles of "Empty Arms," the initial Lester Park-Edward Whiteside production shortly to be released, is to be found in the names associated with the picture. The statement follows:

"The author, Willard King Bradley, has to his credit a number of the early Biograph pictures, which are now regarded as classics. Bradley is also responsible for the continuity of 'Empty Arms.'

"The director, Frank Reicher, has produced many Paramount and Metro successes—'Public Opinion,' 'The Clue' and 'The Case of Becky,' with Blanche Sweet; 'Castles for Two,' with Marie Doro; 'Witchcraft,' with Fannie Ward; 'His Birthright,' with Sessue Hayakawa; 'The Victory of Conscience,' with Lou Tellegen; 'An American Widow,' with Ethel Barrymore; "The Claim,' with Edith Storey; 'The Only Road,' with Viola Dana.

"The star, Gail Kane, has won a legion of followers both here and abroad, by her splendid work in 'Someone Must Pay,' 'When Men Betray,' 'The Upper Crust,' 'The Men She Married,' 'Whose Wife?' 'Souls in Pawn,' 'The Daredevil,' 'Love's Law,' 'Via Wireless,' 'On Dangerous Ground' and many other stellar vehicles.

"The featured players, Thurston Hall and J. Herbert Frank, are equally well known to the vast army of film fans. The supporting cast is composed of such well-known screen players as Howard Truesdale, who is now appearing in "Dark Rosaleen," the Belasco success; Irene Blackwell, Warren Chandler, Beverly Bruce, who has starred in stock in Philadelphia with the Dixie Stock Company and in Montreal with the Royal Players, and the Princess Kelvah, who has appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Fox Officials Pleased by Approval of Author and Circus Men on New Picture

PEARL DOLES BELL witnessed the initial private showing of "Her Elephant Man," a motion picture based on her book by the same name, at a luncheon in Hotel Commodore on January 23rd, and tendered an enthusiastic endorsement of the screen version of her work.

"It is the story as I dreamed it," the author is quoted as having said. "It is the story as I saw it in my mind's eye as I elaborated my word painting. The circus atmosphere which I strove to inject into the book I find poignantly real in the motion picture. It has all the odor of the sawdust ring and the Big Top."

It was Mr. Fox's aim to screen a circus story that would be atmospherically flawless—paint, patches, clowns, sawdust and all. "Her Elephant Man," with Shirley Mason in the lead, lives up to expectations—and then some.

Mr. Fox is elated by the succes by the enthusiastic approval of timers in the circus game. The said to have acclaimed the S Mason production as having cap and caged the "feel" of the ci that evanescent, indescribable thing that hovers under the big and makes a circus man homesic

Guy Empey's Production Unit Finds Shreveport, Louisiana, Weather Poor

"IT'S the Sunny South, but it isn't," is the burden of the song which Guy Empey sings in the numerous telegraphic dispatches which have been received from him at his New York offices since the arrival of Guy Empey, Florence Martin, Director North and others of the company producing "Oil" in Shreveport, Louisiana.

Having received flattering reports from the Southern city regarding conditions at Lake Caddo, Homer, and other boom oil regions which cluster around Shreveport, Empey and his associates pinned their faith in the sunny smiles which according to legend, nature always wears south of the Mason and Dixon Line—and landed in a sea of mud in the city of quick fortune which once was Shreveport.

Empey found the Shreveport smile a distinctly humid one. Record rains had soaked the entire northern end of Louisiana, judging from the investigations conducted by the picture players. Despite these facts, the author of "Over the Top," "The Undercur and "Oil" managed to coax en sunshine from the Louisiana we man to start filming the oil-land s which are necessary for the co tion of his big special production. cording to last accounts, the S South has redeemed itself, and on the oil fields are being accum for the Guy Empey production out further loss of time.

Besides the star and his lea woman, Director North and his sistant, Philip Quinn, cameramen loy and Baker, still-photogra Moran, Mr. Empey's party incl Templar Saxe, William Eville, ton Vane, Harry Lee, Harry B hart, and others.

Irresistible in his personal charm, dissolute and unprincipled, uncannily skillful in his profession, law – – made "Beauty" Charley Steele at once the pride and despair of Montreal.

How his masterful personality, his craving for drink, his somehow attractive superciliousness, brought him into the lives of two women, different entirely save that both were beautiful, makes this one of the really great big love stories of modern times. It won for it's author knighthood.

Mr. Lytell's enactment of the role of Steele, the artistic and powerful dramatic merit of the production, put the picture on a plane equal to that occupied by the novel.

Mabel Normand to Star in " Slim Princess "

Closely following the announcement that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased " The Slim Princess," the stage play by George Ade and Henry Blossom, comes the news that it is being used as a starring vehicle for Mabel Normand, who recently returned to Goldwyn's Culver City Studios. Miss Normand started work this week, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, in the title role made famous on the stage by Elsie Janis.

The cast to support the Goldwyn comedienne has not been completed, but thus far Tully Marshall, Hugh Thompson, Russ Powell and Harry Laramie have been named.

New Film " Better Than ' Blind Husbands ' "

Stroheim's latest Jewel production, " The Devil's Pass Key," has just been completed. In this picture Sam de Grasse and Una Trevelyn are featured. Stroheim is responsible for the scenario as well as the direction.

Carl Laemmle has received the following telegram from Tarkington Baker, General Manager of the Universal Film Company: " Just saw Stroheim picture rough cut to 13 reels. Speaking on basis of my ten years experience as critic, this is in my opinion one of the greatest pictures ever produced. Better than Blind Husbands. Sure to be huge sensational and smashing success."

" The Right of Way " to Have Two Endings

In releasing " The Right of Way," the Screen Classics, Inc., production of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel starring Bert Lytell, Metro will give exhibitors a choice of endings to the story. There are two versions of the final episode, both said to be convincing and dramatic, but one " unhappy " and the other " happy."

Jack Dillon directed the picture: the photography was done by Robert Kurrle; and special art interiors by Edward Shulter. June Mathis adapted the novel and wrote the continuity.

Supporting Cast in " The Woman God Sent "

First announcement of the cast supporting Zena Keefe in " The Woman God sent " is made this week by Myron Selznick. Miss Keefe's leading man is Joe King. The story starts with a prologue in which Miss Keefe does not appear. In the prologue are Barbara Gilroy, John H. Wade, J. F. Walsh, Fannie Vogin, Ray Hewitt, Helen Healy, Henry Bartley and Thomas O'Dennell.

Progressive Steps Lead to Best

Laemmle Asserts Jewel Pictures Are Result of Much Schooling

IN a statement just issued, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, discusses his organization's capacity for turning out all types of the motion-picture from the single-reeler to the super-production. "Universal," he said, "is turning out every variety of picture. The short one-reeler is the little sister of the big six-reel production. We are better equipped to turn out super-productions, not in spite of, but because of our activities in the other fields. When we turn out a serial our sets depict every corner of the globe. The action, which of course must be lively, calls for energetic work on the part of the director and the cameraman.

"When we turn out a western, the director has the problem of putting his plot over quickly and condensing it in two reels. Pathos, gaiety, surprise must all be registered artistically—but it must be done quickly. When we turn out a comedy, and the comedies of today have discarded the slap-stick idea, our director depends on subtle situations to put over the laugh.

"Because of our enormous output, we must have great production facilities. Our property rooms could hold the whole works of many big film companies and still have room for more. Our various companies have stars of every variety, extras of all conceivable types, players for every special situation.

Tod Browning (left), and H. H. Van Loan, director and author of " The Beautiful Beggar," retitled " The Virgin of Stamboul," looking over the strips of the picture. The feature marks the return of Priscilla Dean to the Universal screen after an absence of some months

"Our directors and cameramen go through a new school when they join our organization. They have to work up from the one-reel pictures. Then they graduate to the serials, and from there to the special-attraction class. They are learning all the time. When they get in the special-attraction class they have profited by their previous work. As a result a Universal special attraction is not marred by a 'serialish' tone. The director has learned to do the serial and not to do the 'serial' stuff in a big picture.

"After the special-attraction stage, the director and camerman, if their work has shown them capable of the Universal top-mark, are put on a Jewel production—the finest product of our organization. So too with our players. They must pass through all the stages of our work, and then only a few of the best are chosen for Jewel casts. Bear in mind, when considering this, that Universal short-reel subjects are constantly on the programs of New York's Broadway playhouses.

"A Jewel production is the essence of everything that is "best" at Universal City. A Jewel picture is the sum total of all the technical ability, directorial excellence, artistic superiority and perfection in photography of the Universal organization, coupled with its best screen talent.

"A Jewel picture may take five months to make, but never less than three. The most expensive settings, the finest casts, the best directors, and only stars who have earned that title, figure in their production."

Judge Refuses Temporary Injunction Against " The Tong Man "

IN addition to breaking all records for first-run successes, "The Tong Man," the Chinese melodrama, starring Sessue Hayakawa, and released as a Robertson-Cole Superior picture, added another chapter in motion-picture history, according to Robertson-Cole, when Judge Fitzgerald's court in San Francisco was transferred into a dark room, and the five reels of the Hayakawa production were shown to the judge, jury and spectators who crowded the legal chamber.

John L. McNab, acting in behalf of the Chinese Six Companies — the strongest oriental association in the United States today—tried to have "The Tong Man" held up, claiming that it misrepresented the life, actions and customs of the Chinese. He applied a temporary injunction, and Judge Fitzgerald said that he would look at the film and make known his decision.

Overnight, the courtroom took on the appearance of a temple of the silent drama. Robertson-Cole, Distributing Corporation's officials saw to it that a projection machine was installed, a curtain placed in position and dark shades placed against the windows.

At 10 o'clock in the morning the courtroom was crowded, when Judge Fitzgerald ascended the bench. The court was called to order, and then the Judge left the bench to accept a first-row seat to look over the film that has caused a sensation in first run houses throughout the country.

The five reels of the Chinese underworld in San Francisco were screened, and after the showing Judge Fitzgerald ascended the bench and issued the following decree, according to the Robertson-Cole report:

"This is a picture that shows action of real life. There is nothing misleading about it. It is entertaining, gripping and instructive. I see no reason why the Chinese Companies disagree as to the theme of the film. Therefore, I will not allow the temporary injunction."

First-run houses on the Coast were waiting for Judge Fitzgerald's opinion, and when it was learned that he had placed his stamp of approval on "The Tong Man" there was a heavy demand for prints. It is declared by Robertson-Cole officials that "The Tong Man" is without doubt sensational and entertaining.

From what we can see looks as if Taylor Holmes has a very congenial role in his forthcoming feature for the Metro program, " The Very Idea "

Pioneer's Pictures of Championship Event Pulling Well at George M. Cohan Theatre

OPENING indications at the George M. Cohan Theatre, in New York, point to a profitable engagement for the Pioneer pictures of the world's championship wrestling match between Earl Caddock and Joe Stetcher. Following its Broadway opening the pictures also began a tour of K. and E. time, beginning at the Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City.

The Pioneer offices declare that offers are being received from all parts of the world for the wrestling subject. A bid was made at the Garden on the night of the match for Japan, where wrestling is a national institution.

Concerning the filming of the event Pioneer announces:

"Elaborate preparations had been made at the Madison Square Garden for the filming of the bout. Several batteries of Sun-Light Arc Lamps flooded the padded arena and bathed the gladiators in an aurora of briliancy. Seventeen cameras and a photographic staff of over fifty were perched on the roof girders, balconies, platforms and ringside to catch the battle from every angle.

"Twelve hours after Stetcher had won the World's Championship, the first print of the contest was shown at the Pioneer Offices.

"Jack Curley, the promoter of the match voiced the opinion that the pictures were the finest that he had ever seen of any sporting event."

The New York Exchange of the Pioneer has been booking up the pictures, and in order to take care of the demand several extra prints have been ordered.

Flyers Help in Exploitation

Curtiss Co. Joins with Universal to Boost " The Great Air Robbery " Over

UNIVERSAL is reported to have planned the biggest exploitation drive ever attempted on any of its productions for "The Great Air Robbery," a Jewel picture. This is a romance of the aerial mail and is said to be a revelation as to the extremes a daring pilot may go to even in the present day. It is called a filmed prediction of the coming of the aerial highwayman and the trans-continental aerial mail. Throughout the film a well-knit love story wends its way, according to Universal.

Universal states that it has had no difficulty in tying up with several concerns in exploiting the production. The biggest possibilities are of course with the airplane.

One of the most important tie-ups was with the Curtiss Aeroplane Company. This company has agreed to loan to Universal, through their agents, airplanes, motors and models. Their agents have been instructed to help in the exploitation of the picture, as the Curtiss Company believes the production is good propaganda for the boosting of aviation in this country.

It is planned to have airplane flights simultaneous with the opening of the picture in a city where there are flying activities. When the aviation exhibition opened in Chicago, Miss Laura Bromwell, the first woman pilot to win her license since the war, flew over and bombed the windy city with leaflets announcing the coming of the picture to that city.

Another exploitation scheme which is already being used successfully is the airplane model contest which is being carried on in several cities. The Minneapolis papers are devoting columns to this daily. The theatres offer several prizes to boys for the best model airplane submitted. The models are to be on display in the various lobbies. A great deal of interest is created in the picture, and at the same time the theatre gets splendid material for lobby decoration.

Plan Dempsey Serial Drive

Pathe Will Add Extensive Press Campaign to Star's Pugilistic Prestige

A SERIAL with all the dramatic interest, tasteful setting and production detail of a five-reel feature is promised to exhibitors by Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Daredevil Jack," in which Jack Dempsey, the world's champion heavyweight pugilist, is starred and which will be released on February 15th.

Speaking of the exploitation possibilities to be tapped in behalf of the chapter-picture, Pathe says:

"Figured from the star angle, 'Dare devil Jack' is a unique production. Jack Dempsey is undoubtedly one of the best known men in the world. His name, his fame and his face have had millions of dollars worth of publicity, all of which can be turned to direct account in the showing of his first motion picture, and it is extremely unlikely that there is a newspaper reader in the United States who is not familiar with the world's champion.

"Following out its policy of helping create an advance patronage for all theatres showing its serials, Pathe has launched a tremendous national advertising campaign. In addition to this, one-thousand leading newspapers all over the country will carry a series of feature stories on Dempsey's life and activities. These feature stories will be handled by the International News Service, the Newspaper Enterprise Association, the American Press Association and the King Features Syndicate."

Scenes in the News Reel

Universal Current Events No. shows the first pictures of the landing of an airplane piloted by Lieut. Pickup in the streets of Oakland, Cal.

Another type of aerial acrobatics is shown in this real when the cameraman catches some exceptional views of ski jumpers at Newport, N. H. The policing of Constantinople by French troops is another unique scene. A party of Gobs in Cuba; scenes in Alligator land where giant reptiles are raised for suit cases and handbags; American troops on border duty at El Paso; views of the Pomeranian Show at New York, and close-ups of many people in the public eye are the remaining subjects of the current issue of Universal Current Events.

Hearst News No. 4 takes us to the lagoons of Venice, where our sailor boys from the U. S. S. Pittsburgh are enjoying shore leave. Several new creations in fashions for the spring are of interest to milady.

Pictures of the new Turkish ruler, son of Abdul Hamid, attending his private mosque to offer prayers to the prophet are shown on this reel. Naval airmen testing their wings at Pensacola, the evolution of a cafe from a wet goods to a dry goods emporium; the welcome home of the last of the A. E. F. men to return to this country, spring styles and several other items complete the issue.

" His Temporary Wife " Is Set for Mid-February

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces Joseph Levering's presentation of his initial big feature, "His Temporary Wife," by Robert Ames Bennet, scheduled for release in mid-February by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Prints of this picture were shipped to all Hodkinson branches this week. Produced under the direction of Mr. Levering, "His Temporary Wife," boasts the following cast: Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong, W. T. Carleton and several others.

Finkelstein and Rubin Book " Desert Gold "

The Finkelstein and Ruben chain of theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, one of the most important exhibitor units of the entire picture industry, has booked for immediate play dates for first runs and subsequent runs Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold" in Minneapolis. St. Paul and Duluth.

Christie Players Share in Pershing Welcome

Honors fell to the Christie Comedy Studio on the occasion of General Pershing's recent visit to Los Angeles. One of the Christie beauties, charming Charlotte Merriam, was chosen by the American Legion to lead the grand march with General Pershing at the Legion ball given in honor of the famous soldier. Another Christie player, Sergeant George Burton, who was decorated personally by General Pershing for gallantry in action, it is stated, was among the ex-service men who acted as the honorary escort during the American Legion ceremonies at Exposition Park.

Miss Glaum Appears in Person with Picture

Louise Glaum, star of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance, is credited with having played no small part both on the screen and in person in the success scored by the W. W. Hodkinson release at T. L. Tally's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, recently.

When Miss Glaum made a personal appearance at the Broadway, she is said to have received considerable applause, but the expression of approval that greeted her appearance on the stage was only slightly more vigorous than the hand-clapping which followed the conclusion of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," according to reports. Miss Glaum reappeared and in a brief speech thanked the audience in behalf of the producer and her associates in the picture.

Broadway Houses Book Selznick Picture

According to a report from the Selznick Enterprises, "The Land of Opportunity," the Americanization picture production, has been booked by every motion-picture theatre on Brodway.

"The Land of Opportunity" stars Ralph Ince, who also directed the picture. It was made by Lewis J. Selznick, who is chairman of the distributing committee, appointed by Secretary of the Interior Lane to distribute suitable Americanization pictures throughout the country. "The Land of Opportunity," which was announced for February 8 release, is declared to be "the most forceful blow at parlor Bolshevism ever made into a screen production."

Government Officials View Picture

Government Officials, including Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, composed an audience which on Wednesday, January 28, viewed in Washington "The Land of Opportunity," the first Americanization picture to be completed following the announcement that the entire picture industry had been mobilized to combat unrest and radicalism.

"The Land of Opportunity" was shown to the government officials in the Little Theatre of the Interior Department. Secretary Lane is reported to have complimented Mr. Selznick upon being the first producer to complete an Americanization film produced solely with the idea in mind to present the appeal of loyalty without having dry propaganda included.

Warwick Vehicle Based on South African Tale

"Thou art the Man," Robert Warwick's newest Paramount-Artcraft vehicle, is a story built around the illicit trade in diamonds with the locale situated in South Africa. The story is from the book by F. E. Mills Young, "Myles Calthorope, I. D. B." Margaret Turnbull did the continuity, and Thomas Heffron was specially engaged to direct. Lois Wilson is leading woman. Victor Ackland did the camera work.

Loew Inspects Metro Studios

Plans Further Expansion and Two New Houses in Los Angeles

MARCUS LOEW, on his arrival on the Coast made a thoroughgoing inspection of the new million-dollar Metro studios. It was Mr. Loew's first view of the big plant, and the survey required the better part of two days. During this time, every shop, stage and setting is said to have come under the close scrutiny of the head of Loew's Inc., which recently became co-partner with Metro in an important business merger for their mutual expansion.

On his tour of inspection of the studios Mr. Loew was accompanied by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation; Joseph W. Engel, Metro treasurer; Irving Ackerman and Samuel Harris, of Ackerman and Harris, who are general managers for Loew's vaudeville interests in the West, and C. E. Shurtleff, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., holder of the rights to several Jack London stories which Metro will make and distribute, with Mitchell Lewis as the star.

"This looks like the immense industrial plant that it is," was Mr. Loew's comment after he had gone over the studios, figuratively, with a fine-tooth comb. "It doesn't even suggest a pleasure park; it looks like real business.

"My tour of inspection has been a delightful surprise. It has convinced me that Metro will be able to do what it plans to do, that is, make better productions. In fact, with this equipment and the spirit of industry and zeal that pervades the entire plant, Metro will not only turn out better pictures, but a lot more of them."

In connection with the presence of Messrs. Ackerman and Harris among the inspection party at the studios, it was made known that Ackerman and Harris are to start work immediately upon the construction of two new theatres in Los Angeles. One of these will be for vaudeville and one for Metro pictures. Both of them will be large and costly houses, it is stated by Metro Pictures Corporation.

After a series of conferences to be held here between Mr. Loew, Mr. Rowland and other Metro executives, further announcements of the Loew-Metro expansion policy will be made.

Messrs. Loew, Rowland and Engel arrived in Los Angeles from New York Friday morning. En route they made a brief stop-off at Chicago to see a print of "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell, shown in the projection room of Metro's Chicago exchange. When the Santa Fe limited pulled into the City of the Angels, they were met at the station by William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager and Clifford Butler, general superintendent of the studios. The party at once motored out to the studios. They found the plant to be a veritable hive of activity, with several productions under way. The stars engaged were Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, May Allison, Alice Lake and Emma Dunn.

Trade Press Circulates Its Ideas

Exploitation "Stunts" Disseminated Rapidly by Press

SUCCESSFUL exploitation methods are more contagious than the "flu," according to Morris Kohn, president of Realart Pictures Corporation, who cites the present profitable vogue of "fashion revues," following the one put on at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York, as an illustration.

Even advertisements and single catch lines that have demonstrated their power to appeal to the public will be picked up quickly by exhibitors, Mr. Kohn says. The credit for this he gives to trade journals.

"When I first engaged in the motion picture business," he explains, "exhibitors were dependent almost entirely upon their own resources; now, nothing is news for more than a week. An exhibitor develops an idea Sunday, utilizes it Monday, and by Tuesday an enterprising trade-paper correspondent has written a story giving the information to every other exhibitor in the country."

An inspection of the scrap books kept in the offices of any producing organization will demonstrate his point, Mr. Kohn declares. The best and most successful ideas constantly re-appear. "And how," the Realart executive asks, "could exhibitors have such general knowledge of advertising and exploitation methods which had proven successful if the information were not passed to them quickly by the trade press?

"The thought comes to me in looking over the reports on 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room,' although it is only one instance in hundreds. When we showed this Emile Chautard picture in New York, we invited city detectives to view the production and undertake to solve it without seeing the last reel. They didn't succeed.

"Then an exhibitor in Pennsylvania held a special showing for the police force, stopping the picture at the end of the fourth reel and offering a prize of $50. for a correct solution. No one claimed the money.

"A Toledo exhibitor has amplified this idea by putting on what for want of a better name he calls a prologue. Tom Moore did this when he showed the picture in Washington, but the Toledo exhibitor introduces the 'Prologue' or interlude just before the fifth reel, instead of at the beginning of the play. In some instances the picture is stopped and slides are run but in almost every case that has come to my attention the original idea of inviting guesses as to the solution of the mystery has been adopted in some form.

"Now, how could this have been possible except for the trade journals policy of cooperation with the exhibitor? The plan of exploitation in New York, Washington and two or three other places has been outlined in the trade journals with the result that mystery contests have become almost as much a part of 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' as the action of the drama itself. This has been accomplished in a few weeks, whereas, without the trade press, it probably could not have been brought about within the whole life of the picture," says the Realart executive.

LUCK OF THE IRISH

Realart's second Allan Dwan picture, "The Luck of the Irish," went over with a bang at Grauman's "Million Dollar Theatre," Los Angeles. The engagement was a pre-release showing

New Vehicle for Za Su Pitts

New Brentwood Picture Said to Give Star Broad Opportunity for Acting

"ENCOURAGED by the wide success won during the past year by ZaSu Pitts in the pictures in which she has been featured, Brentwood, in her newest picture to be released through Robertson-Cole has given this clever actress the broadest opportunity for exercise of her peculiar artistic abilities," announces a report from the office of Robertson-Cole. "Seeing It Through" is the name of the new production. Claude H. Mitchell wrote and directed the picture.

"Seeing It Through" places her in the character of Betty Lawrence, a girl who lives with her mother in an humble cottage on the edge of the Carrington estate, which is near a little village of Arden in California. Betty's mother becomes ill and she goes to Ichabod Bogram, a skin flint old money lender of the town, for aid. Bogram instantly makes a plan to gain possession of the Lawrence cottage. He says he will advance the money to place the mother in a sanitarium, and invites Betty to come and live with him.

After her mother goes away, she finds herself in a distressing plight. Bogram mistreats her. She finds most of the members of his household are dominated by his selfish revengeful spirit. Her only friend is Boultern, a strange Dickens-like character, whom she befriends, and who later prevents Bogram from swindling her. How Betty meets a "Prince Charming" and finally sees her way through her troubles, is strikingly told in the latter part of the picture.

Critics Praise Truex Comedy

Reviewers of New York Dailies Write Favorably of "The Night of the Dub"

ERNEST TRUEX is a success in his new series of two-reel comedies, made under the management of Amedee J. Van Beuren, according to the New York dramatic critics who reviewed "The Night of the Dub," his initial fun-film which was featured on the programs of the Mark Strand theatres, both in New York and Brooklyn, the week of January 25.

The New York Evening Mail states: "A remarkably clever little comedy is 'The Night of the Dub,' starring Ernest Truex. Every minute is a delight in the unwinding of this two-reel feature—thanks to the art and personality of the star."

The New York Times comments as follows: "Ernest Truex is back on a Broadway screen. He is at the Strand in 'The Night of the Dub,' by Albert Payson Terhune. Truex is one of the cleverest pantomimists of screen comedy, and the wit of his gestures and expressions makes his present play constantly amusing and often outright merry."

The New York Morning Telegraph expresses the following opinion: "Ernest Truex, whose amiable personality always makes itself felt, whether on the stage or on the screen, appears at the Strand in an amusing sketch entitled 'The Night of the Dub.' Truex is one of those comedians who never overworks his effects."

"Ernest Truex lends his diminutive physique and large sense of humor to 'The Night of the Dub.' The Truex picture is excellent comedy," says the New York Evening Sun.

Aids Ready for Minter Film

"Judy of Rogues' Harbor" Scheduled for Issue During the Current Month

"JUDY OF ROGUES HARBOR," the second Realart production featuring Mary Miles Minter, will be released in February, according to an announcement made this week. All of the advertising accessories have been completed and prints of the picture are being shipped to branch offices.

The story is based on the book by Grace Miller White, and the picture was made under the direction of William Desmond Taylor, who also directed "Anne of Green Gables." "Citizens of the World," the anti-Americans call themselves, and much of the action of the story is said to revolve around their activities. An attack on the Governor of the state and the raiding of the "Citizens'" meeting place furnish two of the most tensely dramatic moments of the play.

A twelve-page press book, with a cover printed in two colors, has been provided. Heart interest is suggested as the big seat-selling factor of the production, but considerable emphasis is laid on the desirability of featuring "the Lady of the Roses," who eventually proves to be Judy's mother, and of making tie-ups with florists for cooperative advertising.

Teaser advertising, to be done through the classified columns of newspapers, is advised. The theme of the advertising, as outlined in the press book, is an appeal for a young man who is proof against love. This, of course, leads gradually through a six-day campaign, to an announcement of the showing in a local theatre of "Judy of Rogues' Harbor."

"The Inferior Sex" Now Ready

L. B. Mayer Wires That First National Will Release Mildred H. Chaplin Film

LOUIS B. MAYER has definitely announced by wire from the Coast that his first Mildred Harris Chaplin production to be released through First National Exhibitors Circuit, will be "The Inferior Sex." The shooting of the production was completed some time ago, but Mr. Mayer, it is said, was determined that every possible attention be given to the cutting and assembling.

To support the star Mr. Mayer secured a cast of players which includes Milton Sills, Mary Alden, John Steppling, Bertram Grasby, and James O. Barrows. The picture was directed by Joseph W. Henabery. The continuity was prepared by Keene Thompson.

Regarding exploitation for this picture, a report from the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co., Inc., states:

"Few productions of recent years have aroused greater interest among exhibitors than this First National release of Mrs. Chaplin, because of the gigantic publicity and exploitation campaign which Mr. Mayer started several months ago. The outstanding feature of this campaign is a country-wide contest around the question, 'Which is the Inferior Sex?'

"It has been arranged to tie up this contest with the showing of the picture in all the leading theatres of the country, thereby giving it a local atmosphere in each community and affording the exhibitor the full benefit of the campaign."

Universal Has A New Series

Releases Open on March 22 and Continue to June 28; Named "S. R. O. 12"

"S.R.O-12"

Release Dates of Major Allen Animal Series

Universal announces that three more Major Allen animal pictures will be released shortly. The first of these, "The Story of the Jaguar," is on the list for March 1. "The Story of the Wolf" will be released on April 5, while the date for "Tiger Land" is set for May 3. There have been but three of these animal pictures released to date, namely, "Trailing the Leopard," "Bear Trapping" and "Lion Trapping."

Two of the three to be released, "The Story of the Jaguar" and "Tiger Land," have had pre-release showings at the Capitol, and the third has also been booked.

Universal reports that it is receiving an unusual number of advance reservations for dates on these pictures. In his pictures Major Allen demonstrates before the camera how the jungle beasts may be captured by humane methods without rifle or ammunition.

" Confession " Scores at Frisco Rialto

Reports received by Joe Brandt from San Francisco declare that "The Confession" is establishing new figures at the Rialto in that city. George H. Davis, supervisor of exploitation and distribution on the feature sends the following report to the National New York office:

"After running for one week at the Rialto to a net profit amounting to $10,500, owners of the theatre rebooked it for two weeks more. The net profit was realized after the deduction of war tax and expenses incident to the showing. These figures are actual box office figures."

Republic Buys Davison-Love Production

An announcement of importance from the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, contains the information that Republic has purchased one of the biggest pictures of the year from the J. G. Pictures Inc., starring Grace Davison and Montague Love, who are supported by Stuart Holmes. Its working title is "The Convert of Revenge", but it is understood that this is to be changed before its release date, which will be announced soon.

Marion Davies Company Back from Florida

Marion Davies and her company have returned from Miami and Palm Beach, Florida, where they went to film exteriors for "The Restless Sex," her next Cosmopolitan Production for Paramount Artcraft, after "April Folly", which is to be released March 21.

Florence Short Seen in Detective Series

Florence Short is prominent in the cast of "The Smugglers," one of the series of eight William J. Flynn detective pictures being distributed by Republic Distributing Corporation. Herbert Rawlinson has the leading male role in the pictures, which are in two reels each.

William Fox is reviving three of the biggest pictures in the history of the industry. Left—Theda Bara in "Salome." Center—A scene from "Cleopatra." Right—William Farnum in "Les Misearable"

Wm. Fox Release List for February

Clemenceau's Story Is Prominent Feature of Schedule

PROMINENT in the list of releases scheduled by Fox Film Corporation for February is found Clemenceau's story "The Strongest". Under the direction of R. A. Walsh. "The Strongest" in film form is asserted by Fox officials to have been developed into a "special" in every sense of the word. The cast includes Carlo Liten, George Harrison Hunter, Jack Horne, Jean Gauthier de Trigny, Mme. Gauthier de Trigny, Florence Malone, Renee Adoree and James Marcus.

"The Adventurer" is the name of the William Farnum film scheduled for February release. It is of the romantic-drama type and was directed by J. Gordon Edwards from the story by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

"The White Moll" Pearl White's first starring vehicle for William Fox is also scheduled for February. This screen adaptation of Frank L. Packard's original story was directed by Harry Millarde. The cast supporting Miss White includes Richard Travers, William Harvey, Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport and Jack Baston. Anthony Merlo assisted the director and Eddie Wynard cranked the camera.

"Her Elephant Man" is Miss Shirley Mason's first picture for Fox. It has been seen by a special audience of reviewers, circus people, newspaper editors and exchange men and if the opinion of the trade representatives who have viewed the film be considered a criterion, "Her Elephant Man" is a complete success.

William Russell's contribution to the Fox February releases is "Shod With Fire", an adaptation of Harold Titus' story directed by Emmett Flynn. In the cast are Helen Ferguson, Betty Schade, Robert Cain, George Stewart, Nelson McDowell and Jack Connelly and many exteriors showing the beauty of the Arizona scenery between Phoenix and Prescott, are said to enhance materially the effectiveness of the story.

In "The Devil's Riddle", Gladys Brockwell is said to add to her laurels by the creation of a novel character role. William Scott is cast as leading man in "The Devil's Riddle". The other members of the company are Richard Cummings, Claire McDowell, Easter Walters, Nicholas Duneaw, Kate Price, Louis Fitzroy, Chance Ward, Vera Lewis, Louis Natho, Tom Bates and Benny Suslow.

The third of the new stars to make their debut under the Fox banner in February is Buck Jones said to be a trick-riding cowboy. "The Last Straw" is the name of the picture in which Buck Jones will be seen. Supporting the star, under the direction of Denison Clift, are Vivian Rich, Jane Tallent, Colin Kenny, Charles LeMoyne, Bob Chandler, William Gillis, H. W. Padgett, Hank Bell, Zeib Morris and Lon Poff.

The last of the multiple reel productions scheduled for February is Madlaine Traverse in "The Hell Ship", a tale of the sea. Denison Clift is the author of the story, and Scott Dunlap is director. The cast of "The Hell Ship" includes Albert Rosdoe, Betty Bouton, Dick La Reno, Jack Curtis, Fred Bond and William Ryno. Practically every foot of the picture was filmed aboard a tramp steamer off the California coast, it is said.

Three Sunshine comedies of the two-reel variety are due for release during February. These pictures made under the supervision of Hampton del Ruth are: "Sheriff Nell's Comeback", "Her Naughty Wink" and "Her Private Husband". Five Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons are listed for February. They are: "The Plumbers", "I'm Ringing Your Party", "Fishing", "Dead-Eye Jeff" and "The Sour Violin".

Goldwyn Purchases Notable Plays

Clyde Fitch Drama, and Two Famed Comedy Hits Are Acquired

RECENT announcements that Goldwyn had purchased screen rights to "The Christian" and other stage classics were followed up in consistent manner this week with the news of three more acquisitions. Clyde Fitch's famous play "The Truth," heads the list, closely pressed for honors by "Bunty Pulls the Strings" and "The Tailor Made Man," two more recent stage vehicles.

"The Truth" played no small part in securing international recognition for Clyde Fitch as a playwright. It was originally produced by Charles Frohman, and after its success in this country later scored in London and subsequently was successfully played in Germany, Italy, Russia, Hungary and Scandinavia.

In 1904 it was revived at the Little Theatre, New York, by Winthrop Ames, with an all star cast including such famous stage names as Grace George, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Conway Tearle and Zelda Sears.

The story of the drama revolves about the tangled web which a young wife weaves for herself by quixotic efforts to effect a reconciliation between a parted couple. In this endeavor she sees the husband secretly, unaware that his jealous wife has employed detectives to watch her husband. To cover up her meetings with the man, the foolish matron employes various "white lies" and fibs —in which she sees no harm. Complications of various sorts supply the tense drama, finally brought to a happy conclusion. There is also a comedy relief in the action.

The Shuberts and William A. Brady were associated in the stage production of "Bunty Pulls the Strings" at the Comedy Theatre, October 10, 1911, and for many months thereafter the producers and Cleveland Moffat, the author, reaped large profits from a run that was one of the sensations of the season. Later the play met with unusual fame in other large cities and on the road.

"A Tailor Made Man" makes the third important Goldwyn purchase from Cohan & Harris in recent weeks, the others being "Officer 666" and "Stop Thief." These three great comedies are numbered among the most popular achievements of the modern American stage.

Special Service Section on
"Who's Your Servant"

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here, and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

IN exploiting "Who's Your Servant?" your best angle is the title and the possibilities it possesses. The servant problem is one which is causing a whole lot of trouble. Owing to the shortage of domestics, people are taking servants into their homes without knowing who or what they are. In consequence crooks have been given an opportunity to commit crimes with little chance of detection and robbery in which a servant has figured as the person on the "inside" has become so prevalent that a great many persons are in constant fear of being victims from within their own household. This is the angle for exploitation of this picture especially before your opening. In the newspapers daily appear accounts of robberies which have been committed by servants. New York papers have recently carried the following headlines: "It was Easy for Her When Broke to Get Job and Rob House"—This referred to Eleanor M. Kelley, who committed crimes in Minneapolis. "Ring Gone, Hold Clerk of Hotel." This was an account of the theft of a $10,000 jewel stolen from a Boston woman in a New York hotel. "Maid Accused of Theft." Under this heading was told the story of a maid who robbed her mistress of valuables.

A page in the producers' press book is made up of the headings of stories recently running in the papers. Get this press book and have a cut made of the page. Use it as a teaser display well before the advance of your showing.

After having aroused some interest in your cut without disclosing why it has been run, start publishing a history of the robberies which have occurred in your city where servants were involved. You should be able to put this stuff across as news if it is well written and does not contain your advertisement.

If you do not approve of this angle of exploitation or if after you have worked up an interest in your theory that servants are unreliable you could get another "free ride" by taking up the other side of the story and relate how many faithful and trustworthy servants there are in your city.

A good way to work this would be to write a letter to the paper, most publications have some sort of a forum where the public's epistles are welcomed, stating that the writer takes exception to the inference that servants are not to be trusted. Then go on to relate how some faithful servant has served your fictional writer for years. Give it a human interest touch perhaps using some real facts as a basis at least. Get some of your friends to write some other letters and soon you will have something started which will warrant the editor of the publication letting you put over some stuff on the news pages which will relate how servants in your city have been exceedingly faithful to the interests of their employers. By going back in the history of the city you will find instances where employees have saved lives, prevented robberies and done all sorts of heroic deeds. As a starter you might use the recent occurence of the Brooklyn girl who lost her life defending her mistress's property, being murdered by a negro who will shortly go on trial for the crime. This has been a big news story and when the trial occurs there will be plenty more headlines.

Another angle suggested by the servant idea of the picture is in getting some figures on the class of people who are now being employed as servants. Go to a responsible employment office and get their figures and some of the facts of how they conduct their business. This is good for another front page article properly handled. You should work into your story the difference in the servants of today and those of a few years ago, submitting figures on nationalities with special reference to the Chinese and Japanese. All of this can be run blind without reference to the picture you will present or you may finish your article with a reference to "Who's Your Se vant?"

There is also opportunity for a straigh "teaser" campaign in both the newspapers an outside. For the newspapers we would sugge the running of a want ad type of readers readin like this: "Important event directly bearing o the servant problem coming soon."

Another line to follow would be: "Do yo trust your servants? If so what nationality ar they?" Following this use: "What nationalitie make the most trustworthy servants?" The fiel is unlimited for arousing interest in this way. Fo an outside teaser campaign the title of the film itself printed in flaming red on a strip would b as good as anything.

An idea that could be put over to good advantage would be the calling of people who you figure would employ one servant on the telephone and inquiring "Who's your servant?" They will of course tell you the name of the person. You can then say you are looking for a Japanese named "Ito" and hang up. Later when you spring your "Who's Your Servant?" advertising they will tumble that they have been the victim of an advertising scheme, all of which will help to put over your picture.

When you start billing the picture with dates and explanations go after the title in big letters and relegate everything else to the background except your selling talk which will carry out the idea that an interesting phase of the servant problem is to be presented.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

A naval commander and his staff are to oversee the construction of a new type of cruiser for the U. S. Uavy. Among the officers under the commander's orders, is a lieutenant and a captain. Both are in love with the commander's daughter. A Japanese servant is employed who also secretly loves the girl. Plans of the new cruiser are stolen and the lieutenant, who is the girl's favored suitor, is accused of taking them having been seen to come from the room where they were kept, under suspicious circumstances. He is held for court martial. The commander's daughter, however, believes him innocent and suspects the Japanese whom she has discovered is in the Mikado's pay, as being guilty. Pretending to have become enamored of the Japanese, she goes to his room at night and discovers her suspicions to be correct. She attempts to take the plans from the man unawares but is caught in the attempt.

In a struggle she kills the Japanese with a "short sword" which she has picked up in the servant's room after hearing its history of having been the weapon with which the grandfather of the servant had committed the suicide known as "hari-kari" with full description as to the manner in which this rite is observed. She then restores the plans and her sweetheart is freed of the charge of treason preferred against him. When the body of the servant is found it is assumed that he committed suicide since the girl has arranged his body in the position it would be if he had practised "hari-kari." These latter scenes are told in a resolve showing what she is telling to her sweetheart.

PROGRAM MATERIAL AND NEWSPAPER READERS

Owing to the great scarcity of labor in the world following the great war, the servant question has become one of the most important with which we have to reckon. Employers do not have the opportunity to investigate the character of people whom they are hiring—their need is so immediate that they are forced to accept anyone they can obtain.

A few cases of criminal servants have been traced directly to an organized band whose purpose has been to secure employment in wealthy families, then to ingratiate themselves into the trust of their employers and seize the first opportunity to loot the household. Afterward, their irriproachable references were found to be clever forgeries.

For an heiress to marry the family chauffeur is so common an occurrence that it no longer causes more than casual interest in the newspapers. For a romantic girl, the constant association with a man of good appearance often results in irreparable injury. Her father looks with suspicion upon all of her friends yet allows her to be constantly with a servant of whom he knows nothing.

One usually associates a maid with the stage idea—someone perfectly harmless except that she might possibly be inclined to flirt with one's husband. This does not always work out true to form in actual life. Maids have been known to be among the most adept of thieves and are unusually clever in disarming suspicion.

At a Glance—

Author—Julian Johnson, editor of the Photoplay Magazine. Written as a play and adapted to the screen.

Cast—Well balanced and competent. Lois Wilson is the star.

Story—Combination of domestic problem and diplomatic intrigue involving the stealing of plans of a new U. S. cruiser by a Japanese spy.

Locale—San Francisco, California, with a fine view of the West Coast shipyards.

Advertising Angles—Principally the title with a link-up with the servant problem.

Even the position of butler is not without taint when it comes to crime. It was not long ago since the country was startled by a mysterious poisoning and theft that puzzled the police. No one suspected the butler until a chance clue pointed in his direction. It had taken him several years to accomplish his purpose.

It is no one's place to think that they are immune from the depredations of criminals masquerading as servants. Your turn may be next. If you have a family—if you have valuables—it is your place to guard them from the inside as well as from the outside. Therefore, know your servants. Investigate them thoroughly before you trust them with your home.

CATCH LINES FOR NEWSPAPER DISPLAY

Would you trust such a person with your valuables—or with the safety of your family?

The great dangers of such a system—with all its possibilities—are most sensationally shown in the most unusual picture drama of the year—"Who's Your Servant?"

You place a bigger responsibility upon your servant than a bank places upon its cashier—do you know him as well?

What is the impossible price to pay for service?

Help Wanted is the great cry of the world, but it is not so important as Safety First.

Would you trust the safety of your family to an unknown servant?

SELLING TALK FOR YOUR ADS

The startling story of intrigue and rascality which followed taking an unknown servant, a Japanese who later turned out to be a Mikado spy into a home. The result was almost a tragedy for two lovers and the revealing of a great state secret to a foreign power.

A picture of love, mystery, trust and crime which will startle every person who employs servants and make everyone think before they take into their home an unknown person, even as a maid, butler or chauffeur.

Are you one of the thousands who are troubled with the servant question?

Because you haven't a servant in your own home does not grant you immunity from the servants of others or from those whom you have every right to believe are servants of the public.

Do you believe that it is right for you to take someone into your home—your office or your factory about whom you know nothing?

The State Right Field

C. B. Price Records Many Sales

"The Log of the U35" has been sold by C. B. Price Co., for the Northern Illinois territory to Rosenthal and Saperstein, of 220 So. State Street, Chicago. Montana has been secured by S. S. Rankin, of Billings, and Indiana by the Maurice Less attractions, of Terre Haute.

The C. B. Price organization also announces that Max Blucksman has purchased the rights for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay on "The Greater Woman," and "The Debt," starring Marjorie Rambeau, and Nance O'Neill's feature "Hedda Gabler."

L. L. Hiller to Sell "Topical Editor"

L. L. Hiller, of L. L. Hiller, Inc., Longacre Building, New York, has secured the exclusive selling rights to the new half reel feature, "The Topical Editor," produced by the Topical Humor Film Company and edited by Charles Leonard Fletcher.

Shortly after closing his arrangements with the Topical Humor Film Company, Mr. Hiller said:

"Within a short time we shall announce the details under which worldwide distribution of 'The Topical Editor' will be assured. I am more than enthusiastic about this new short subject."

"Return of Tarzan" in Cutting Room

Under the direction of George Merrick "The Return of Tarzan" is now in the assembling room being fast prepared for its premiere. According to the producers a trade showing in a Broadway theatre will soon be announced. It is declared that the latest of the "Tarzan" productions has been staged on a scale even more elaborate than its predecessors.

Sennett Film Bobs Up Again

After its Single Showing at Victory House was Returned to Sennett Plant

"DOWN on the Farm," the latest comedy production of Mack Sennett, was recently given a public showing for one evening at the Victory Theatre, Los Angeles; then it disappeared. Now comes the announcement that following the single evening's exhibition of the five-reeler, Mack Sennett, satisfied with the reception that had been accorded to his latest creation for the screen, determined to return the picture to the Sennett studios and await a seasonable time for its distribution. It is known that F. M. Asher, personal representative of Mr. Sennett, has left Los Angeles for New York, and it is thought that his trip East has to do with the distribution of the "Down on the Farm" picture.

In describing the character of the new production, the report from the Los Angeles office of the Sennett Comedies states that the picture is not a stellar exploitation for one figure of a cast, but that it is "an ensemble production in which is conjoined, in a fine harmony of humor, the grotesqueries of Louise Fazenda; the appealing and wistful comedy of Marie Prevost; the artful and unctuous satire of James Finlayson in the travesty role of a melodramatic villain; the juvenile and sturdy performance of little John Henry, Jr., in scenes of deepest heart interest, wherein his gallant comrade Teddy is a hero—all these, plus the presence of the entire menagerie of the Sennett Studios, to give realism to a story presenting all his favorite players, combine in the total of dramatic power by which the measure of success waiting "Down on the Farm" is already determined."

Radin Recovers and Plans Return East

Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad fined to his hotel in Los Angeles by an attack of the grippe, is out again clearing up the unfinished work he started previous to his becoming ill.

It is generally understood that Radin has secured many productions, but is withholding the titles until his arrival in New York, at which time definite announcement will be made regarding the stars, authors and producers connected with these photoplays. Beyond the fact that the art titles in one of these features were made by Ferdinand Pinney Earle and that it contains an all-star cast, no other information is obtainable.

These were the last titles made by Earle previous to the formation of his own company, organized to produce spectacular subjects by the use of his patented process whereby massive settings, which heretofore took weeks to build, can be made in a short time and at practically no comparative cost, by the use of his paintings and the aid of the camera by a "double exposure" system. A practical trial is now being given these paintings.

Fox Move Gives Pioneer Chance to Expand

Pioneer has just taken over for a long term of years floors vacated by William Fox in the Leavitt Building and in a week expects to have all of its departments moved in and in full operation in the new quarters.

Several of the departments such as the film, editorial, and art branches of the main office were quartered in other parts of the city, and while this system was not conducive to the greatest efficiency, it was the only plan possible under previous conditions.

The new quarters will have two projection theatres, elaborate cutting rooms and the New York exchange will be among the best equipped offices in the city.

Chester Man Gets Views of Paraguay River

Walter O. Runcie, a cameraman of the L. C. Chester forces, has reached central Brazil and is heading for the River of Doubt region.

Mr. Runcie made his way up the Paraguay River after taking a series of reels in the water labyrinths of the Parana in southern Brazil. He has obtained pictures of the celebrated Guayra Falls. C. L. Chester expects to receive these spectacular films this week and they will be made ready for release in the near future.

Miss Kellermann to Star in Society Picture

The Sol Lesser organization announces that Bernard McConville has written a scenario, especially constructed as a vehicle for Annette Kellermann. The new story, while providing for Miss Kellermann's usual role as a swimming artist, has a background of modern society life, which further affords the star an opportunity to appear attired in some wonderful gowns, it is said.

Selig Serial Is All Complete

Negatives of the Final Episodes of Animal Picture on Way to New York

THE Warner Brothers, who have the distribution rights of Selig's wild animal serial, "The Lost City," received a wire from Colonel Selig stating that the production is now complete, and that the negative of the final episodes are en route to New York.

It is stated that owing to the temperamental nature of the wild animals that took part in this gigantic serial and the difficulty of finding suitable locations to enact many of the scenes, seventeen months time was necessary to complete the fifteen episodes of this serial. Unlike the ordinary production, time cannot be figured when the director has to deal with wild animals. For instance, oftentimes it will require a week or more to get a scene in which a number of wild animals take part. Then again, there is always that element of danger of putting on an animal scene, even if the animals only run through a picture, because no one can tell when a beast, in spite of its training, will balk and attack anyone in sight.

According to a report received, E. A. Martin, who directed "The Lost City," had a narrow escape from serious injury when he wandered into an enclosure containing some leopards that were to appear in the action. Martin, it is said, was not aware of the animals' proximity until one sprang at him and forced him to beat a hasty retreat to a cage in the middle of the enclosure, installed for emergencies of this sort.

Mary Anderson with Pioneer

Is to Star in a Comedy-Drama That Officials Say Will Rival "Mickey"

MARY ANDERSON is the latest addition to the list of Pioneer stars. This young woman will appear in a comedy drama which has just been finished and which will be known as Bubbles.

The Pioneer officials confidently believe that they have a production which will rival "Mickey" in popularity and drawing power. Miss Anderson plays the role of a girl who forsakes the garb of her sex and dons the attire of a boy. In order to prove her mettle she becomes the centre of a rapid series of hilarious and ludicrous situations. At last, however, cupid steps in and puts an end to the show.

The picture was made by the Super Art, Inc., and was adapted from the story of the same name by J. Basil Kreider which attained quite a vogue during the past season in the book world. The scenario was prepared by Robert Hunter, while the production was put on under the direction of Wayne Mack. For the excellent photographic work credit is given to S. S. Norton, who had a close second in Hans Teichman who was in charge of the technical direction.

Mary Anderson is a perfect embodiment of the character of this boy-girl, and is supported by Jack Conoly, Bert Woodruff, Adelaide Elliott and a carefully selected cast of players.

"Independent Is Stronger"

Tamar Lane Says Independent Is More Likely to Give Greater Care and Time

THAT independent productions are to take a still stronger position in the market is the belief of Tamar Lane, manager of productions for Character Pictures. Basing this belief on the success that independent productions have scored during the past twelve months, Mr. Lane says:

"It will be found that a large percentage of the biggest hits of the past year in motion pictures were made by independent producers and according to indications a still larger percentage may be expected in the coming year. The independent producer has more at stake and consequently is forced to give more time and care to a production. They realize that each and every picture must be good, or else a big financial loss will be suffered. The result is that there is more direct personal interest and attention.

"This has the effect of giving more personality to pictures and leads away from the old machine-made product. It seems as though the future and improvement of the photoplay rests largely with the independent producer, as it is more possible for him to give the proper thought and time to a production in an effort to do something new.

"It will be our endeavor to make big feature productions of individuality and character. Pictures that will have a mark of distinction to them. We are working on several ideas in production that when introduced on the screen should prove marked innovations. Neither time nor expense is to be spared to give to Character Pictures that quality which will make them stand out as 'different.'"

Gaumont Resumes Features

"Husbands and Wives" is Offered to State Rights Exchanges Exclusively

THE Gaumont Company announces that it has resumed production in the United States. The first big feature of the series, "Husbands and Wives," adapted from "Making Her His Wife," the novel by Corra Harris, and starring Vivian Martin, has just been completed and is now offered to state rights exchanges exclusively. It is said to be a strong domestic drama in which Miss Martin portrays the role of the pampered city heiress in love with a poor country chap. His efforts to bend her to his will, her resistance and determination to lead her own life, create tense situations — passionate clashes followed by tender scenes will touch responsive chords in the heart of every man and woman, says Gaumont.

The story is set amid charming Southern scenes. In order to obtain real Southern atmosphere, Miss Martin and a company of twenty spent six weeks in and around Atlanta, Ga. The darkies who appear in the picture are real "honest-to-goodness Georgia-cane niggers" to whom dancing and singing come natural.

"The entire production is replete with realism and emotional appeal that will keep the audience alternating between laughter and tears," states the Gaumont report.

It is planned to follow "Husbands and Wives" with other pictures, all to be elaborately produced without regard to expense. As Gaumont is one of the oldest and most experienced companies in the business, state right buyers can be assured of top-notch pictures during the coming year.

Papers to Run Jans Film Story

Says that Forty Papers Are to Publish "Love Without Question"

ANNOUNCEMENT made by Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., relative to the syndicating of the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp, which is the original title of the novel from which the screen version, "Love Without Question," has been taken, means an exceptional benefit to exhibitors who have booked or will book this first presentation under the Jans banner.

The announcement further states that this story will appear serially in over forty different newspapers in the United States, touching the most important cities from the Pacific to the Atlantic coasts. The Thompson Feature Service of New York City has arranged for this public appearance in syndicate form of Mr. Camp's widely read novel.

Some of the most important newspapers reported to be handling this story serially are: The Dallas Evening Journal, The Omaha Bee, St. Louis Star, Atlanta Constitution, New York Evening World, and Philadelphia North American. Other leading American cities that will also present this story to their readers are Bridgeport, Conn.; Des Moines, Iowa; Washington, D. C.; Baltimore, Md.; and many others, covering all sections of the United States.

Commenting on the appeal that the screen adaptation of this story will have for the picture public, the report from the offices of the Jans Pictures, Inc., states:

"B. A. Rolfe, in producing this feature for the Jans Pictures together with Mr. Jans, selected this story owing to the wide appeal that it would undoubtedly have among film patrons. Their experience in the business is assurance to the exhibitor of the perfect adaptability of their selection for the screen. The Thompson Feature Service likewise realized the public appeal that a story of this kind would have among the fiction readers and syndicated it accordingly. It is felt by the Jans Pictures Inc., that the selection of their initial production to be exploited serially in the daily newspapers, proves their statement as to its appeal to the public and shows that their choice was good.

"Mr. Jans feels that this announcement should prove of great interest to the prospective exhibitors, inasmuch as it gives the showman splendid exploitation prospects and furthermore gives the motion picture a valuable amount of advertising that cannot fail to help those who are fortunate enough to book 'Love Without Question.' The very fact that thousands and thousands of people all over the United States have read the story in novel form, and inasmuch as many more will have the opportunity to follow the story day by day means that that number of patrons will be more than anxious to see it on the screen.

"Due to this, the producers feel, the exhibitor cannot afford to overlook the vast amount of advance advertising 'Love Without Question' is receiving. It means that they, the exhibitors, will be spared the necessary trouble of popularizing the screen version, inasmuch as the newspapers will have accomplished that fact in advance of the film's public appearance."

Costly Setting in "The Kentucky Colonel"

That one-third of the cost of The National Film Corporation of America's production of Opie Read's "The Kentucky Colonel" was spent to construct a replica of the village of Emeryville, Kentucky, with its mansions, business district, race-track, stables, and authentic properties, was the information contained in a letter received by Joe Brandt, the National's eastern representative, from I. Bernstein, production manager on the West coast. According to the letter, this photoplay, which the National states is that firm's greatest cinema achievement, cost over $150,000, not including overhead.

In order not to have the picture conflict with the book, it was found necessary to build sets in keeping with the general atmosphere of the novel. After a long search Mr. Bernstein hit upon Sunland, California, as an ideal location.

Jans Completes "Love Without Question"

Having completed the filming of "Love Without Question," B. A. Rolfe supervising director and his associates of Jans Pictures Inc., are now busily engaged in cutting, editing and assemblig the feature which is shortly to be released on the state rights basis.

Mr. Rolfe reports that the picture has been most successfully filmed and that it will without doubt create a stir when it is publicly presented. "Love Without Question" is a filmization of C. Wadsworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room."

Olive Tell, who is the star of "Love Without Question," with members of her supporting cast, including James Morrison, Peggy Parr, Ivo Dawson and Charles Mackay, witnessed a screening of their efforts a few days ago. Both Miss Tell and Mr. Morrison declare it to be the best picture they have ever appeared in.

Pioneer Invades England

After covering the United States and Canada with its chain of cooperative exchanges the Pioneer has turned its attention to the foreign field and has opened an office in London, at Chatham Horse, George Street and Hanover Square, W. "Mary Minds Her Business" was written by George Weston, and it will be concluded in the Journal in March.

News of the Gale Henry Comedy Forces

The Gale Henry studios in Hollywood, Cal., were sold this week, thus compelling the companies working there to seek new quarters. Miss Henry asserts her company plans to erect a studio of its own and Riverside, Cal., is mentioned as a favorable location.

Gale Henry, comedy queen and head of her company, has finished her year's contract with Bulls Eye, her releasing concern, and has signed a contract for a new series of two-reelers. According to Miss Henry's new contract, she will produce only six two-reelers a year, instead of twenty-four a year as she has in the past. Work on the first subject, it is stated, will commence in a few days. Her cast and director have not yet been announced.

Keep Author on the Lot to Save Continuity

According to Arthur B. Reeve, vice-president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., and co-author with John W. Grey of "The Mystery Mind" serial, starring J. Robert Pauline, the most effective way to prevent the mutilation of a story at the hands of meddlesome directors and stars and to preserve intact the original theme and the logical continuity, planned by the author in the writing of his story, is to have the author on the "lot" in the capacity of a consulting-director, while the picture is being filmed with the authority to supervise all proposed changes.

"Only the author," says Mr. Reeve, "should be permitted to alter a story to meet changing conditions. He alone sees the story as a perfect whole. He alone can judge where and how ramifications may extend without detriment to the finished work."

Beban Enthuses Ov New Lesser Productic

In "One Man In A Million," be filmed by George Beban, the no actor has stated that in this product he for the first time has been able produce a film just as he wished, wi out being restricted in time or mon "One Man In A Million" was writ by Mr. Beban.

"I had the story of 'One Man In Million' in my thoughts for five yea but never had the opportunity to terpret it," said Mr. Beban. "The pi ducing units with which I was as ciated had their own literary depa ment. I wanted to produce 'One M In A Million,' but I wanted to put on in my own way without restrictic With an author's pardonable pride, felt I had written a good story. Wh I showed the effort to Sol Lesser was highly enthusiastic and insist that I produce it and give him t right to distribute and exploit it."

"The result is that 'One Man In Million' is now being produced a Mr. Lesser will distribute it.

"In this screen play I selected n own players, technical staff, and w free to inject all the artistry into t effort that I wished. The result that for the first time in my six yea of film experience I was able to supe vise a play that in the work itself w really a pleasure."

Mr. Beban is the featured player i "One Man In A Million," with Hele Jerome Eddy playing the leading fen inine role. Others having importar parts in the production are Irene Ric Lloyd Whitlock, Jennie Lee, Georg Williams and George Beban Jr.

Smith Family, of Selznick, Nearly Corners Market

If it were possible for one family to obtain a "corner" on the continuity market, the R. C. Smith family, which consists of R. Cecil Smith and Ella Stuart Carson, would probably get it. These two writers, members of the Selznick staff, are always busy, and it is a dull day when less than two of their scenarios are not being produced at the Selznick Studios.

At the present time, when the studios are humming with activity, there are four of their scenarios being put into production. The work on these four pictures was done by this one family, jointly and separately. They are "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," starring Elaine Hammerstein; "A Fool and His Money," starring Eugene O'Brien; "Sooner or Later," with Owen Moore; and the Olive Thomas picture, "Footlights and Shadows."

Special Scenic Construction for "The Cyclone"

Despite the familiarity with realism of a high order which marks motion picture production today, there is one scene in particular in William Fox's latest Tom Mix thriller, "The Cyclone," just released, the construction of which is deserving of special mention.

When Director Cliff Smith made arrangements for the filming of "The Cyclone," he consulted some of the best contractors in the vicinity of Mixville, Cal., regarding the erection of a building that was to house a Chinese den. Mix had to stage the biggest thrill of "The Cyclone in this building.

The "Big scene" comes as a climax to the production, and depicts Tom Mix dashing into the building on horseback in search of his sweetheart. The horse gallops up four flights of stairs to the roof, and then suddenly reeling with Mix still on his back plunges first through the roof as this gives way under the weight, then through three floors as each floor gives way successively. Horse and rider finally crash into the basement where Mix rescues his sweetheart from a smugglers' chief.

Personal and Otherwise

H. Jess Smith is now in Chicago looking over the producing situation there. Mr. Smith is now associated with George Perry in the management of stars and directors.

Beulah Livingston, who has made an enviable place for herself in the motion picture industry through the excellent publicity for which she has been responsible during the past year for the two Talmadge sisters, and previously for Madame Petrova and other celebrities, now announces her affiliation with H. H. Wentworth, under the name of Wentworth-Livingston, Inc. The newly formed corporation will act as personal representative for motion picture studios and artists, directors and authors. Miss Livingston will also continue her present connection with the Norma and Constance Talmadge Film Company as director of publicity. We certainly wish her much deserved success.

Following a week's engagement out of New York with Oliver Morosco's "Civilian Clothes," the leading role of which he created, Thurston Hall will go under the management of Gerald F. Bacon, producer for both stage and screen. Notable among Mr. Hall's screen successes are: Cecil DeMille's "We Can't Have Everything," the portrayal of Marc Antony in the Fox production of "Cleopatra," and as leading man for Dorothy Dalton in a series of Thomas H. Ince productions. Mr. Bacon will announce in detail his plans for Mr. Hall in the near future.

If it were not for the fact that E. V. Darling of the United Booking Offices is a personal friend of Dr. John D. Stewart, who in private life is the husband of Olga Petrova, there might have been friction and misunderstanding in the Petrova household at Great Neck, L. I., when the following telegram was forwarded there last Tuesday from Pittsburg: "We want the biggest thing in vaudeville against Harry Lauder next week in Cleveland. Can I have you? Darling."

Mrs. Mildred Dempster, mother of Miss Carol Dempster, prominent player in D. W. Griffith productions, died on Friday, January 30, at her home, 2042 North Lakeshore avenue, Los Angeles, Calif. Miss Dempster was with her mother when the end came.

Edwin Carewe, who has been in California for four months, returned this week with the negative of "Rio Grande," the picture just finished of Augustus Thomas' great story of the Mexican border. "Rio Grande" is a super production in eight reels, with Rosemary Theby and Allan Sears in the leading roles. Five hundred Mexicans and cowboys were used in the mob scenes and in the raid on the Texas village and one hundred trained dancers appeared in the patio scene on the hacienda which Mr. Carewe had constructed especially for his picture. Mr. Carewe was accompanied on his trip east by Louis Jerkowski, his studio manager.

One reads of stars so far distant that it takes years and years for their light to reach the earth. Well, in Hildur Carlberg, we see a Swedish Biograph film star, long since retired from the stage, whose light has not reached the world beyond her native land before the lapse of eighty years. Her face is said to be sculptured in reverent old age and dignity. It was Victor Seastrom, the pioneer actor-director of the Swedish Biograph Company, who persuaded Mrs. Carlberg to play roles for the screen from time to time. Seamstrom considers her an invaluable member of his staff of players.

"To step from a small role in light opera, over a gap filled by several years of picture work, to a leading role in a big Broadway success, may sound easy, but it really isn't," says Doris Kenyon, according to report. Miss Kenyon made her first public appearance as a solist in a Brooklyn church. Her first stage appearance was in Victor Herbert's light opera "Princess Pat," leaving the cast when the piece left New York on tour to accept a flattering offer from World Films. Three years later she returned to the stage and scored another success as the beautiful and guileless heroine of A. H. Woods' farce comedy, "The Girl in the Limousine." Miss Kenyon is also working daily at the studio in a picturization of Augustus Thomas' stage success "The Harvest Moon," and it is rumored, will begin rehearsals in a new stage play with Lionel Barrymore in the near future.

Freddie Schaefer, technical director for the George Beban Producing Organization, had rather a difficult time with prohibition. In fact, for several days he felt very angry because of the long dry spell. It happened thusly: Mr. Freddie had to get a supply of whisky, wine, and gin bottles for the cellar scenes in Mr. Beban's shadow play "One Man In a Million," for distribution by Sol Lesser, now being filmed at the Beban Studios. When he started on a still hunt to find the bottles, he ran against hard luck. There were no bottles to be had. Mr. Freddie found that busy housewives had utilized all available bottles for bottling Catsup, Pickled Lily, or Grape Juice. He then had to wire San Francisco for a supply. The scenes were delayed two days. Schaefer states that the next saloon cellars he has to equip will be ice cream parlors.

A London Music Hall of 1850, quaintly interesting in every detail, was built at the Amsterdam Opera House by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore. Director John S. Robertson obtained the data for this set after talking with a number of old actors and from libraries and he claims that the result is accurate in every way.

"The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" gives Elaine Hammerstein an opportunity to play a dual role.

"Black Jack" Visits a Studio

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING, who has been a favorite subject for the moving picture photographers ever since he went to France as commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, was given a close-up view of the making of moving pictures during his visit to Los Angeles January 26 as the guest of Abraham Lehr, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

The Goldwyn Studios have never had a more enthusiastic visitor than General Pershing, who was interested in everything. It was his first visit to a moving picture plant, and when he finished his inspection he expressed regret that he could not wait to see more. Captain Gilbert White and Captain E. J. Garnsey, former service men who were with General Pershing in France, met him at the station in Los Angeles with the city's reception committee.

As representatives of the Goldwyn Studios they were introduced to the General and accompanied him as members of his official party. In the afternoon General Pershing was speaker at a big mass meeting of former service men at Exposition Park. While making his address the Goldwyn airship, flying national colors and piloted by Lieutenant G. B. Manly, overseas ace and a member of the Goldwyn staff, flew over the speakers and dropped silk parachutes from which hung a bouquet of flowers and a solid gold key bearing this inscription: "General John J. Pershing, Welcome to the Goldwyn Studio, January 26, 1920." One of the general's aids caught the parachute and presented the key to him.

Following the ceremony at the park, Captains White and Garnsey, in one of the Goldwyn automobiles, escorted the general and his staff to the studios. American flags and bunting covering the entrance to the studios met Pershing's eye. He was taken into the administration building to Mr. Lehr's private office, where Mary Roberts Rinehart and Mabel Normand assisted on the reception committee. When the visitors started on their inspection trip under the direction of Mr. Lehr, the General found the Goldwyn former service men lined up near the administration building with the Goldwyn band of thirty-five pieces.

Pershing was taken to see Pauline Frederick, who, under the direction of Frank Lloyd, was making a scene for "Roads of Destiny," Channing Pollock's version of the O. Henry story. After the visitors had an opportunity to see the actress at work, the scene was stopped and Miss Frederick stepped out to meet the general and his staff. It was a touch of France that the General saw next. He smiled as he caught a glimpse of a narrow little street in a French town built for use in Geraldine Farrar's "The Woman and the Puppet." He examined the detail of the set with unusual interest.

Then the party was taken to see the all-star cast headed by Wyndham Standing, in a scene from "Earth Bound," an Eminent Authors production from the pen of Basil King, being made under the direction of T. Hayos Hunter. The elaborate Russian street built at a cost of $40,000, was next shown, after which the general was taken to see how a ship sinks for moving pictures. This was the scene from "The Tower of Ivory." It had been "shot' some time before, but was reacted to give Pershing an opportunity of studying the mechanical end of picture making. First the bare set was shown, the wooden ship tilted at an angle from the ground, the machines for making artificial winds, rain and lightning and the water tanks raised above the ship to let loose the flood of waves that was going to send the vessel to the bottom.

Following an inspection of the set, the general stood behind the cameraman. The water was released and he saw the waves dash against the side of the ship, sweep across the deck and wash several luckless passengers overboard. Later the visitors inspected Nome street for Alaskan scenes and were shown an exact reproduction of Lexington, Ky., in 1850, as it was built at a cost of $20,000 for the film production of John Fox's "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

After his inspection of the lot, General Pershing and his party were escorted to Mr. Lehr's private projection room, where the ship sinking scene, as taken some weeks ago, was screened.

Emerson Hough Lauds Actors

Emerson Hough, the famous novelist, recently made a thorough study of motion picture players while on "location" during the filming of his widely read story, "The Sagebrusher," produced by Benjamin B. Hampton for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, and, by the way, the first of his stories ever adapted for the screen. And it's divulging no secret to say that Mr. Hough thoroughly enjoyed the experience.

"I had Roy Stewart, Marguerite De La Motte, Noah Beery, Betty Brice, several other of the very notables, as it were, and any number of lesser folk right where I could study them during our work on 'The Sagebrusher,'" the author observed. "We were in the lonely sagebrush country, and in the mountains, and in cities, and at the studio in Los Angeles together. I lived right with them, as one of them, and let me say here that they rank among the most congenial, most polished and educated, and what is more, the most noble-hearted large group of people with whom I have ever associated."

AN ARTIST of distinction has paid Mildred Davis, leading lady for Harold Lloyd, the compliment of asking her to sit for her portrait. Norvel McCluskey is painting Miss Davis in oils, and she is giving most of the time that she can spare from her studio work to him. The portrait is to be life-size.

ELLIOT DEXTER will make his reappearance in Cecil B. de Mille's next picture. He has not entirely recovered from his long illness, but a part is to be written for him which takes account of his infirmity.

Director George Irving, who made "The Capitol," the current Hodkinson release, is showing Alexander Gaden how to put over a tense scene. Leah Baird, the star of this Gibralter production, is the lady who is registering emotion

Meeting Elaine Hammerstein

WE wish we hadn't read a certain interview with Elaine Hammerstein that's running in the current issue of another magazine this month, because its author seems to have got an impression of her subject amazingly similar to the one we received, and we should hate to be accused of plagiarism.

It goes to show, however, that the Selznick star doesn't bother about affecting different poses for her various interviewers. She's absolutely natural, she tells one what she really likes, and she's an untemperamental sort of girl whose tastes aren't in the habit of changing every day. She lets one understand that she considers the whole system that has been built up around film luminaries, costumes, lights studios, and especially every phase of publicity, an absolutely unnecessary and undesirable evil, to be endured simply and solely because her own father has so decreed.

Think of it—with thousands upon thousands of girls all over the world longing, praying, employing every known method of wedging their way into even the humblest corner of the "movie" profession—and Elaine Hammerstein, who woke up one morning to find an entirely unsought contract, a contract that it would ordinarily take years to aspire to, waiting patiently for her signature, and she didn't want to sign it! Yes, irony is the word. Nothing less.

Elaine sees in all this shimmering mass of glamor and reputed popularity and international fame nothing but disillusioning hard work. She wants to be out of doors in the sunshine, riding horseback, or playing tennis or swimming or driving, and we must admit that we don't blame her at all.

"Oh, I love to drive my own car, in spite of the fact that nobody loves to drive with me," she told us, with the first evidence of genuine interest that we noticed. "People seem to be nervous or something," she laughed, "I'm sure I don't know why. "I've never killed anybody yet. I love dancing too—that's why I like pictures better than musical comedy, because I do have a few evenings off, at least."

It's just like having the burdens of Royalty thrust on one, this having "Oscar and Arthur Hammerstein for ancestors. "Uneasy lies the head that" inherits too enviable a reputation, or something like that, was our unexpressed opinion, but we might just as well have put it—too much charm. For, of course, if this heiress of fame were not undeniably attractive and gifted in her own right—her difficulties would be over, in the professional line, at any rate. What a pity that people do like her right at first sight!

But she's perfectly lovely to look at, and her frank sincerity and unaffected naivete are altogether irresistable. We wish we had seen her in "High Jinks." She must have been delightful, and of course it was mostly due to the hit she scored in it that Mr. Selznick gave her the opportunity she has had with him. "The Country Cousin," "Greater Than Fame," and "The Woman Game" are her releases to date under his management. And everybody who has seen them will testify to Miss Hammerstein's photographic charm.

Furthermore, she's immensely popular in the Selznick studio, and when an actress is popular with the people with whom she works, there isn't much more that can be said in her favor. It's only a very "real girl" who can have those most critical of all critics, the property men, follow her off a set with eyes full of genuine admiration, and the highest of all recommendations "Miss Hammerstein's alright, she is."

We think so too, and we think it's only an "alright" girl who wouldn't be carried away by seeing her name in blazing electric signs all up and down Broadway, and by the flattery of a delighted public. MARGUERITE JONES.

WHEN CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG asked for photos of girls bearing resemblance to her, she received more than 40,000 from all parts of the world.

Gossip Gleaned Both Here and There

Constance Talmadge and all the principal members of her company left Friday night for Palm Beach, where they will make the exteriors of Constance's fifth First National Picture, "The Love Expert," an Emerson-Loos Production of one of their original stories. Natalie Talmadge also has an important role in "The Love Expert." Mrs. Margaret Talmadge accompanied her two daughters, and Norma Talmadge is leaving Cuba next week to join the rest of the family. Those who accompanied Constance Talmadge, and will stop with her at the Royal Poincianna, are: Director David Kirkland, John Emerson and Anita Loos, authors of the story, John Halliday, leading man, Arnold Lucy, Fannie Bourke, Mrs. Nellie Parker-Spaulding, James Spottswood, Cameraman Oliver Marsh and Carl LeViness, assistant director. In the absence of both Talmadge companies, their studio on East 48th street, will be rented to Flim Specials, Inc.

Jottings From The Coast

Another director of pictures has carned the coveted honor of special recognition from the producers. As a result of his brilliant success in directing "23½ Hours' Leave," which introduced Douglas MacLean and Doris May as stars, and "Haunting Shadows," with H. B. Warner, Jesse D. Hampton Productions, Inc., are to present a brace of six Henry King specials, with all-star casts. These are to be made from books by recognized authors, and King is to be given the utmost latitude in putting them into films. The first will be Frank Spearman's story "Big Dick."

Frank Mayo, the Universal star, has been sued by his wife for separate maintenance, charging Dagmar Godowsky with being the serpent in Eden. Miss Godowsky, who is the daughter of Leopold Godowsky, the eminent pianist, has retorted with a $15,000 suit for slander.

In "The Roads of Destiny," in which Pauline Frederick stars in her next Goldwyn feature under the direction of Frank Lloyd, she will portray four characters and the scenes are so varied that they stretch from Mexico to Alaska. Both Miss Frederick and Mr. Lloyd believe that it will give the star the greatest opportunity of her picture career. "The Roads of Destiny," is taken from the stage play by Channing Pollock.

Charlie Murray, one of the prominent figures in Mack Sennett comedies for the past half dozen years, is to be starred in a series of rough-and-tumble farces.

Will Rogers, the cowboy star who has been the big find of the year for Goldwyn, paid a high tribute the other day to his director, Clarence Badger, to whom he gives credit for much of his success. It is no small responsibility that is put upon a director when a new candidate for stardom is placed in his hands.

Irene Rich, the Metro star, saved Nick Cogley, one of her supporting actors, from drowning in a California river. When he fell into the water with heavy boots on and was unable to swim, Miss Rich plunged in and held him until help arrived.

Director Lloyd Ingraham has plunged into the first stages of a new production with his young stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, at the Thomas H. Ince studios. It will present MacLean in a guise entirely new to his admirers. He will appear as an escaped jail-bird with an unconquerable sense of humor, and both stars and director declare that it will have more comedy and a story with more genuine suspense than any production thus far made by this trio.

Rumor has it that Priscilla Dean and Wheeler Oakman were married at Reno, Nevada, recently, but Miss Dean denies the soft impeachment.

Look for a lot of "good red blood" in Bill Hart's next picture. It will have a fight between Bill and that other giant actor, Tom Santschi, and no one need look for a pink-tea affair. Hart plays the role of a soldier returned from overseas and Santschi the part of a saloonkeeper near the water-front in San Francisco.

Emile La Croix, who is now playing in "A Fool and His Money" with Eugene O'Brien, appeared in another Selznick picture, playing the role of Father in the first Kaufman weekly, "Little Red Riding Hood."

"The Silkless Banknote" is the first of the eight scenarios based on incidents in the life of Chief Flynn, released through Republic. The seven which follow are: "Outlaws of the Deep," "The Five Dollar Plate," "Chang and the Law," "The Faker," "The Gilded Ruby," "The Poppy Trail" and "The Phantom Butler."

This is Colin Campbell, veteran direct among whose productions are such gre pictures as "The Spoilers," "The Crisis and "The Garden of Allah"

The praises that are being sung f Paramount's spectacular film versi of "Everywoman" are also a tribu to the skill of Will M. Ritchey, Pa mount's scenario expert. The di culties of translating this symbo play to the screen were great becau of the vital importance of the di logue. How to convey the symbolis without giving the word which W ter Brown put into the mouths of t characters was a problem of the fi magnitude. Ritchey's skill accom lished this. Situations and sequenc are as he planned them, and the me sage as well as the beauty of "Ever woman" is put over with great for

On the Fox Lot

THE William Farnum Fox Company will leave for Palms Springs, California, the first week in February, and will be composed of more than 100 people, where Director J. Gordon Edwards will make the exteriors for "The Orphan." Included in the company will be more than thirty-five cowboys. Among these will be Pedro de Leon, who has the distinction of having lassoed nine horses running abreast.

Other Fox companies at work under the supervision of Sol M. Wurtzel are those engaged in the making of "One-Quarter Apache," directed by Jacques Jaccard; "Shod with Fire," starring William Russell, and directed by Emmett J. Flynn; "Her Elephant Man," being made by Howard M. Mitchell; The Mother of Her Children," directed by E. J. LeSaint; "Forbidden Trails," starring Buck Jones, under the direction of Scott Dunlap, and "The Iron Heart," starring Madaline Traverse, under the direction of Denison Clift, who is the author of the story.

Metro

PRESIDENT RICHARD ROWLAND and Treasurer Joe Ingle, of Metro Film Corporation, together with Marcus Loew, arrived in Los Angeles this week to spend some time at the West coast studios of the Metro Company. While no statement has been given concerning the purpose of his visit, it is generally understood that Mr. Loew came West to see the Metro producing plant in company with the other officials. The only information given out respecting their visit was that by Mr. Loew himself, who stated that he went into the picture game in self defense. After viewing the plant of the Metro in Hollywood, he expressed his pleasure in the terse remark that it looked more like a factory than a pleasure park.

Director of production, Maxwell Karger, who was thought to have left for the East several weeks, it now develops is on a vacation making a motor tour in Northern California. He is expected back at the studio shortly, and then it is probable he will go East when President Rowland completes his visit to the producing plant.

Irving Harris, of the firm of Ackerman & Harris, whose circuit of vaudeville houses was recently purchased or amalgamated with the Loew interests, were in Los Angeles this week and went over the plans for two new theatres to be built in Los Angeles. These were given the official O. K., and the work of construction will start shortly, or as soon as present tenants of the buildings can be removed.

Basil King's famous story, "The Street Called Straight," is popular Tom Moore's next starring vehicle for the Goldwyn program

The big scene for "The Hope," consisting of those on the East Indian street built at the Metro, were filmed this week by Herbert Blache. More than 500 people were used for these scenes and constituted tourists, British soldiers and Hindus. To insure technical correctness, a former British soldier who served in India aided the studio staff.

King Baggot has been engaged as leading man for May Allison in a production now in the making under the direction of Henry Otto titled "The Cheater." In this three of the principal characters play dual roles, they being the parts taken by May Allison, Frank Currier and Harry Van Meter.

The first of the Jack London stories to be filmed by Metro, "Burning Daylight," will be put in production the first of the coming week. Edward Sloman will direct Mitchell Lewis in this series.

Vitagraph

ANTONIO MORENO found it necessary to not only play the star role, but also to direct the action of the fourteenth episode of "The Invisible Hand" serial owing to the illness of Director William J. Bowman, and Mr. Moreno completed this task and the company is now waiting for the return of Mr. Bowman to the studio to make the fifteenth and final episode.

The William Duncan Company, making a serial, as yet untitled, which is to follow the Moreno Invisible Hand serial in release, is now working on the fourth episode. The principals of the cast for this, in addition to Director-Actor Duncan and his leading woman, Edith Johnson, are Jack Richards, who plays the heavy, and Virginia Nightingale, who has become known as the Vitagraph vamp.

The third serial company renewed activity this week upon the return of Director-Actor Joe Ryan, who has been in bed for sometime suffering from an injury received while bulldogging a steer. With his return work of filming "The Vanishing Mask" serial, in which Jean Paige shares honors with Mr. Ryan, was commenced. The company is now working on the second episode, the first having been completed before Ryan's injury.

Director Dave Smith has returned from Truckee, California, where he spent several days waiting for snow for needed exterior scenes in the adaptation from the James Oliver Curwood story, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." Niles Welch and Pauline Stark are the leads in this, with George Stanley taking the character leads. Director Smith will make interiors at the studio and later return to Truckee when the weather conditions are more satisfactory.

Earle Williams is expected at the Vitagraph Hollywood studio on Febrúary 17th to make the exteriors for "Captain Swift." The interior scenes for this photoplay were made in New York. Chester Bennett, who directed Williams when he went West previously, will be in charge of making this production.

Montgomery and Rock Company have completed the first subject made under the direction of Melville Brown, which is a burlesque on a Spanish romance. Patsey DeForest plays the feminine lead. This is said to be one of the most expensive two-reel subjects made by these comedians to date, particular care having been taken in the selection of sets and the costuming, etc.

The first Larry Semon comedy made under his new contract has required six weeks for the making and has been completed and shipped East. Lucille Carlisle continues in this as his leading woman.

The third Vitagraph company making its comedies is headed by James Aubrey, now working on small town village comedies, where most of the acting is laid around a blacksmith shop, which has partially become a garage.

Selznick

MANAGER of production Harry Rapp found it necessary to postpone the filming of "You and I" for the Republic release and has changed the plans of the Selznick production forces so that the next film to be put into production will be "The Invisible Divorce." This is to be directed by Tom Mills, who recently filmed "Duds" for Goldwyn, following numerous engagemeents with east and west coast companies.

Walter McCrail and Leatrice Joy are to be the leads in "The Invisible Divorce." The scenario was prepared by Kathryn Reed.

"Blind Youth" is being finished this week by Director Ted Sloman. The cast of this picture, which has been in production four weeks, includes Ora Carew, Leatrice Joy, Clara Horton, Colin Kenny, Claire MacDowell, Joseph Swickard and Walter McCrail.

The complete cast for the first western made Owen Moore picture, directed by Wesley Ruggles, will include Gloria Hope, Henry Miller, Jr., Charles Arling, Arthur Hoyt and Emmett King. Work on the filming of this was started this week.

A preview of the Selznick picture, "Just a Wife," which has Roy Stewart and Kathlyn Williams in the leading roles, was given at the Suburban theatre, near the studio, Friday evening, and attended by many of the West Coast film talent.

The L. Webber Production Company will make a film "Children of Destiny," with Edith Hallor as star. and a cast made up of William Courtney, Arthur Carew and Emory Johnson will support the star, under the direction of George Ernie.

National

THE National Film Corporation has taken a contract to produce a series of comedy dramas for Marion Kohn, who will have charge of the release of the pictures, furnish the stars, stories and directors for the making of the films.

The people engaged to be featured in these are Polly Moran, Grace

Cunard, and an apparent newcomer to the screen who is known as "Smiling Bill Jones." Grace Cunard is to have Cole Herbert, known as "Slim Cole," playing opposite her in a series of two-reel comedy dramatic pictures, the first of which is titled "The Gasoline Buckeroo"; while Polly Moran will appear in one-reel slapstick comedies. The Jones films are to be of one reel each, and are spoken of as "polite" comedies. Each of the three companies will make a series of twenty-six pictures, which, it is said, are to be released by "Doc." W. E. Schallenberger, of the Arrow Film Corporation.

Jack Hoxie, who was recently starred as Lightning Bryce in the serial produced by National, is now to play in five-reel western pictures, and the continuity for the first of these is now being written by L. V. Jefferson.

Harry Cohn, of Cohn Brothers, who have made the Hall Room Boys' Comedies, featuring Flannigan and Edwards, arrived in Los Angeles this week, and is making arrangements with the National for the continuation of producing comedies. The most recent comedy put in production under the direction of Harry Edwards is titled "The Road to Ruin," being the experiences of a girl show in a small town.

All scenes have been made for "The Kentucky Colonel," and Director William Seiter is now in charge of editing this film. Plans are that it shall be ready for the market by March 1st.

Bryant Washburn's latest Paramount-Artcraft picture is a humorous subject under the title of "The Six Best Cellars"

Christie

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by Al Christie this week of a reversal of the usual order of thing in the matter of dramatic companies engaging leads from comedy organizations, by the Christie Company engaging Coleen Moore, who heretofore has always played in drama. Miss Moore is to appear in a series of comedies for Christie and is now under contract. At the present time she has been loaned to the Haworth Company to play a lead opposite Sessue Hayakawa. Prior to beginning this engagement she worked in two pictures for Christie, "A Roman Scandal," which has been released, and "Her Bridal Nightmare," which is set for release February 1st.

The Christie Company, under the personal direction of Al Christie, is to make a series of five-reel subjects starring Chic Sale, vaudeville headliner, who is under contract with the Exceptional Pictures Corporation for a series of subjects to be released by Robertson-Cole. The first story for sale is "The Smart Aleck," by Irvin S. Cobb, and will be put in production as soon as Sale completes his vaudeville tour on Orpheum time, which will be early in February.

The first of the "Bringing Up Father" series being made by Christie for a New York film company, is now nearing completion under the co-direction of Al Christie and Reggie Morris. This subject will have all the well known characters of the famous George McManus cartoons, they being impersonated by Johnny Ray as Jiggs, Margaret Fitzroy as Maggie, Laura La Plante as Nora, and Ward Caulfield, Jack Henderson, Eddie Baker, Gus Leonard and George George as the friends of Jiggs.

Reggie Morris has been directing comedy for the past four years, his first work being with L-Ko, from which studio he went to the Mack Sennett Company. It was from this plant that he was secured by Christie to direct the "Bringing Up Father" series.

Goldwyn

PLANS for the filming of two additional Eminent Authors productions by Goldwyn were made known this week, when it was announced that Cullen Landis had been engaged to play the leading role in the film versions of Mary Robert Rinehart's story, "Empire Builder," and the engagement of Sydney Olcott to direct the Rupert Hughes story, "Scratch My Back," was made known. T. Roy Barnes, star of vaudeville, will make his first appearance on the screen in this subject, playing the leading role, and Helene Chadwick will play opposite. The others in this cast have not been named.

Director Victor Schertzinger has everything ready for the filming of "Twin Sisters," and the cast selected to support Mabel Normand in this is made up of Tully Marshall, Hugh Thompson, Russ Powell and Harry Laramie.

Director Wallace Worsley and Gouverneur Morris have found location suitable for exteriors of Morris' first eminent authors story, "The Penalty," and the filming of this was started this week. Ethel Gray Terry plays the lead and the other members of the cast are Lon Chaney, Kenneth Harlan and Charles Clary.

The intention of the Goldwyn Company to send Frank Lloyd, Pauline Frederick and members of the company filming "Roads of Destiny" to Cuba were made known this week.

The filming organization, including Jane Novak, John Bowers, Willard Lewis, Richard Tucker, Harvey Kirkland, M. McNamara, T. Flynn, Maude George, Assistant Director Harry Weil and Cameraman E. E. Jennings, will compose the party going from Los Angeles to New York and thence to Cuba. It is expected, according to statement of the Goldwyn publicity department, that the company will remain in Cuba, making scenes for at least two weeks. This O. Hnry story has the locale of a mythical South American country and conditions in Cuba are ideal for the filming of exterior scenes needed, and it will also be convenient for the company to secure a great many Cubans to play parts in the mob scenes.

T. Hayes Hunter, who has been at work on "Earthbound," the Basil King story, for several weeks, has an addition to his cast this week in the person of Miss Tilly Cotton, who has one of the important roles.

Samuelson

AFTER several weeks of preparation G. B. Samuelson, who recently came to Los Angeles from London to produce a series of pictures, now has three companies at work. One is being directed by Mr. Samuelson himself, and will offer Madge Titheridge, supported by C. M. Hallard and Campbell Gullan, in a photoplay adapted from the novel "Her Story."

"The Night Riders," adapted from an American novel, is being made by Alec B. Butler, which will offer Maudie Dunham in the featured role, supported by Albert Ray. Ray was formerly co-starred by Fox. Director Butler will also play the heavy role.

The third Samuelson company began work this week in an adaptation from an American novel, "At the Mercy of Tiberius." Peggy Hyland, an English actress, who for two years was starred by William Fox photoplays, and who is now under contract for two years with Samuelson, will be starred in this subject. Fred Leroy Granville has been engaged to direct Miss Hyland in this production. He was formerly identified with the Universal, following a number of years' experience as cameraman. entire cast supporting Miss Hy has not been announced.

Brunton

THE Robert Brunton Studio now boast of the largest encl space with all open floor in the c try. The size of this mammoth b ing being 300 feet long by 120 wide and a clear space of 30 There are no pillars or posts of kind, making possible a scene the of the floor space. One end of building may be removed so that cameras may be set back far enc to take in the entire end and bal of the building. There are t sunken wells with water attachm and complete lighting equipment the entire building. A number other improvements are being n by Robert Brunton at his mamn plant. One of the most recent a tions is a hospital, which consist an operating room, several wards living quarters for a family, who be in charge of the hospital. A tra nurse will be at the hospital at times. Work is just being finishe the construction of replacing buildings recently destroyed by The most important of these is scene dock, 100 x 40 feet.

Director Ernest Warde has c pleted the filming of the week story, which as yet has not been gi a permanent title. This feature Warren Kerrigan with Fritzi E nette as leading woman. Six hc after doing the final work on re-e ing this picture, Director Warde gan the making of another photo titled "The Green Flame," with K rigan as star.

Fritzi Brunette is to continue leading woman in this, and other p ple cast for important roles are Cl Dubrey, William Mong, Joseph B ing and Edward Hearn.

Fritzi Brunette has been enga by Robert Brunton to play oppo Kerrigan in the remaining of present series of pictures, which me that she will be the leading wor for four five-reel productions. M Brunette has played in support Kerrigan in two pictures, followin long engagement at Universal several pictures with Lasky, to nothing of a two year engagem with Selig. Her most recent w with Kerrigan was in "The W End."

Arrangements have been comple for the filming of the first of the M Marsh subjects for Robertson-C by L. J. Gasnier at the Brunton S dio. Sid Cohn, who is in charge these productions, has not announ the director, nor has a story been d nitely passed upon. It is expect however, that work will be star not later than the first of the com week.

Equipment Service

News Notes

James Milligan, formerly on the advertising staff of our friend the Moving Picture World has accepted a position as advertising manager with the Typhoon Fan Company. Through his association with the manufacturers of motion picture equipment Mr. Milligan is well acquainted with the sales possibilities in his new connection.

Jos Hornstein is having great luck with his new venture as manager of the Equipment department of the Howells Cine Equipment Co. He mentions many sales of Powers and Simplex machines to Brazil and the Orient, Java and Singapore. He is also agent for the Acme portable machines and has shipped a considerable number to South American countries.

Ain't it h-e-l-l, writes Charlie Bass of the Bass Camera Co., Chicago. And he has good reasons for thus expressing himself in this fashion. Some days ago while attending to business he was stricken with appendicitis. He reports that he is doing well in the hospital and has progressed far enough to be able to write a few lines to his friends. We hope he gets well, p. d. q., so that he can continue to scurry up cameras to partly fill the demand.

Somewhere in this issue is a story on the recent fire at the plant of the Precision Machine Company. The newspapers of New York City, by their headlines, must have judged that the whole Simplex organization had been consumed. A personal investigation shows that this is not the case. The main building where most of the work is done was not touched. This includes the Repair department and the Assembly Section. As E. S. Porter said, "The fire is to be regretted, particularly at this time when we had hopes of catching up with the demand, but our normal production will be but slightly affected."

A press-agented story just received remarks that "this new theatre is so large and its ramifications are so many that the manager is obliged to carry

Last Week We Met—Theo. Hardeen

THERE is considerable difference between being a magician of world wide fame and the vice-president of a thriving motion picture laboratory.

But Theo. Hardeen seems to make as great a success of one vocation as the other. For this man who at the present time is one of the executives of the Film Developing Laboratory enjoys with his brother, Houdini, the distinction of being one of the two greatest performers of magical tricks and secrets in the world.

The two brothers started in the show business together and were known as the Houdini Brothers. But after a few years of this combination Hardeen left to enter a commercial proposition while his brother continued on the stage. The latter made such a hit in every country where he exhibited that he was unable to fill the engagements offered him. As a result theatrical promoters looked around for another man skilled in the same line. By chance one heard of the old brotherly combination and came from Europe to this country to persuade Hardeen to again take up the work. This he did and for nearly twenty years he toured the world and was touted everywhere as a sensation.

His "bag of tricks" seems to have included everything that could be imagined. He has escaped from the torturing straight jacket in full view of his audience. He has jumped from high bridges with hand-cuffs and leg-irons tightly fastened where they should have bothered him most. And the water into which he has plunged has ranged from the warm river waters of the South to the ice-filled Ohio.

His audiences have ranged from those of the customary small towns of America to the crowned heads of Europe, and it can safely be said that not once have they been disappointed in his performance.

Some time ago the Weiss Brothers—for that is the real name of the two Wisconsin born boys, who have startled the wisest of men with their skill in escaping from lock and key—realized the coming importance of the motion picture. Both of them were endowed with plentiful talents to use in businesses other than the stage. They organized the Film Developing Laboratory of Hoboken and installed in it special machinery of their own design. Included in the equipment were negative and positive developing machines by the use of which the personal equation was done away with and films were turned out without having come into contact with human hands.

The war affected the supply of chemicals on which the perfect operation of these highly developed machines depended and rather than chance it with results not quite up to the standard they had set the apparatus was shut down. As soon as the supply of foreign chemicals becomes normal it is probable that the automatic machines will again be used.

Mr. Hardeen's executive ability has had much to do with the success of the firm in which he is interested. His long experience on the stage has given him a personality which aids him in handling employees. And strange as it may seem in view of the fact that his present work is much less exhilarating than the one which made him famous he has become thoroughly absorbed in his laboratory and only on rare occasions such as benefits does he drop his robe of business and take up the secrets and tricks of the magician.

around with him a key ring containing over 1000 keys." And someone adds a touch of pathos by picturing the predicament of the poor manager who is forced to carry so much junk in one hip pocket without a thing to balance it in the opposite pocket.

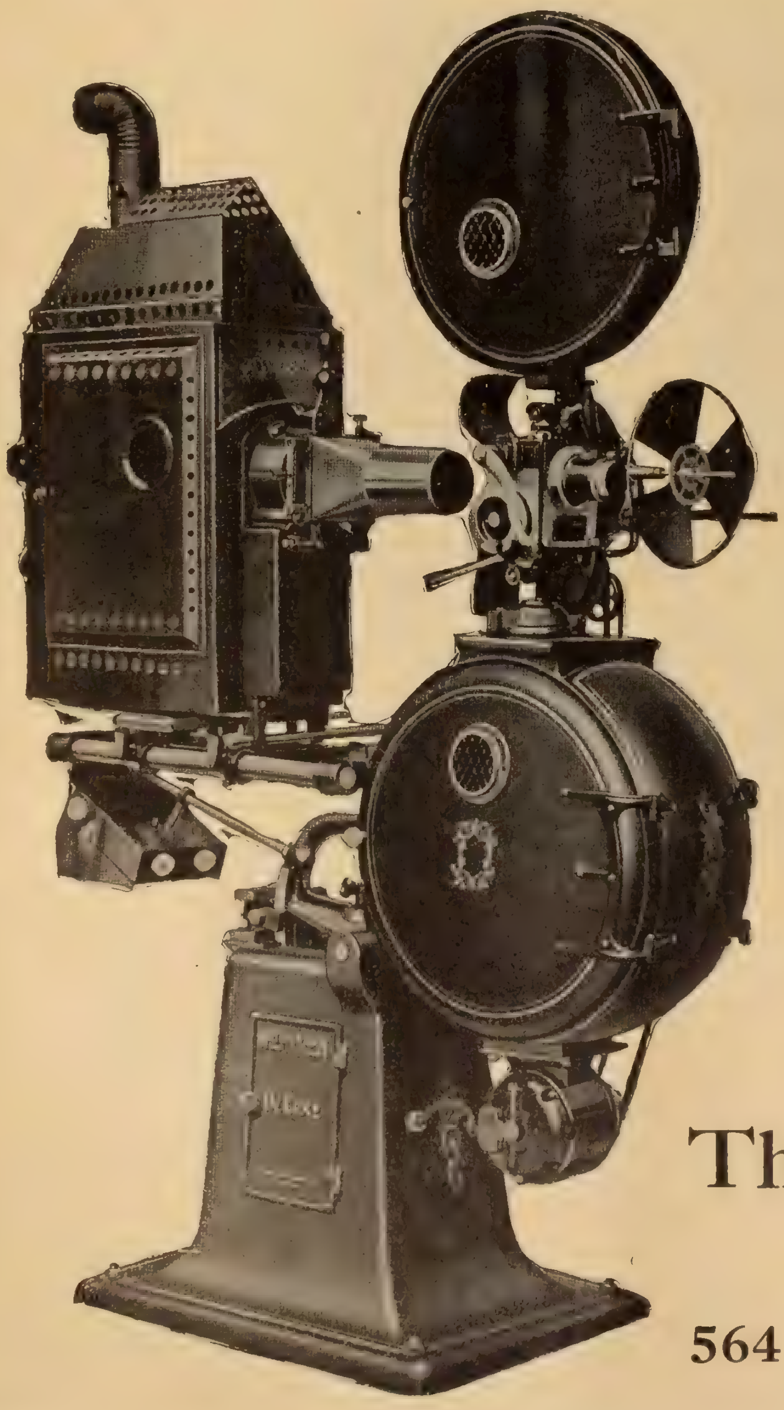
MOTIOGRAPH De LUXE is

CONVENIENCE, — EASY CONTROL, — READINESS FOR INSTANT USE



YOUR operator doesn't need to start in his booth prepared to continually remove the oil from his speed control to insure uniform speed; nor is it necessary to keep the shelves in his booth full of extra parts, fearful that some part of the Machine will give away without a moment's warning.

These things don't happen with a MOTIOGRAPH de LUXE.

You know the quality of the material used in the manufacture of a Motiograph—not a single die casting is used; the gears and sliding discs have never been known to wear out; speed control fully enclosed; no oil troubles.

Make the picture which you sell to your customers the very best—You can do it with a MOTIOGRAPH de LUXE.

Commodious and Beautiful House Is Patterned After the Best Known of European Theatres

'HE Palace, Cincinnati's newest and largest theatre, opened its doors to the public on Satur- ., and although the day was gloomy and a steady n continued all day, hundreds of persons availed mselves of the opportunity of getting a glimpse o the interior. The beauties of the house were ealed for the first time in all their glory, and fine and reposeful decorations, the tasty foyer, ich was banked with floral offerings, the excellent service and attendants, and the many conveniences provided for the comfort of patrons, fulfilled the prediction that the Palace was to be one of the handsomest and most complete theatres in the country. As one of the spectators stated after viewing the rest rooms, smoking rooms and similar features: "The Palace is too comfortable; it's likely to become the town loafing place. Some day somebody's going to bring a deck of cards and try to start a friendly game. Maybe the patrons will be induced, in some way, to take their seats, but the show will have to be a mighty good one to offset the desire to get back to the 'loafing places.'"

Al Walle, Manager of Palace

"Well, we invite the loafing," General Manager I. Libson concurred, "and as for the attractiveness of the shows—well, we're not worrying about that."

While there were a number of the prominent factors in the Keith interests present at the opening, there were no formal ceremonies. The audience was permitted to enter in the afternoon by way of a sort of dress rehearsal, although the evening performances were officially designated as the inaugural.

Maids will be in charge of each of the rest rooms for women, and the first-floor rest room will have a direct opening into the check rooms, so that women need not stand in the outer line to get their wraps. An information booth will be conducted for the convenience of patrons and numerous sound-proof booths will provide adequate telephone service. Girl ushers in smart uniforms, similar to those of aviators, will be another innovation.

Realizing the disinclination of the American theatre-going public to use the balcony seats, the architect has paid particular attention to the upper floors in the attempt to make them attractive enough to be preferred over those on the floor. For instance, the foyer is a double storied affair, with the upper floor looking down upon the first floor foyer. In addition there are a number of observation ports through which the orchestra may be viewed from the upper foyer. Easy chairs are distributed over the foyers, making them a comfortable lounging place between features. Rest rooms for men and women, respectively, lead off from the foyers.

The sense of quiet and restfulness is heightened by the thick carpets which have been placed every place where patrons walk. One interesting innovation is found in the men's chief smoking room in the basement. There a covering of rubber has been placed over the floor, topped by a thick, luxurious carpet and rugs.

The general color scheme of the theatre is worked out in white, gold and mulberry. The pillars, walls and panel borders are in white and gold, while the panels will be of mulberry shade, as will also the box and rail draperies and the carpets. The seats, of the same quality in the topmost row of the upper balcony as in the orchestra circle, are of green leather. There is no gallery, t giving the vast balcony greater extent, better el tion of seats and excellent light and air. The three rows of the balcony are to be known as m zanine seats. The boxes, of which there are lower and six upper, are to be furnished w mahogany chairs of bent-wood design.

A unique feature of the interior is the h dome, with a border of indirect lights, which tends over that part of the lower floor dire under the balcony. This dome, hollowed out the under side of the balcony, not only adds the beauty and spaciousness of the theatre, but s plies the most modern system for ventilating lower part of the house. Exhaust pipes and ve concealed in the decorations carry off the stale thus preventing it from accumulating there ascending to the upper part of the house. All ot parts of the theatre likewise have the latest equ
ment for keeping the temperature properly re lated and giving the necessary ventilation. In su mer the heating apparatus is to be used for cooli purposes.

A special lounging and locker room has been pr

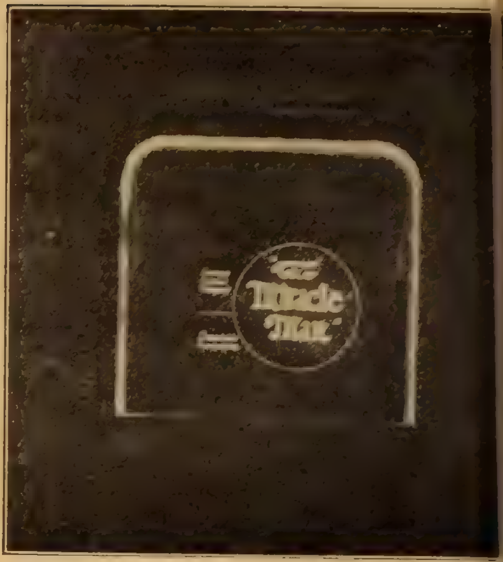
A New Screen Lighting Effect

SOMETHING new in the way of lighting the screen has been invented by Mr. F. K. Moulton-Plessner, manager of the Aurora Theatre, of Philadelphia. The Aurora is a neighborhood house, of medium size and in no wise better or worse physically than scores of other houses playing to "family" patronage. Its screen is an ordinary screen, and its pictures have always played in most of the larger places first. So it can be seen that the material with which the exhibitor had to work here, is no different from that found in most houses throughout the country.

Mr. Plessner became convinced, however, when he entered the film business, that there must be better ways of lighting the screen than those he was using. Accordingly, he experimented with various colored lights, and suddenly hit upon something new, in the effect he achieved by having an arch of violet-bluish lights just before the screen. The bulbs are ordinary affairs, set sixteen inches apart in the arch, and their direct rays do not hit the screen but cross before it and are reflected, bathing the screen in this bluish light and presenting a sort of light screen through which the audience views the picture.

The result is great clarity of the picture, an unusual depth and tone, and a removal of the usual "blank wall" effect. The figures stand out far more clearly than usual, and the picture in every way benefits. Also, patrons of the Aurora have commented on the fact that they no longer feel the least eye-strain, and in consequence attendance has jumped way ahead.

Mr. Moulton-Plessner



A New Lighting Effect

Mr. Plessner, the originator of this new system of lighting, is a young man who has not yet completed his first year of exhibiting. He is a graduate of the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania, where he studied motion picture advertising and exhibiting in addition to the usual course. Incidentally he worked with the Stanley Company at the Stanley theatre here while at college.

In 1918 he was called from his studies by the war and began training at the Artillery Central Officers Training School. After the armistice he was discharged, whereupon he took a position with the owners of a chain of theatres of which the Aurora is a part. At present he is advertising director for the circuit and manager of the Aurora. He is still very young, and is possessed of an interesting personality that augurs well for the future. His experimenting with the lights was a result of a desire for better showmanship, and the result should cause others to emulate him. The lighting effect he has originated is as simple as it is effective and is a step towards the stereoptican view so earnestly sought after by all exhibitors.

Equipment Operating Projection, Questions Answered

An Ideal Projection Room

THOSE Projectionists who are working and perspiring in "that box" type of projection room are always glad to read about the theatre where the room comes somewhere near to specifications. In the new Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., almost as much attention has been given to the projection room as any other part of the "most beautiful theatre in the world." We say "almost" because the architect placed the room in the usual but wrong place—up under the eaves. But the room itself can hardly be criticized except favorably.

The room is reached either through the balcony or by a long run-way which stretches from the rewind room through the "attic" of the theatre to the screen-run behind stage. Usually the former method of approach is used, since it is more accessible in every way.

In size, the Strand projection room stretches a point or two and exceeds the suggested dimensions even of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The rough sketch gives an idea of the general layout. The Machine Room is 12 ft. wide and 18 ft. long. For two projectors and a spot light these dimensions are seen to be adequate for all purposes. On one end of the machine room is the Rewind Room, and at the other end is the Grid Room. Opening off from the Machine Room is the Comfort Room with toilet facilities, lavatory and hot and cold water.

The Rewind Room in itself is almost as large as some "one machine projection rooms" we have seen, being 6 ft. wide and 12 ft. deep. Although there is little absolute need for so much space in the Grid Room, the dimensions of 7 x 12 ft. insure a cool room under all circumstances.

As the diagram shows there are four large windows in the back of the room. These windows have been darkened just enough to cut off the glare and at the same time allow light to come through to brighten the room. The ceilings in all of the rooms are 9 ft. in height.

Ventilation facilities are more than ample. Besides the windows which open out of an unobstructed area-way there are two motor driven exhaust fans, one in the center of the Machine Room and another in the Grid Room. These fans are similar in size, being 18 in. in diameter and driven by 1½ h. p. G-E motors.

The Machine Room is equipped with two special Simplex Projectors and one of the new Simplex, counter-balanced spot lamps. These devices, which are practically duplicates of these installed in the Newman Theatre in Kansas City, are provided with several innovations.

Although they had not been installed at the time the photograph was taken, the two projectors will eventually be equipped with the newly developed Simplex double opposed arc control. These arc controls will make it unnecessary for the men in charge to adjust carbons during an entire run, since the controllers automatically bring the carbons together strike the arc, and withdraws them the required distance, where they are held.

The throw is 198 ft. and the 20-ft. picture is secured by a 9½" e. f. motion picture objective. About 90 amperes d. c. flow across the arc uppers and 7-16" soft cored Silver-tip lowers.

Shelves are provided in the Grid Room for the rheostats for both projectors and spot lamps. At the present time the projectionist must walk from his machine to the grid room to make adjustments, but eventually it is probable that the control will be placed on the Machine Room wall between the two machines. This is as it should be, and as no e pense has been spared as yet to make the room perfect as present knowledge will allow, it is doub ful if this chance for improvement will be ove looked.

Besides the machine driven rewinder the rewin contains a work bench with a complete assortme of tools, a film storage cabinet, a set of shelves hun up out of the way and a look-out port. This port a wonderfully handy affair, as the man who hap pens to be rewinding or working at the bench i the rewinding room can keep tab on the progres of the picture as projected by the other projector i on duty. An intercommunicating phone connect with all other parts of the theatre.

Some Communications

R. L., Indiana: What equipment would yo advise for a well equipped projection room? Wher should the revolving shutter be located?

The following equipment would be in our projection room if we were to lay one out: Two standard projectors, motor driven, with lamp-house large enough to take care of the highest current I would ever be called upon to use, and with a scheme of lamp-house ventilation that would convey to the outer air 75% of the heat of the arc; there would be on hand at all times an extra machine head ready at a minute's notice to replace either of the others. There would be a spot-light for use when the manager wanted some special effect. We would have strong, well-made resistors, placed either in the top of the room or better still in a separate compartment outside the projection room proper. Of course, there would be an approved film case in which film not in use would be stored. This should have a patented cover which could not be held open. It should also have a round or slanting top so that the projectionist would not be mentally persuaded to leave the used reels on top instead of inside. There should be a small bench of metal on which the rewind devices could be placed. Personally we prefer the open rewind but where state or local laws demanded an enclosed rewind naturally we would prefer that type.

No doubt we would have a durable splicing machine with some sort of an illuminated box over which the frame lines could be perfectly matched. And above the bench in a neat holder would be a few—just a few—tools. Under the bench we would place a metal receptacle for film ends and clippings.

Ventilation is a vital necessity so there would be an exhaust fan of ample capacity which discharged into the open air. To prevent stale air being drawn from the auditorium through the light and look-out ports we would provide an inlet from the outside so much larger than the ports that the volume of fresh air would overtop the used air that might get in.

We would have a motor generator set of reputable make, if a converter of some sort were necessary. We would not use alternating current under any circumstances. It is a makeshift at best. We would have light weight chairs for the projectionists to rest their weary selves in along toward 10:30 at night after a hard day's work. Then there would be a simple change-over system so that the screen would never go "white."

The walls would be finished in some semigloss subdued color, the gloss to make it easy to clean them and the dull color for obvious reasons. The floor might be of hard surfaced concrete and dustless but there should be thick rubber mats on the working side of each machine.

Needless to say, we would want complete toilet facilities in or near the room. A man cannot rise to the occasion if he is forced to work all day with dirty hands and a parched throat.

So much for our room. Perhaps we would add some little details that would come to us as we equipped it but the above list includes the most important. Have you got them all in your room?

Gilbert Heatwole, of Clifton Forge, writes as follows:

Just a few lines from an old league member. Am enclosing slip filled out from Mr. Jacobs, S. Boston, Va. So you see I am still doing a little missionary work. Am still on the job and getting along fine. Mr. Jacobs wishes to become a N. A. M. L. member. He saw one of my labels on a film can and wrote me asking particulars of the League, so I sent him the pledge and slip, so he filled same out and I am sending it in hoping he will be accepted. He asked me in the letter what the M. P. News was, so I have written and told him, so please mail his membership card and button and also a sample copy of the News. And hope he will become subscriber. He has sure been in hard luck without it. In closing I wish you and the League best of luck.

Mr. Jacobs has wrote me about his equipment and probably we can get him to do so for the Proj. Dept. I wrote him asking what was the matter with the Virginia Boys in joining the League, but I see they are coming right to the front. I noticed two of my old friends' names on the Roll last week. Mr. Herring and Higgins from Harrisonburg. I was working there when I joined the League. Let us get together and make the League stronger yet. And I will do all I can to help. Best regards.

ANSWERS

Your friend's application has been received and passed. Many thanks for suggesting his name. The League is growing steadily and becoming stronger week by week.

Let us hope Mr. Jacobs writes the Projection Department a complete description of his equipment, just as he wrote it to you.

Change-Over System

Lee C. Fultz, Majestic Theatre, Paris, Ill., sends in a description of his equipment and his own method of change-over.

"As I have been a silent reader every week of the Motion Picture News, also a subscriber, I will let you know that I am still alive and on the job. Perhaps you and our brother operators would like to know a little about my equipment so I will try and tell you a little. I am using two Simplex machines motor driven, current for the arc coming from a Mercury Arc Rectifier. As the rectifier will only pull one arc at a time I used to make my change-overs by "stealing the arc". As I did not like this way of changing over, because sometimes I would have a white screen at the end of the reel before one arc would take the "juice" away from the other. I had the manager get a compensarc so that I could "pull" one arc with A C and the other with D C while changing over. So just before the end of each reel I switch from D C to A C then light the idle machine with D C ready to start. I use a light douser which makes a fade-out and fade-in. Please send me a new batch of N. A. M. L. stickers as I have been out for some time but neglected writing sooner. By the way I want to tell you a little joke about the N. A. M. L. which I heard here. I have a N. A. M. L. slide which I ran for some time and the people here thought it was an organization against the Union because it had an anti to it. But no, I hope to some day belong to the I. A. T. S. E. I noticed in one issue of the News a while back where someone suggested a r and smaller N. A. M. L. label for putting on reel bands. I think it is a good idea myself as labels now get torn by the reels where they pasted on the underneath side of the lids of film cans. Well I don't suppose you want to r any more of this "nonsense" so will let some else have the platform that is a better talker th I. Please excuse all mistakes as I am not m of a stenographer but will try to do better n time. Would like to hear what kind of equipm me of our brother projectionists have and w they are doing.

Reply: Some users of mercury arc sets will glad to hear of your scheme for "change-over Of course it will be necessary for him to convi his manager that the compensarc will give a bet show and thereby pay for itself. This would be a difficult task with a progressive manager we have an idea that some projectionists wou have a pretty hard time trying to put the id across.

That is a good one on the NAML. There are few persons who ought to know better but w seem never to have got the idea into their hea that the NAML. is not competitive with the I. If they would only argue the thing they cou prove it to themselves. The I. A. is doing a wo that could never be accomplished by an organiz tion similar to the League. On the other hand it doubtful if the far-seeing officials of the I. A. wou allow themselves to be diverted away from the main purposes to pursue the line of attack whi the N. A. M. L. has assumed. In fact, the tw organizations are exactly opposite in their wor The I. A. was formed principally to protect t man and his working conditions. The N. A. M. does not touch the man only insofar as he is t agency through which we hope to improve t quality of film. Could anything be more easi explained?

when we have exhausted the present supply of the large ones. It's a mighty expensive proposition to conduct a League of this sort, especially when the membership runs into 1,600. Probably there isn't a member but who would be surprised to know just what each member costs the NEWS over a year's time. Perhaps you can guess at the amount but be sure to guess high enough.

Never worry about your typewriting. At its worst it is many times better than handwriting and we're always glad to get pencilled letters, so there you are. Come again.

Some Causes of Film Destruction

STIRRED by letters that have appeared in the NEWS in weeks past on the reasons for the poor condition of film received by many houses, Raymond Stone of Huron, Ohio, comes into the discussion with some definite causes of the trouble.

This being my first letter to the NEWS I will make it short. I just want to say a word or so regarding the argument "City Man" vs. "Small Towner." This matter of punch-holes and like matter in films can't be blamed wholly on either side. I agree with some of the writers that it's not the City Man's fault. My reason for thinking so is:

1. He has an equipment with which he is able to put on a show and put it on right.

2. The projection room is manned by a fellow who is thoroughly experienced in that line and must be in order to hold such a job, while in a small town the projectors—I mean automatic oiling and ripping devices are in a run-down shape and see little repair, if any. The sprockets are all nice and sharp. The gears are jammed with vaseline so they rattle—in fact, anyway to get something that looks like a picture on the screen.

A brand new supposed-to-be "operator" every other week who doesn't care for anything but his payroll.

If some "Small Towner" could see an up-to-date, well equipped projection room and have a face to face talk with the man in charge of it he would get a somewhat different idea on the subject.

I lost mine while traveling around and haven't been able to secure another. (We are sending you another today. Ed.) I remember my number, which is 124, as I put it on all labels I have. I think it would be nice to have a new card about the size of a regular identification card so you can carry it around in your card case. Pass this idea on to the members and see what they think of it.

G. H., No. 423: Just a line to let you know I am in for the new N. A. M. L. buttons. Mark me for one please, if the plan goes through, whatever the cost.

A. M.: I have just been reading the letter from one of the members of the N. A. M. L., and I think that an N. A. M. L. journal would be a fine thing. It would make all of the members acquainted with each other. I will do all I can to help.

Motion Pictures of Arcs

Report 813 from the research laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company will be of interest to experimenters and those engaged in research as applied to the electric arc.

The problem before the laboratory was to find the best method by which motion pictures of an arc lamp in operation could be taken. The solution was as follows:

And as a fina touch of convenience, suitable toilet facilities witl running hot and cold water have been provided fo the comfort of the projectionists.

A "Universal" camera having an f 3.5 Zeis Tessar lens was carefully focused on the burning carbons at a distance of 30 inches. After considerable number of experimental exposures using different Wratten light filters with variou densities of neutral film, it was found that fo taking pictures at the normal rate a piece of Wratten "G" filter with a piece of neutral film of density 1.25 placed over the lens during exposure gave very good pictures of the incandescent carbon

Attachments to Profession Cinematographic Cameras

By Carl L. Gregory, F.R.P.S., and
G. J. Badgley

A Paper Read at the Philadelphia Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

IT is almost as certain as death and taxes that no professional motion picture studio photographer is entirely satisfied with any model of camera that is manufactured today.

The Cinematographer does not consider that he is ready to take a picture until he has camouflaged his camera with more attachments than a Ford owner can buy for his "tin lizzy." This is not so strange when we stop to consider that very few of the professional cameras available today are equipped with more than one or two of the many devices which are required to obtain the varied effects that are to be seen in practically every motion picture production. With the exception of the American built Bell and Howell camera, nearly all of the better makes of motion picture boxes are, or rather were, manufactured in Europe, for with the exception of a limited number of Pathe's, this production was entirely cut off by the great war. It would not be fair to pass on however, without referring to the fact that a great number of sporadic attempts have been made in this country to manufacture motion picture cameras, but for one reason or another, none of the attempts has been successful, if we accept as a criterion the verdict of a large percentage of professional cinematographers.

It is hardly fair to class a camera as being a professional studio camera unless it has held its ground day after day and month after month under the grinding routine of steady studio production. Such an arbitrary classification should not be regarded as detracting from the merits of certain types of cameras, which are yet in the process of evolution and have not as yet, for one reason or another, come into general use for studio production. A number of models of high merit have been exhibited, which would have been eagerly tried out in the studios, if a sufficient number of them had been placed on the market, so that they could have been given a fair trial. Doubtless, some of these excellent models, which have relapsed into a comatose condition during the restricted period of the war, will now be revived and receive a proper introduction in the Cinematographic world. It seems reasonable to prophecy that the Cine camera of the future will be sold with a number of standard attachments in much the same way as the sewing machine is sold with an equipment for producing all sorts of fancy frills, tucks, pleats and ruffles. In much the same way must the professional camera be provided with attachments for producing dissolved vignettes, fades, irises, etc. Foremost among these attachments is the one for producing dissolves. Formerly, all dissolving and fading was accomplished by means of the iris diaphragm. Producing a fade by means of the iris under certain conditions is very difficult, as very few iris diaphragms are constructed so that they will close completely.

In making a fade, it is necessary that the exposure be diminished from the maximum to zero in a uniform diminuendo; or, in producing what is styled a fade-in, commenced at zero and with a uniform crescendo developed to the maximum normal exposure. Under good lighting conditions, the arc movement from the normal exposure opening to that of a completed enclosed iris is extremely small; so that a gradual decrease through this small arc is exceedingly difficult to accomplish in a uniform manner, especially as it is almost always complicated by the fact that the iris will not close completely and a complete fade out can not be obtained. The general practice, where this complication arose, was to place the hand over the lens as soon as the iris was closed as far as it would go; thus ending it abruptly without accomplishing the final diminishing point. A dissolve, which is a fade-in superinposed upon a fade-out, would be farther complicated by the fact, in many cases, a scene which dissolved into another might be taken under poor lighting conditions and be succeeded by one taken in strong light, so that the arc of movement used in producing the diminuendo in one might cover several times the angle of the arc of cresendo in the other. This leads to the conclusion that the only method of obtaining a uniform dissolve would be to gradually decrease the exposure time by gradually overlapping the sector blade of the shutter as it revolves; thereby gradually decreasing the exposure. A number of excellent mechanical devices for advancing the sector blade of the shutter have been perfected. They are of two classes; the manually operated and the automatic. The manually operated is self-explanatory, as it is manipulated by the hand, while the camera is in operation. The automatic type is operated by the movement of the camera itself being brought into action at the required moment by throwing in a clutch driven from some part of the camera mechanism. With the manually operated dissolve, the fade may be of any desired length; whereas with the automatic, only a certain pre-determined length of fade may be produced.

In the Shustek camera, the advancement of the sector blade is accomplished by a differential gear.

In the Kronik Brothers' Camera two sector blades are advanced simultaneously from each side of the shutter opening by means of a pin passing through two curved slots in the sector blade, and a straight slot in the covering blade, this pin being actuated by a yoke which is moved in and out by a sliding sleeve on the shutter arbor. Only a very few of either of these types of cameras have been manufactured. The most common device for closing the sector blade is that of a spirally actuated sleeve upon the shutter spindle. In the Badgley shutter, which has been installed in dozens of Pathè and other makes of professional cameras, the sector blade is attached to a sleeve on the shutter arbor, which is hollow. A rod sliding in the hollow arbor carries a pin extending out through

In the Bell and Howell camera and in the Duplex printing machine a spirally actuated sleeve also closes the sector blade across the shutter opening in the manner just described except that the details of the mechanical design are somewhat different than those employed by Mr. Badgley.

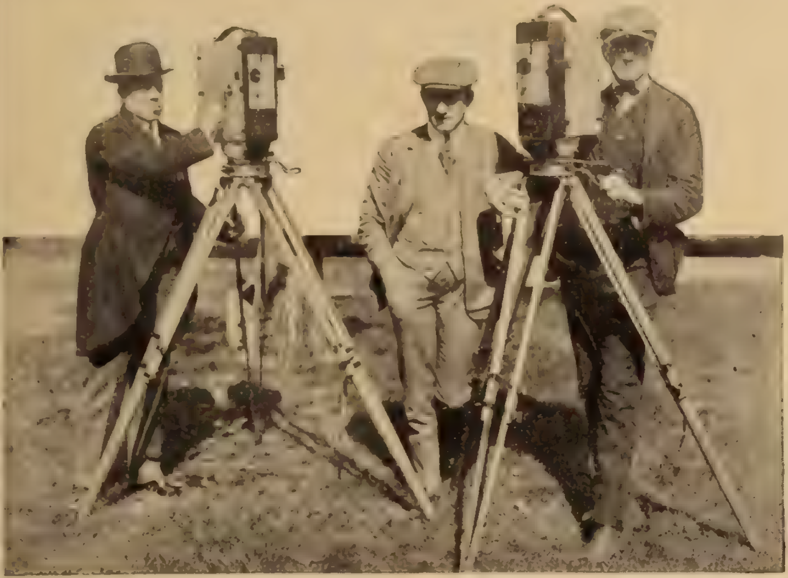
In all of the automatic installations so far mentioned, the length of dissolve is pre-determined, generally three or five feet, and can not be changed. An automatic shutter dissolve, in which the length of dissolve can be altered at will, would be a desirable feature in a professional camera, providing that it be not too complicated.

Mr. Carl Akeley has invented a shutter of this type, which can be set at practically any length up to ten feet, but has not yet brought it out. The demand for an adjustable automatic shutter dissolve does not seem to be very insistent, as in most of the exceptional cases where the standard automatic dissolve is not of the required length, the automatic mechanism is not used and the dissolve is manually operated to the desired length.

After considering the dissolving shutter as being the most important feature to embody in a cinematographic camera for professional use, there are a number of other features which are of so nearly of equal importance that we will not attempt to arrange them in order of their usefulness, b simply take them up one after the other as the occur to our mind.

Intimately concerned with the operation of th shutter, and in fact, all manipulation of the camer is the amount of film used. Most cameras, even o the cheapest variety, have some kind of crud counter for recording the film footage; but th word crude is used advisedly, as most of thes counters which are found installed in the camer when purchased, are of the crudest kind. It i often necessary in trick work and vision or doubl exposure to know the exact footage and even th exact frame at which a double is to commence o end; so that it is only by means of an accurat counter, or a lot of unnecessary counting and calibration by the operator himself, that he can interpose his trick work in the exact place in the film where it should go. There are a number of ver excellent revolution counters upon the market which count accurately backward or forward an which indicate in large plain figures their results that may be easily installed in a camera and in such a manner as to count either footage, crank turns, or frames, as may be desired. The counters manufactured by the Veeder Manufacturing Company of Hartford, Connecticut, may be taken as representative of the kind of instrument useful for this purpose. One of the double counters, in which one face gives the total and the other face a subtotal, the face of which may be readily set back to zero by means of a thumb nut, is excellent for our purpose. It would be a comparatively simple matter for the manufacturer to change one of these counters so that the unit wheel could be divided into sixteen parts and thereby record each individual frame, allowing the other numbers to record the footage. The Bell and Howell people have made a counter of this type by combining a wheel of their own divided into sixteen parts with a Veeder counter, but unfortunately, in attaching it to their camera, has rendered it worse than useless; first, by attaching it to the one turn spindle which prevents the use of the trick crank; second, in order to obtain a set-back feature, made it frictionally operated so that its record, on account of slippage, is more often inaccurate than correct.

The Eastman Company has inaugurated an innovation with their negative film, which to be of any use, practically necessitates the use of an accurate counter. This innovation consists of photographing on the perforation edge of every foot of negative film before shipping a consecutive footage number which is recorded on the box in which it is shipped so that we may have for example,—a roll of film four hundred feet long, upon the edge of which we have recorded the consecutive numbers from 437,000 to 437,400. If, then, we keep track of our scenes for the future information of the cutter and editor, it is necessary for us in exposing this film to keep an accurate footage record so that our recorded number for the scenes will exactly coincide with those given to the cutter for his information in making the first continuity and for keeping track of all of the scenes in the production throughout all of his operations with the same. If this system were followed out, a tremendous amount of labor would be saved in the cutting rooms, as it would not be necessary for the cutter to look through roll after roll of film to identify a certain scene, as he could merely refer to the assistant director's record and tell in an instant by looking at the record number on the edge of the film, whether he had the right piece of film or not. This system, is of course complicated by the high numbers required to avoid duplication, especially in studios where there are a number of directors working at the same time, as it would be possible for two different directors to



The Governor of New Jersey making pictures with a UNIVERSAL

IN the State of New Jersey they are using moving picture cameras for educational purposes in connection with State Hospitals, Prisons, Homes, Reformatories and various other institutions. Mr. Frank A. Krueger is the official motion picture photographer for the State and naturally uses a UNIVERSAL, as with this camera, he knows he gets perfect film all the time and every time.

Educators, Explorers, Army Photographers, in fact every operator who has to depend on his 'camera as a soldier depends on his gun uses a UNIVERSAL.

Read what Mr. Krueger says of his trusty machine and then write for illustrated book, catalogue and full particulars.

Gentlemen:-

I am forwarding to you under separate cover a photograph of Governor Runyon of New Jersey as a cameraman with one of your Universal Cameras. The figures in the picture are as follows.

On the (left) Gov. Runyon of New Jersey, (Centre) Director, Dr. L.B.Blan, Dep't. of Institutions and Agencies State of New Jersey, (Right) Official Cinematographer Frank A. Krueger of Dep't. of Institutions and Agencies.

The Department of Institutions and Agencies of the State of New Jersey as far as I know are the first in the country to adopt the motion picture campaign to show the public how New Jersey cares for it's wards which includes all the State Hospitals for the Insane, State Prison, Girls Home, Home for Boys, Womens Reformatory, and various other institutions.

What I want to say is this, that we have two Universal Cameras 400 ft. capacity, one automatic dissolve, and the other no dissolve, and they have given the very best of service both in X-Ray and Scientific Research work and in straight picture making. I have shot twenty thousand feet up to the present date and am pleased to say I have not lost one foot of film through camera trouble. In all my experience with the Universal Camera while in the Photo.Div. of the Signal Corps U.S.Army and my present position with the State of New Jersey it has never failed to deliver the goods for me.

I wish you would send me a catalogue or any other literature that you have on hand as there are several states in Union which are writing us for information as to our education campaign we are so ably conducting fostered by Commissioner Burdette G.Lewis and Dr.L.B.Blan of the Dep't. of Institution and Agencies while I am doing the photographic work.

Yours truly,
Frank A. Krueger

have rolls of films carrying the same consecutive footage numbers or even possibly, though not probably, according to the law of chances, that the same consecutive numbers might occur twice in the negative rolls used in the same production. A much more simple method which, as far as we know, has not yet been used, would be that of a secutive footage number impressed at the side of every frame throughout the negative, of which the assistant director would keep record as the scenes were taken, for the information of those in charge of all cutting operations.

While many of the devices of trick photography —so called—are frowned upon by the modern director, the striving after artistic effects has more greatly strained the resources of the photographer than any of the visioning back devices that were formerly the stock in trade of the old-time director. Dual roles are still employed to exploit the versatility of our stars and results which once were called tricked photography now masquerade under the more euphonious title of photographic effects. The modern, up-to-date photographer has probably more use for inside and outside matter than he did during the era of trick photography, but he now employs them with a delicacy and finesse unthought of a short period back. If he does double exposure now it must be so accurately done that there is no weave or shifting visible between the primary and secondary exposures. He goes on for beautiful cloud effects and color values, using color screen, vignetting devices, and panchromatic films. His exterior iris must be so adjustable that its last encircling dot in closing may vanish at any given point in the frame and with any desired degree of diffusion. He must be able to give soft focus effects, fading away into indefiniteness at the edges, and yet retaining in his principal objects at the centre of the film a sufficient degree of clarity to avoid over-stepping that hazy boundary between a pleasing softness and an out and out fuzzy-wuzzyness. For these effects, he requires inside and outside mattes, slotted lens hoods, round and square closing vignetting devices, with perhaps a half dozen irregular or odd shapes closing in odd geometrical forms in addition, to give him a pleasing variety from which to choose and, in addition have his camera so built that these devices may be attached and employed without unnecessary delay. In the employment of inside matters it is generally necessary that they come in as close proximity to the film as it is mechanically possible to place them without coming into actual contact with it. The inside matte, in contradistinction to the exterior matte, is employed where the lines of demarcation between the part matted out and the part photographed should be as sharply defined as possible. Where a double exposure joins two of these sharply defined lines of demarcation, the cutting of the mattes so that the two exposures may exactly coincide without over-lapping or leaving unexposed space between is a matter of extreme mechanical precision and the mattes themselves and the grooves in which they are held must be made with the greatest of care. Every operation connected with the use of inside mattes must be carried out with the greatest precision for the slightest movement of the camera will instantly reveal their use where two or more mattes are used in making a composite picture, because such movement will throw the parts of the composite image out of register. It is probably for this reason that camera men avoid as much as possible the use of interior mattes because they reveal with deadly accuracy even the slightest defects in camera manipulation.

There is also a use for interior mattes for diffused edge effects by using them in another groove or series of grooves at varying distances between the surface of the film and the lens, but such employment is seldom found as all of these sorts of effects may be obtained much more readily by the use of exterior mattes. An exterior matte is one, usually of larger size than an interior matte, placed in front of the lens at a distance which will give a diffused line of demarcation between the image photographed and that part which is closed off the matte. When two mattes are used in conju tion in producing one picture, they are so ployed that the diffused lines of demarcation tween the different exposures fuse into another and leave no betraying line to rev exactly where the picture has been split.
amount of this diffusion is determined by two f tors. The first factor is the distance from matte to the lens and the second factor is diaphragm opening, so that if double exposu are made under varying light conditions, the ca eraman is confronted with a problem in which has to equalize a number of different factors.
one exposure is taken in brighter light than other, he may place his second matte closer to lens to obtain the same degree of diffusion wit smaller diaphragm or he may equalize his expos by cutting down his shutter opening and place matte at the same distance from the lens as first in order to obtain the same degree of d fusion.

Sun Lights on New Basis

THE Sun Light Arc Corporation starts the N
Year with an announcement that will be intense interest to the trade. In the past the po erful arc lights of this firm have been delivered studios and producers on a strictly rental basis. B beginning with January 1, 1920, the lamps will supplied on any one of three bases according wish of the user. Mr. J. Justice Harmer, Pre dent of the Sun Light Corporation, explains t change by saying, "The reason for doing this is satisfy our customers and work with and in ha mony with our friends. Under the present ter of rental our friends have felt that they are pa
ing for something they will never own and ha urged us to change our methods of placing lam with them."

MUSIC

Musical Equipment

Filmusic Co. January New Issues

A GREAT deal of the success of perfect musical interpretation may be attributed to the Filmusic Co. of Los Angeles, California. The editor just received their January Bulletin and the new list consists of not only very interesting material, but in the estimation of the writer, also of compositions which are indispensable to theatres employing mechanical instruments.

The first number on the list is "The Dancer of Navarre," by Zamecnik, a bright intermezzo of neutral character, which can easily be developed into a light agitato.

Number two, "in a Chinese Tea Room," by Langey, is a melodious Chinese selection equally suitable for Japanese as well as oriental settings.

Number three, "A Little Song," by Erdody, is a beautiful full chord melody of sentimental and light dramatic character.

Number four, "Misterioso Dramatique," No. 54, by Borch. This number represents No. 54 of the famous Berg Incidental Series, which is most appropriate for tensive and mysterious settings.

Number five, "Romance," by Elliott, is a melodious composition of sentimental and pathetique character.

Number six, "One Sweet Day," by Zamecnik, is a beautiful and melodious song love theme of exceptional merits.

Number seven, "Love's Enchantment," by Varley, is a light melodious intermezzo of neutral character, a number which can be appropriately employed for a great many purposes.

Number eight, "Humoresque," by Dvorak, is an exceptionally fine arrangement of this standard classic, played as a duet by Eddie Horton, who always plays the melody with his right hand, and "Annie Laurie," with the "Swanee River" as a counter-melody, with his left hand.

Number nine, "Dramatic Agitate," by Borch, is another number extracted from the Berg Incidental Series. This fine dramatic composition is equally suitable for intensive dramatic situations—a sequel to Sol P. Levy's "Dramatic Recitative" No. 2.

Number ten, "Four Toons." This record consists of the choruses of four songs most appropriate for comedies.

Light Music

FOR ten consecutive years I have had charge of the greatest music house in the world. Approximately 25 per cent. of the orders received called for an assortment of "light music."

It was then my duty to select ten, fifteen or fifty numbers of such music. Very often the entire shipment was returned because in the estimation of the musician who ordered this music it was not what he desired.

What does "light music" mean? I am sure that the musician ordering such stuff has something in his mind. What is it? Is he thinking of certain scenes in pictures of certain stars?

For the benefit of all concerned I would like to see this question settled. In my estimation "light music" means nothing, and it may mean one hundred varieties.

The best way to definitely classify "light music" is to try and dedicate it to certain film stars.

For instance, Mary Miles Minter typifies, musically speaking, "light music," but not a 6/7 or 2/4 typical happy allegretto caprice or intermezzo.

This wonderful girl is always happy, but nevertheless no matter in what picture she appeared, she always had the power of adding a certain amount of pathos to her happiness, no matter how dramatic her part may be, strict dramatic music would be inappropriate.

Mary Miles Minter spreads happiness wherever she appears and still audiences always follow her with pathetic sentiment.

"Happy music" is hers, but an undertone of melody must come with it. "Pastel Menuet," by Paradias; "Budding Spring," by Platzman; "Intermezzo," by Huerter; "Flirty Flirts," by Levy; "Love's Enchantment," by Varley; "Prude by Luz, and many other numbers of a similar are Mary Miles Minter's numbers. They are numbers. They portray quiet, God-fearing h ness. They represent a combination of me and laughter.

Constance Talmadge, for instance, is ano happy character, but Mary Miles Minter m does not fit her. The sprinkling water foun with its beautiful rainbow colors are "Consta music," "light"—dignified frivolity, happy dren playing in the sunshine of a summer's m ing—light, capricious musical numbers such "Birds and Butterflies," by Veley; "Lovele by Levy; "Dancing Nymphs," by Braine; mance," by Nevin; "Capricious Annette," Borch; "Intermezzo-Picturesque," by Koz "In Flowerland," intermezzo, by Golden, many other numbers of this type are of the stance Talmadge character.

Society scenes require "light music." W Tentes are usually played for this purpose. L scenes, outdoor scenes and even barroom sce require "light music." But get the differe June Caprice, the nature girl, flirting with bi or several borroom girls love-eyeing with s miners. Both the above scenes also require "li music," but nevertheless they are distinctly dif ent. Juvenile pictures are also of a light charac so are two young bears playing with a cat. E Theda Bara and the emotional Nazimova so times appear in scenes of happiness.

This, again, requires another kind of light mu

There are a thousand and one kinds of sce portraying happiness. It would take a book analyze them all. The above are but several amples of what "light music" really means. very practical way to order "light music" wo be to always mention a certain number, demand an assortment of a similar type. This would fa itate matters, and would enable musicians to what they really require.

"Light music" means nothing and it may m a hundred varieties.

"If I am wrong, please tell me."

The magnificent lobby of the Capitol Theatre, New York

The largest organ in any theatre is in the largest theatre in the world

It is an Estey Organ

The CAPITOL THEATRE is the last word in theatre construction. As part of its wonderful equipment, it contains the finest pipe organ that could be made. It is an Estey.

You know the necessary part music plays in the enjoyment of pictures. Your pictures may not always be good, but your music can be. And good music repeatedly pulls the crowds to your box office. Remember the Estey plays jazz as easily as opera.

You can have an Estey Organ built to fit your theatre, whatever its size. One of our experts will come to you, wherever you are, and figure out your requirements.

And after your Estey is built in, you will be delighted with the inspection and upkeep service we maintain for you. The Estey Organ is on the job all the time.

Write the home office or nearest studio.

An Estey resident organ is the king of musical instruments for the home, yet it need cost little more than a first-class motor car.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Advance Reviews and Short Length Features Covered on this Page

"Sheriff Nell's Come Back"

(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

THERE has been a deal of imagination expended in this latest product from Hampton Del Ruth's Sunshine factory. And though the "chase" continues to be the motive behind most of the comedy releases of the Fox company and its contemporaries, it is the manner in which it is refurbished and made up-to-date which counts as the chief factor toward the success of the pieces. Hampton Del Ruth never believes in going over the same ground and he can be classified as an imaginative director. In "Sheriff Nell's Come-Back" he has employed the "chase" so that it never intrudes with its obviousness. His bag of tricks is constantly being supplemented with new ones.

The policemen, for example, are foiled in their attempt to catch the criminal, Silk Shirt Gus, because he has the presence of mind to have them hold hands in surrounding the bank and giving the captain a live wire to hold. So the current passes through them all and they dance and grip one another's hands and are unable to let go. The picture features plenty of fistic encounters, with Polly Moran employing strong-arm methods. She it is who works single-handed and gives the coppers a taste of Western punch. But try as she might to catch the bank robber, Silk Shirt Gus (alias Slim Summerville), he is always a lap ahead of her.

The finale brings them to the roofs of skyscrapers. The chase is on. The policemen tumble off, falling on electric light wires, and the smoke issues from the soles of their shoes as they attempt to walk upon them. A good point. Eventually Sheriff Nell lassoes Gus and everything is over. Space forbids going into the wealth of detail which is incorporated in this comedy. Suffice to say that it keeps moving, turning from one ludicrous situation to another in its flight. Exits and entrances figure largely in the scheme. Mistaken identity has its inning. The ensemble? Indeed, the girls come into the picture and caper about, but only for a brief instant. The stunts are developing too fast to pay much attention to them.—LAURENCE REID.

"Excess Baggage"

(Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven-Goldwyn—Two Reels)

THE mother-in-law, in fact, two of them, is used as the basic idea contained in this two reeler starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, with nothing new being offered in the way of business or in the picture's development. It contains an occasional laugh, but they are far between and none of them can be counted on as sure-fire. The cast, if we are to eliminate four "kiddies" in the first part, consists of the co-stars and their respective mothers-in-law, both of whom have come for a visit. There is a lot of running in and out of rooms, carting furniture around after Mr. and Mrs. De Haven get through quarreling over talking machine records, which, by the way, advertises "Victor" very nicely and seems to have no other excuse for its existence. Along toward the last of the feature both mothers-in-law are framed into wishing themselves on some one else and the hosts are happy again. The point which the picture attempts to prove is that the mothers-in-law in pairs should stay at home and that singly they aren't to be received with joyful acclaim. Everybody works hard to be amusing without the ghost of a chance with the material provided. De Haven does a good "flop" down stairs and the kiddies are cute, which pretty nearly sums up the entertaining virtues of the picture. It is, however, perfectly clean, and if your audience is inclined to disapprove of the "slapstick" stuff it will slide by without causing any great tirade.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Grocery Clerk"

(Vitagraph-Larry Semon—Two Reels)

UNLESS Larry Semon originated this latest Vitagraph comedy, it is a shame to pay him any great amount of that two million or so salary, for a large share of the amusement the production is bound to furnish any audience is contained in the new and novel business and stunts divised by some genius.

Semon is all right in the part of the chief clerk in a small town grocery store, but he is not provided with a starring role, strictly speaking, and only contributes his share, a modest one, too, in what to us looks like one of the funniest slap stick releases of the season.

The best actor in the bunch is one which doesn't draw a salary, a nice "fuzzy" haired cat, who is tricked into doing several hundred feet of sure-fire stuff. Molasses, a cheese so strong that it "walks," the flour barrel, soot from the stove pipe, gasoline and about all the articles on sale at a country general store come in somewhere for a hearty laugh. All of the uses made of these articles aren't exactly new, but that is hardly to be expected to-day, when brains have been racked for something different so long and often without even partial success.

Especially clever are some scenes about several derricks in which a rope figures in the guise of a trapese swing. This is good for any house in any town. Released during the months that some times happen along, barren of any good comedies, it would be the talk of the town. Just now it bucks up against a number of more than ordinarily good slap stick productions and may therefore not create the stir it should.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Daredevil Jack"

(First Two Episodes of Pathe Serial Starring Jack Dempsey)

THE first two episodes of the much heralded serial "Daredevil Jack" starring Jack Dempsey has been shown us and like the star's good right arm, it carries the punch. Although there are many thrilling and exciting scenes running through these episodes which tense the mind and keep up the interest, there is another very important factor, the story, which unfolds very well and is easily understood.

But Jack Dempsey is the attraction and we wondered what his appearance would be on the screen and how he would act. To give an honest criticism we must say that in appearance he screens as well as any of our well-known leading men and possesses enough personal magnetism, given to him no doubt by the confidence which is always seen in a champion's face, to attract and draw any member of any audience where this picture may be seen. As an actor he played his part without the least semblance of nervousness and self-consciousness.

The photography and direction are up to standard and the cast, which is many times above the average, is composed of such capable players as Merschel Mayall, Albert Cody, Frederick Starr and Josie Sedwick.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Call Loan"

(O. Henry Subject—Two Reels—Vitagraph)

VITAGRAPH has come forward again as the sponsor of O. Henry, taking this time one of his Southwestern stories, "The Call Loan." It is a very interesting number, any way you look at it, and the producers deserve credit for establishing the author's fine humanity and his remarkable verisimilitude. Still they have been humanizing O. Henry for a long enough time to understand for them that they have not attempted to enlarge how to present him on the screen. Let it be said upon his philosophy or his technique. In presenting "The Call Loan," Vitagraph has made the story as vital and as vivid as it appears between the covers of the book.

The picture is told in a straightforward way, building easily and surely to its climax, and above all, visualizing the surprise ending—an ending which is incorporated in every O. Henry story. It is a simple plot, one which relates an incident in the lives of three cowboys. One of them has prospered with the times and has become president of a bank. He makes a loan to his "buddy" without any indorsement or security—a loan of ten thousand dollars. And the pal immediately loans it to his brother for business reasons. Comes to the bank an examiner, who informs the president that unless the loan is called in by the succeeding noon he will be prosecuted. The other banker in the town is unable to help him out of his difficulty, since he is sending his surplus on the midnight train to a distant city.

The "buddy" learns of this plan and starts to hold up the express to make good his loan, but the president frustrates the scheme. He would prefer to hit the trail to the cattle country rather than approve of any such methods to cover the loan. The disconsolate men journey back to the home and find the brother has returned with the loan and a rich surplus in the bargain. The author's humorous twist comes when the two pals announce that they were down to the station to meet him, but didn't see him get off the train.—LAWRENCE Reid.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as a index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who ha shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publisha final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received or each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at th consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actu comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this depar ment will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 4, 1919.

"THE RIGHT OF WAY"

(METRO)

Rich Photoplay Made from This Famous Story

SIR GILBERT PARKER'S celebrated story of a man's regeneration and his acceptance of God through the influence of romance has come to the screen with all of its fine humanity, its spiritual uplift, its vivid spark of drama, its appealing romance, and, above all, its powerful characterization. Metro in visualizing "The Right of Way" has made a picture which is as inspiring as it is interesting. It is a subject with a message, but so deftly interwoven is the thought with the dramatic contents that the play reaches the apex of entertainment. The story is told through characterization, supplemented, however, through dramatic scenes of powerful sequences.

From the time that Charley Steele, the supercilious, drunken lawyer, saves the life of Jo Portugais through the birlliancy of his oratory in a Montreal courtroom, down through the day that he is rescued by the latter and taken to a distant village, where he finds aith in God and in himself through the influence of a beautiful love, the story fascinates one because of its straightforward drama ind its convincing characterization. Every one who has read the book (and who hasn't?) will find in this second reading a new nspiration. The adaptation is faithful to the original and the salient points are brought forward with full emphasis laid upon their dramatic values.

The director has embellished it with human touches and picuresque backgrounds. Indeed one is transported to one's own coneption of the locale—so truthful are the details and the incidents. Bert Lytell has been intrusted with the difficult task of humanizing Charley Steele. And he plays the character with dignity and poise ind creditable authority. If he fails to reveal a cynical touch that s because it cannot be conveyed through pantomime. Leatrice Joy s wistful and appealing as Rosalie, the girl who effected his regeneration. Gibson Gowland gives a highly colorful character sketch as Portugais. "The Right of Way" is vital and vivid and aithful. The tragic climax does not rob it of its poetry.—Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

"Not guilty, your honor!" Though the rosecution's case against Jo Portugais for urder had seemed inexorable, the skill of s lawyer, Charley Steele, won the jury to is astounding verdict. The acquitted man ept up to Steel to thank him, but the latr snapped out: "Out of my sight, you're guilty as hell." Then the lawyer dropped mpletely out of sight. He was the victim a drunken brawl and he was rescued by e very man he had condemned. Jo nursed m back to health and strength, although emory of his past life had been blotted it. Charley couldn't accept God, because had never been shown a sign from eaven. Then one day he found faith—und it through the kind ministrations of osalie. Between them had sprung up a autiful love. How the climax is reached told in a series of highly dramatic scenes scenes punctuated with romance and thrills d atmosphere. A truly remarkable story ade into a truly remarkable picture. See ert Lytell in the picturization of Sir Gilrt Parker''s celebrated novel, "The Right Way."

CATCH LINES

"Get out of my sight, you're as guilty as hell!" With these words Charley Steele dismissed the man whose life he saved. But Jo Portugais showed his gratitude. How? See "The Right of Way."

Don't miss "The Right of Way," the picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel of the same name. A picture of great dramatic strength—a picture of heart appeal—a picture of undying faith and devotion. The best picture of the year.

"Show me a sign from Heaven—give me real proof of your God!" Charley Steele hurled this challenge and it was accepted. See "The Right of Way." Millions have read the book—millions will want to see this striking picture.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A photoplay made from Sir Gilbert Parker's famous story, "The Right of Way," will be presented at the ——— theatre beginning ———, with Bert Lytell as the star. This novel has reached enormous popularity, it having been read by millions. And its success may be said to have resulted from its strong dramatic flavor, its rich vitality, its remarkable characterization, and its profound message. And it offers also a magnificent romance. It presents a story of modern Canadian life, the narrative of the great romance of Charley Steele, the brilliant lawyer, irresistible in his personal charm, dissolute and unprincipled, uncannily skilful in his profession—at once the pride and despair of Montreal. How his masterful personality, his craving for drink, brought him into the lives of two women, different entirely save that both were beautiful, constitutes one of the really big love stories of modern times.

Charley Steele lost his identity in a drunken brawl and eventually found himself in a little village on the St. Lawrence River. There it was that he found faith in himself

"RESPECTABLE BY PROXY"

(BLACKTON-PATHE)

Artistic Production and Good Interpretation Lift Story

J. STUART BLACKTON'S co-stars, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, have in "Respectable By Proxy," a picture which is perhaps the best thing they have ever done. The reason may be found in the consistent and vivid characterization which the author has provided them. It is a story which does not exact much sympathy from the spectator, but on the other hand one does not want to take it too seriously, since it may be defined as a spirited comedy. There may be some who will classify it as drama, but as its humorous points outweigh its heavy matter, it strikes us that it belongs to the first classification.

"Respectable By Proxy" presents a rather quaint romance of a young man who is intrigued into marriage with an adventuress. The author conveniently arranges his plot so that the hero is lifted out of his difficulty. The "Proxy" of the title comes in when a friend of the adventuress offers to take her place as the bride when the young man is reported dead. Eventually he returns very much alive and falls in love with the heroine when he finds that she is not only youthful and attractive, but has saved him his inheritance.

The picture is obvious at times, but it keeps moving with plenty of spontaneity. Technically it is flawless, the pictorial side having been given good attention by the director. The atmosphere is entirely suggestive of its locale—the South. The story carries a fairly original twist on the masquerading identity theme and the clever touches bring out the highlights. The stars enact their roles with plenty of spirit and charm and they are supported by a competent cast that includes Eulalie Jensen in a character part. The comedy points are emphasized by two Southern mammies.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Respectable By Proxy" is the name of the feature which will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon in the leading roles. This is a J. Stuart Blackton production, the picture having been adapted by Stanley Olmsted from Florence Myott's story. The co-stars have had a number of attractive features in the past but it is said of their present production that it eclipses any of the previous releases in its points of interest—points which are as rich in their dramatic as in their comedy values. The story concerns a case of switched identity. John Stanley Hale, the character interpreted by Mr. Gordon, is intrigued into marriage with Elizabeth Roddard, an adventuress. A year passes by and the young husband is reported dead.

The bride has a friend in Betty Blair, who is destitute and in poor health. In a spirit of generosity, Elizabeth offers her the wedding ring and marriage license and advises her to claim the husband's estate and thereby acquire a home as well as a share of the Southerner's fortune. And Betty consents to the plan. In the meantime some scheming relatives attempt to annex the property but are frustrated by the girl. Just when success promises to crown their efforts the husband turns up very much alive. And when he learns how Betty has protected his interests he falls in love with her and she finds that she has lost her heart as well. She also learns that she has a right to become his bride after all. A competent cast supports the stars.

CATCH LINES

Nor would you like to be married and find after a year spent away from home—a year in which you were supposed to be dead, that another woman had taken the place of your bride! What would you do? See how this question is answered in "Respectable by Proxy."

He returned from the grave to find that another woman, a total stranger to him, had become his bride. How did he meet the situation? See "Respectable by Proxy," a Blackton production.

She wore a wedding ring and possessed the marriage license, yet she wasn't married to him. She was a bride by proxy. What happened? See "Respectable by Proxy," with Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon.

PROGRAM READER

In "Respectable by Proxy," which comes to this theatre next ——— there is presented a unique story of masquerading identity. A young man is intrigued into marriage by an adventuress. Circumstances take him away from her and he is reported dead. In a desire to help her life-long friend to overcome her poverty, the bride gladly exchanges places with her. The masquerader takes the wedding ring and the marriage license and possessing a high sense of honor, she fights to keep the dead man's estate from certain scheming relatives. Then, one fine day, the husband returns home, very much alive. How he accepts the situation, how he proceeds to fall in love with the charming masquerader when he notices her appealing charm and discovers her honesty, and how the "bride" reciprocated his affection, are events which bring an effective climax to a spirited and wholesome comedy drama. The picture is sure to please you. It presents Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, two of the most popular stars on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this feature as a J. Stuart Blackton production. His name is synonymous with artistic pictures and his latest is no exception to the general rule. You might detail the plot up to a certain point, featuring it as a comedy drama with an interesting line of action. Bring out the stars and tell that they are making a big mark in the screen world. Emphasize also the production angle. Mr. Blackton is always sure of producing artistic pictures. Tell that the story concerns a young Southerner who is involved in strange domestic difficulties. For the benefit of your feminine patronage exploit Miss Breamer's costumes. Use catch lines. In fact, they would be good for newspaper pointers and you can word them to arouse curiosity. We have written some with that object in mind.

and God. He asked for a sign from heaven and found it. But just as he was about to be rewarded with the love of a beautiful girl fate took a hand and Charley Steele belonged to the ages. The picture carries for its highlights a courtroom scene and leads up to striking situations. In fact the feature builds from one strong dramatic scene to another. Mr. Lytell gives a remarkable characterization of Steele and plays it with considerable depth and shading. No little credit belongs to the supporting cast, that includes Leatrice Joy and Gibson Gowland. The picture is handsomely staged and correct as to details.

"DOUBLE SPEED"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Undue Use of Coincidence, But Still Highly Entertaining

THE scenarioist has resorted to the extreme in coincidence in this modern Cindarella story, and his plot is painfully convenient and full of holes as to its logic, but nevertheless the picture should register as highly entertaining with any audience.

The reason for this apparent paradox is that there has been provided a wealth of incident in the various sequences and cleverly written titles are used with telling effect. Also the story keeps moving at all times. Frequently the production reaches a farcial tempo, but this does not detract from it owing to the fact that it is intended only as entertainment, and the action is not forced.

Wally Reid has a typical role in which he appears to most excellent advantage and his support is of the best. Wanda Hawley is the girl and Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall are among the principals. Much credit is due Mr. Marshall for getting some good comedy from a situation which a less talented actor probably would have missed.

The story told is simple. A young New Yorker driving his car to Los Angeles is robbed by tramps of all his belongings except his watch and including his car. Arriving at his destination, through the aid of a passing traveler in a Ford car, he is turned down by the bank which was to furnish him funds. The bankers daughter buys his car from a dealer, Wally hires out as chauffeur to the girl and finally marries her incognito. There are some trimmings, of course, like being accused of stealing his own automobile, murdering himself and posing as a crook, but everything is explained in the end.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Pawnbroker	Guy Oliver

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wally Reid, premier screen juvenile and star of a hundred entertaining pictures, comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— day engagement, beginning ———, in his latest comedy success, "Double Speed," a modern Cinderella story which has pep, many laughs, a delightful romance and all the speed of its title.

The plot concerns a young New Yorker who starts on a motoring tour to Los Angeles, and while on the way is robbed of his car and most of his other belongings. He finally arrives at his destination, but after being unable to identify himself at a bank which was to furnish him funds, finally hires out as a chauffeur to the bank president's daughter, who has bought his car. Besides getting himself accused of stealing his own automobile, murdering himself and being induced to impersonate himself, he marries the banker's daughter incognito. It is a real American picture, with a real American hero and heroine too, Wanda Hawley, and it will be received with delight by American audiences. For the Cinderella part we mentioned see the picture. Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall are among the supporting players.

PROGRAM READER

"Double Speed" is the title of Wally Reid's latest comedy offering, in which he appears as "Speed" Carr, who can drive a car so well that he not only lands what he calls a "nifty" job being chauffeur to the girl he has fallen in love with, but succeeds in outdistancing pursuing officers long enough to be married in the automobile, driving with one hand and slipping the ring on the bride's finger with the other. It is a "double speed" comedy with the star in a great role full of real laughs and possesses much that is amusing and entertaining. Wanda Hawley is Wally's leading woman, Theodore Roberts is his uncle, and Tully Marshall is Wanda's father. The rest of the cast is just as good. Sam Wood directed from a story by J. Stewart Woodhouse adapted by Clara G. Kennedy. You can take a look at Broadway, New York ,at night in this, and also inspect Broadway, Los Angeles, in the day time, besides being entertained by one of the most original and amusing pictures of the year.

SUGGESTIONS

This is largely an automobile story and can be exploited in novel ways. Suppose you were to tie up with automobile dealers in window displays. A Ford about 1914 model figures in the picture. Get a car of this description with a woman driving, a sort of a "Rube" in the other front seat, a solemn looking girl and a young chap dressed in working clothes in the back seat. On the radiator of the car put a cloth sign with "Los Angeles or Bust" painted roughly on the cloth. Drive this about the street as a teaser. You have in this outfit an exact scene from the picture. Get an automobile dealer to go out with a roadster with the sign "Speed Carr's car" on it. Use this also as a teaser. The production is also a good subject for a newspaper "teaser" campaign.

Wally Reid, whose latest picture is "Double Speed," a Paramount-Artcraft release

You ought to be able to get on the front page with a news story on the Ford car stunt, providing you care to let your "crew" give out the story that they are on the way to Los Angeles.

A window display with a gents' furnishing goods house could be arranged on pajamas.. Place a card on the pajamas reading "Speed Carr was left stranded in the middle of the desert in a pair of pajamas no better than these."

CATCH LINES

Just because he slept the sleep of the just he found himself in the middle of the desert clad in pajamas and minus even shoes. But he finished his journey and found a romance which was worth undergoing some privations.

What would you do if you saw a girl drivilng a car which had been stolen from you? Have her arrested? "Speed" Carr didn't. He married her after hiring out as a chauffeur to drive his own machine.

"WATER, WATER, EVERYWHERE"

(GOLDWYN)

Will Rogers Makes This Picture Worth While

"WATER, WATER EVERYWHERE" is quite an ordinary picture, but the inimitable Will Rogers makes it enjoyable through his magnetic personality and his histrionic talent. Its immediate forerunner, "Jubilo," was such a clever comedy-drama that anything following it would have to stand the test of comparison. And that is where the present feature suffers. It has followed too closely upon the other. "Water, Water Everywhere" gets off to an excellent start, presenting the star in a quaint comedy role, and scoring its points because of its humorous touches. But along about the middle the idea spending itself, the director has dragged in a melodramatic situation which somehow robs it of its spirit and spontaneity.

The story offers a plea for prohibition and another for liquor. By remaining neutral the author has not involved himself as an advocate of either party—the wets or the drys. It is Will Rogers, who lifts the picture above the commonplace. Here is one actor who does not need subtitles to convey his moods and expressions. His pantomime is easily understood. He is always human. It is the little touches and fine shadings that make Rogers' performance so noteworthy. The flicker of an eyelid, a twitching of the lips, the droop of the head, a shy glance aside provokes a gale of laughter or a lump in the throat. His blending of pathos and humor is that rare art that is closely akin to nature. He presents a new side here—his horsemanship.

The picture is quite extravagant in its idea, both the comedy points and the dramatic being quite exaggerated. But you forget its weakness until you summarize it afterward, so easily does the star ingratiate himself. The picture is well staged and the remaining characters are ably interpreted.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Will Rogers, the Goldwyn star, will come to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest comedy-drama entitled "Water, Water Everywhere." This is a wholesome story of a self-sacrificing, big-hearted, lovable cowboy who foregoes his love for a girl in order that she may marry the man of her heart. The photoplay is a picturization of William R. Lighton's "Billy Fortune" stories with Mr. Rogers portraying the role of Billy Fortune. He is devoted to Hope Beecher, the daughter of a pioneer, but she considers him more as a pal, and is greatly interested in Ben Morgan, the town doctor, who has let whiskey get the best of him. The humorous background of the story centers about the attempts of a temperance society to banish liquor from the town.

In the course of the tale, the town saloon becomes a soda water parlor and the men stay away from their homes because of the attractive girls who have been imported to dispense the drinks. In the meantime Ben has proposed to Hope without success. There is an explosion in a mine nearby and Billy informs the doctor that his chance has come to prove himself a man. And the latter saves the lives of many workers and redeems himself in the eyes of Hope. We next see Billy saving the life of Hope's sister, who has been intrigued by a hypocritical prohibitionist. And when he finds that he has made a man of Morgan and that the latter is betrothed to Hope he takes her father's advice to look elsewhere for a bride—"that there's as good fish in the sea as have ever been caught." The picture abounds in scenes of quaint humor, but underlying it is a sweet and appealing story of renunciation and self-sacrifice. And it carries a fine humanity. Mr. Rogers again displays his remarkable art, both as a comedian and as a dramatic actor. Clarence Badger's direction is praiseworthy throughout.

CATCH LINES

See "Water, Water Everywhere," a story of a man's fight against the craving of liquor, the story of a friend's sacrifice. A picture of quaint humor and wholesome philosophy.

He couldn't win the girl of his heart so he accepted his friend's advice to look elsewhere. "There is as good fish in the sea as have ever been caught." See the sterling actor, Will Rogers, in "Water, Water Everywhere."

"Good Old Bill Rogers" as he appears in his latest Goldwyn picture, "Water, Water Everywhere"

They dispensed with liquor and substituted soda water. But the men refused to come home. Was prohibition defeated? See "Water, Water Everywhere," with Will Rogers. A picture which will bring a smile to your eye and a sob to your throat.

PROGRAM READER

Will Rogers, the inimitable star, will appear at this theatre next ——— in his latest Goldwyn comedy drama entitled, "Water, Water Everywhere." Here is a picture which is calculated to entertain every type of picture-goer. If one is looking for quaint comedy—one will find it in rich expression. If one is looking for dramatic incident—well, one will find that, too, in generous abundance. The star enacts the part of a cowboy who defeats the prohibition forces by substituting one evil for the other. He installs a soda water fountain in the Hell's Bells saloon and a flock of pretty girls as attendants are sufficient to keep the husbands away from the fireside. But underneath its comedy strokes is a sweet and powerful story of renunciation and self-sacrifice. You look upon a man who gives up the girl he loves in order that she may marry the man of her heart.

SUGGESTIONS

Inasmuch as this star's pictures are going like wildfire throughout the country you don't need to spend a great deal of money

"A high class mystery story with thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture to average business." "One of the best detective stories ever shown on the screen. Photography and settings extra good, and too much cannot be said in favor of direction. Business not up to standard due to name of production, although business increased throughout week." "This is a very good production. My patrons were pleased and it did big business for four days."

THIEVES (FOX) GLADYS BROCKWELL (DEC. 7)........................NOV. 8
"Gladys Brockwell stars in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"They liked the star, Gladys Brockwell, here and this production was the type that seemed to fit her. I played it with a Sunshine Comedy, 'School House Scandal,' and it certainly was a crackerjack program. Extra big business one day to big business two days." "Good production of old crook theme but star appeared to be rather weak. Poor business."

"THE LUCK OF GERALDINE LAIRD"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Has Some Good Points Which Should Interest

BESSIE BARRISCALE has given us a good average program feature in "The Luck of Geraldine Laird." Although the theme of the story is not a new one and has its weak points, here is enough body to it to hold and excite the emotions of picture atrons, as the writer had occasion to observe when he viewed this roduction at one of the popular Broadway houses.

Miss Barriscale acted with her usual vivaciousness and introduced ier "specialties" in the theatre scenes with a charm and grace that vas very pleasing.

A young married woman, home loving and a mother of two chillren, unconsciously neglects her husband and is unresponsive to his iterary ambitions. When her husband meets the "other" woman, vho promises to further his aims, he leaves his wife to pursue his iterary career in the metropolis.

The latter follows him, discovers that she has "stage talent," wins uccess behind the footlights, and is reunited to her husband, who ias failed in his aspirations.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale in "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" her latest production for Robertson-Cole will appear at the ——— heatre on ——— of next ———.

Miss Barriscale is seen in a role that emphasizes the fact that she is one of the inest emotional actresses on the screen.

The play is a film version of Kathleen Norris' story which appeared serially in one of the leading publications and proved one of the most popular stories of the year.

As Geraldine Laird, Miss Barriscale porrays a young married woman who is home oving and also a loving mother of two hildren. But unconsciously she neglects ier husband and is only partial to his "pet lesire" that of becoming a playright. The nevitable happens, however, when he meets a woman of the world who promises to urther his aims. She persuades him to go o New York where fame may await him. Nevertheless, he is undecided, until an unortunate occurrence happens which turns he tide. In calling at his office to say goodbye previous to her return to New York, the vampire is discovered by the anxious wife. A scene follows in which the husband being unable to give a satisfactory explanation (beause "the woman" fearing his wife's enrance has taken advantage of the situation nd hidden herself in another room), leaves his wife and goes to the metropolis. Geraldine follows and because of a latent alent which she has for the stage, wins uccess behind the footlights.

In the meantime her husband has been unuccessful in his attempts to accomplish his ims. Discouraged, he betakes himself to he theatre where he is bewildered on seeing his wife in the cast and as they say in stage parlance "making the hit of the show."

After an unsuccessful attempt to meet her, liscouragement takes hold of him. He is about to leave town, when he is met by his wife and children, to be re-united to her in he city where he had sought vainly for happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

There are many points in exploiting a eature of this kind which ought to arouse he exhibitor's interest. It is one of Robrtson's Cole's latest features with a good tar who has a large following in many parts of the country. It has also a good story which ought to appeal to the picture going public and the star, Bessie Barriscale, with spirit that is sure, we might say to arouse he emotons of any audience. And she is also supported by a strong cast among whom re such well known screen favorites as Niles Welch, William Mong and Dorcas Matthews.

The play is a screen version of Kathleen Norris' story which appeared serially in one of the leading publications and proved one of the most popular stories of the year.

As Geraldine Laird, Miss Barriscale portrays a young married woman, essentially home loving and a mother of two children, who unconsciously neglects her husband and is unresponsive to his literary ambitions.

The inevitable happens when her husband, Dean Laird, meets a brilliant young woman of the world who can further his ambitions and Laird leaves his wife to pursue his literary career in the metropolis.

The latter follows him, discovers that she has "stage talent," wins success behind the footlights, and is re-united to her husband who has failed in his aspirations.

in exploiting them. Will Rogers has reached the peak of popularity and he is always sure of a full house. He has a rich story here—one you can feature as a comedy drama. Bring out that it is a story of a man's fight against a craving for liquor, the story of a friend's sacrifice for the thing he held dearest in life. And exploit the comedy. Use catch lines plentifully and get hold of some of the star's witticisms which are published. Use them. Run stills of the scenes.

"JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR"

(REALART)

Hectic Melodrama Fails to Hit Bull's-Eye of Truth

IMAGINATION has not been a governing factor in Mary Miles Minter's latest production, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor." Having not read Grace Miller White's book, from which the adaptation is made, we are not in a position to state how closely it follows the original, but it looks to us that either the author has been unduly theatrical or else the director has not used his imagination. The picture takes a long time in getting started, due principally to establishing a wealth of characters. And they are brought forward in four different sequences.

Mr. Taylor has wasted an enormous amount of good and inoffensive film by having his players go through scene after scene to establish relations and conditions that could have been shown in a few episodes with a few well chosen subtitles. And speaking of subtitles, many of these are crude and bewildering, with the result that thea ction is often hindered. There is too much concentrated effort expended in showing every little incident in the relations of the characters. The picture is hectic melodrama with a vengeance and it capitalizes as its dominant idea the theme of happiness. Yet its thought is completely subordinated by a prominent display of brutality and lust.

There is no central character in the accepted sense since the other figures seem quite as important as Judy. The plot becomes involved so that every melodramatic ingredient is utilized. And when the story is finished one cannot say that truth is a vital factor. Weird touches are discernible throughout the action. Coincidences and conveniences are worked overtime. One can ask a deal of perplexing questions concerning the development of the picture. Miss Minter succeeds in making herself appealing in the title role, but hectic melodrama is not her forte. Theodore Roberts stands out in a character study.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Miles Minter, the popular and charming Realart star, represents one of the finest types of womanhood in her newest picture, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," which will be shown at the ——— theatre, beginning ———. The picture is an adaptation of Grace Miller White's appealing human interest story of the same name, and it presents Miss Minter as Judy, a courageous little country girl, whose wonderful character, determination and desire to help those imposed upon, aids her to overcome all obstacles. With the fury of a tigress defending her young, Judy jumps at Grandpop Ketchel and Jim Shuckles to protect her little cousin, Denny, from their incessant brutality. She carries her troubles to the Lady of the Roses who lives in the haunted house. The Lady teaches the girl the power of faith and the wonder work of love—and in her little heart she resolves to win over with love her cruel grandfather.

Judy falls in love with Teddy Kingsland, the grandson of the Governor of the State, and after a series of dramatic complications they find romantic expression together. The girl learns eventually that the Lady of the Roses is her mother and the story ends happily. "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" is a striking picture because of its intense human interest and because it capitalizes youth, and love, and faith. The director, William Desmond Taylor, has developed the story so that its vitality and humanity are ever in the foreground. Miss Minter is afforded every opportunity to display her gifted ability in this widely read story. She is at home in every one of the many scenes. The star is supported by a cast of well known players—a cast that includes Herbert Standing, Charles Meredith and George Periolat.

CATCH LINES

Grace Miller White's famous story, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," has been adapted to the screen for a Realart picture with Mary Miles Minter as the star. You will be thrilled by his wonderful tale of little Judy.

For a story full of human interest that will pull at your heart strings, that will make you sigh and sob, laugh and cry, see Mary Miles Minter in "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," an adaptation of Grace Miller White's charming novel.

Her philosophy was, "No matter how much it hurts, keep on loving." See Mary Miles Minter as Judy, the girl who smiled and chuckled when the tears were in her eyes and the sobs in her throat.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Miles Minter appears as a quaint but charming little country girl in her newest Realart picture, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," an adaptation of Grace Muller White's widely read story of the same name, which will come to this theatre in the very near future. The star's many admirers will be glad to know that she has a most congenial role in Judy. In fact it is one of the most wholesome characters that has ever been drawn. Miss Minter admirably conveys all the qualities of loyalty, faith and unselfishness. And you will respond to her when you see her determination and desire to help those who have been imposed upon. It is a story that is remarkably rich in human interest and sentiment.

"THE LAST STRAW"

(FOX)

Buck Jones Makes Debut in Interesting Western

BUCK JONES, the new Fox star, certainly lives up to the praises which have been sung in his favor judging from the impression he makes in his initial picture, "The Last Straw." He brings to the screen a distinct personality—a personality quite different from other Western stars. He is not a heroic type nor is he a specialist in one line of endeavor. From our line of vision we would take him to be a modest, unassuming fellow who is determined enough to do things, but who prefers to wait until judgment has been passed before he plunges into the customary feats.

It looks to us as if he is holding himself in reserve since "The Last Straw" is cut from an orthodox pattern. It may be mild of action, but the development is clever enough to hide a triteness of theme and an obviousness of plot. The idea concerns itself with an Eastern girl who inherits a Western ranch and who discards her modern mannerisms in order to become a cowboy's ideal. The usual conflict of romance is capitalized when an Eastern admirer arrives to intrigue her if possible. Some of the incidents which present him are not sufficiently clear to make the continuity always discernible, and the action becomes quite hectic in the battle between the unruly element and the champions of the girl. The romance is acceptable because it is executed with lifelike proportions.

Mr. Jones is not called upon to show any undue horsemanship. In fact the picture is free from any display of Western heroics, it being merely a presentation of a tried and true formula which scores for its simplicity and its characterization. "The Last Straw" uncovers some really remarkable scenery. The pictorial backgrounds, Mr. Jones' unassuming manner and Vivian Rich's charming performance makes this feature an interesting number.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Buck Jones, the new star of the Fox Film Corporation, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his initial picture, "The Last Straw." Mr. Jones comes to the screen as the latest interpreter of Western stories and it is said by those who have seen him that he acts with considerable authority. He is a genuine cowpuncher and his ability in this direction is attested to in his capable performance. The star assumes the role of Tom Beck, a cowboy, who is working on a California ranch inherited by Jane Hunter, an Eastern girl. In seeking to appoint a foreman she suggests a lottery. Tom refuses to join this, and so the secret leader of a gang of cattle rustlers is chosen by Jane. Later, when Tom discovers the rustlers are planning to rob the girl's ranch, he accepts the foremanship—and then falls in love with his employer.

He has made an impression with the girl through the advice he offers her, and she quickly discards her eastern ways, which are not in harmony with the Western ideal of womanhood. In order to win her, however, Tom has to do many exciting and daring things. At the ranch a reconciliation takes place between them. She returns the locket to him. It contains the last straw, the one Tom had refused to draw whch would have made him foreman. So he takes one more chance, providing there is a marriage in it. The picture is filled with sensational feats of daring, while a delightful love story runs through it. The subject has been adapted and directed by Denison Clift from Harold Titus' story of the same name. Mr. Jones displays his horsemanship to great advantage and he is supported by a most capable cast that includes Vivian Rich as his leading woman.

CATCH LINES

The new Fox star, Buck Jones, will make his debut on the screen in "The Last Straw," a vivid Western picture. Don't miss this cowboy actor in his initial feature.

Buck Jones, the new sensation of the screen in "The Last Straw," a Western photodrama of life and love and laughter. See the cowboy actor in a dynamic picture of the cattle country.

PROGRAM READER

Buck Jones, the new Fox star, will make his debut as a screen actor in "The Last Straw," a Western photodrama which comes to this theatre in the near future. Mr. Jones and his daring horseback feats promise to cause a riot of enthusiasm among our patrons when they see him. The scenes of "The Last Straw" are laid in California and in the hero role of Tom Beck, a cowpuncher, Jones, according to reports, fills the bill to perfection. The story abounds in dramatic incidents and strongly portrays life as it is lived in the open and on the ranch in the West. It is a powerful tale, but its strength is increased by marvelous feats of horsemanship. The unusual episodes in this story of adventure and love call for a variety of natural scenery that is exceptional. Our patrons should react to this picture because of its stirring line of action and its interpretation. Buck Jones is supported by Vivian Rich and other capable players. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a new star, Buck Jones, and it would be advisable to start your exploitation with him. You can make him a prime favorite with your patrons by announcing him as a genuine cowboy actor. Use stills of the star plentifully. Get your people acquainted with him through running stories of his exploits. You can obtain your information from your nearest Fox exchange. Publicize the picture a week in advance. This is necessary in arousing interest in the star. Use effective signs for lobby display, such as: "See Buck Jones, the new sensation in a vivid Western picture, 'The Last Straw.'" You can work out a good stage setting by building a scene suggesting the West. Announce the picture as a thrilling Western melodrama of romance and adventure and bill the star as a dynamic, magnetic figure. Mention the cast.

A Woman's Prey

By Fred Jackson

Character of Story: Romance.

Theme: Love.

Characters: John Bolt, miner; Griswold, superintendent of the Red Peak Mining Company; Mrs. Lorah Waring of New York and Reno; tourists, miners, etc.

The Plot: John Bolt has lived all his life in Nevada and holds a very responsible position with the Red Peak Mining Company. He has no ambitions other than to rise to the top of his profession as a mining expert and has no thought that any other part of the world might hold out more pleasures than that particular section where he has spent his days. He is assigned by Griswold to entertain a party of tourists and to show them through the mine. While doing this he makes the acquaintance of Lorah Waring, a divorcee, who is seeking relief from the boredom of Reno. Bolt has never before seen a woman like this and immediately falls a victim to her charms. Not content with bringing him to her feet, Mrs. Waring tells Bolt that he is missing the best of life in spending his days in the West—that he should come to New York and see the thousand and one wonders of the great city. She paints in alluring colors the night life of the city, shows him the excitement of drinking and gambling, lures him with tales of the wonderful luxuries enjoyed by the children of the city. Bolt is much impressed with all of this and begins to feel a vague uneasiness and desire to travel. Before Mrs. Waring leaves Bolt learns that she is divorced, or about to be, which shocks him but does not keep him from falling more and more deeply in love with her. On the night before she goes he seizes her in his arms and kisses her. She had been flirting with him but did not bargain on this and she upbraids him fiercely. When she has gone he can think of nothing else and the one great desire of his life is to get East to see her. He writes her this and she replies that she has no further interest in him and that the best thing that he can do is to forget her entirely. He decides that he will not wait any longer. Taking one hundred thousand dollars of the company money, he boards the train and goes to New York. Before going to a hotel, he takes a cab to her house but is told by the butler that she is not in. He leaves word that he will be back again in the evening and early in the evening he again presents himself only to be told that she is not at home. He inquires when he will be likely to find her and the evasive answers of the butler convince him that she is at home and trying to avoid him. He walks in and announces that he will wait for her if it takes all night. Before long a maid tells him that it was a mistake, Mrs. Waring is at home and will see him. She treats him coldly, tells him she has no interest in him. He tells her that she has ruined his life and made him a thief and that she owes him herself—he will have her by marriage or otherwise. Locking the door, he gives her her choice. She chooses marriage and a week later they arrive at the mine where he finds that Griswold has made good the money and treats it as a loan. Mrs. Waring has been won over and decides to spend the rest of her life learning the sort of happiness Bolt knew before she came and which she has never known before.

Locale: Nevada and New York.

Picture High Lights: Emotional scenes.

The Shepherd of the Sea

By Henry Leverage

Character of story: Adventure.

Theme: The Lure of the North.

Characters: Buck Traherne, an involuntary seaman; Martin Jordan, the shepherd of the sea; Moona, his adopted daughter; Hank Peterson, mate; Cocky, Bird, Saul, Samuels, Goodwin, Scotty, seamen; the Eskimo witch; officers and sailors of revenue cutter, natives, etc.

The Plot: Buck Traherne of Seattle puts out into a strait in his motor boat to attend a poker party near the resort where he is staying. Caught in a squall, his boat is upset and he finds himself in the water. He is nearly drowned when a schooner slips by and he grasps a martingale guy rope and swings himself to the deck. There he demands to be set ashore. The captain asks him if he does not think it the mercy of God that he has been saved. Traherne says he thinks it was luck. The captain thereupon knocks him out and Traherne becomes a member of the crew. He learns that the captain is a missionary skipper—running far North along the coast of Siberia, preaching to the Indians and discouraging, as much as possible, the traffic in rum among the natives. The sailors are mostly past middle age. The foster daughter of the captain is a beautiful girl who is half Scotch and half Eskimo. After a little Traherne begins to enjoy the sea life and is glad that his accident led him into this adventure, for the boat is bound for ports seldom visited except by polar expeditions. On the way there are some adventures. The captain follows for many miles a schooner which he knows to be laden with liquor and catching up with it in a harbor, he boards it with his men while the crew are ashore and sets it afire. He carries onto his own ship two casks which he holds for evidence. His own ship is shortly afterward overtaken by a revenue cutter and all are placed under arrest. They are realeased, however, when the captain proves by the two barrels in his hold that the other ship was carrying munitions to the Bolsheviki. Naturally a love affair develops between Traherne and Moona, though she is promised to the Captain when she shall become eighteen years of age. At one of the Northern ports the crew learn that a polar expedition has been wrecked further into the Arctic and the Captain insists upon going to the Arctic. This dangerous trip is made without accident, but arriving at the point where the expedition is supposed to have been wrecked, they find that the camp has been deserted. They learn from a shadowy figure—supposed to be one of the legendary "white Eskimeaux" of the interior, that the ship has turned back. They turn South and are wrecked but escape in a life boat and finally make port on an island where there are whalers and also the party of explorers. Here they undergo great privation and want of food and nearly perish beside having a lively fight on their hands to keep the whalers from forcibly robbing them of their stores of food. The Captain and Traherne set out to find a Hudson Bay station and finally get help. The Captain resigns Moona to Traherne and the two are married.

The Gray Mask

By Wadsworth Camp

Character of story: Detective story.

Theme: Pursuit of criminals and love story.

Characters: Jim Garth, detective; The Inspector; Nora, his daughter; Simmons, the man without a face; Slim, a crook; George, another crook; burglars, police, etc.

The Plot: A band of desperate criminals, known as "the Henion group" who have caused much trouble to the police, have plotted to enter a certain house and rob the safe. It is the same house in which, some months before, a policeman named Kridel interrupted the proceedings and was murdered. The Inspector learns of this attempt and learns that for the work of blowing out the inner vaults the crooks have employed a man from Chicago named Simmons who had lost his face in experimenting with explosives and who wears a gray silk mask, because he is horribly deformed. The Inspector plans to have this man arrested quietly and taken from the Chicago train before it gets to New York, substituting in his place Jim Gath, one of the force, Jim is given the chance but told he need not take it unless he desires to do so. Jim is in love with Nora who was to have married the -murdered Kridel. He accepts the assignment but before going on the job goes to ask Nora to marry him. She tells him that she cannot think of it yet. Jim boards the train above Yonkers where the real Simmons is taken off. Before the North River is passed, two men come aboard and lead Jim off the train. In a shed near the river he meets the band of crooks. To his horror he finds that Nora is apparently a member of the band and a spy for them. She tells them that there is a police agent present and insists that investigation be made as to the man in the mask. The others shrink from looking behind the mask but Nora finally does this, not being aware that Jim has been assigned to the task. When he lifts his mask in such a way that she alone can see his face, she screams, and the effect is as great as though he had actually been bardly scarred. The others are now satisfied and all proceed to the house where the robbery is to be done. George, Jim, Garth and Nora are left in the room with the safe. It is George's duty to open the first door to the safe ebfore iSmmons or the supposed imSmons, blows up the avult. While eGorge is owrking oNra pretends to eb nervous and talks constantly o fthe murder of Kridel in that room. She throws the light on a stain on the carpet and alternately tiwts Georeg iwth a lack of nerve and charegs him with the murder. He finally admits it, thinking to win her regard. George gets the door open. He tries to kiss Nora while Simmons is to open the safe. Nora stabs George and wounds him. Garth now understands that Nora has been seeking rveenge in her own way. They take refuge in the safe which is filled with dynamite and threaten to blow up the entire house when the crooks come in answer to George's cry. The others are afraid to shoot because of the explosive. Garth gets his gun out and they all surrender just as the inspector and the police arrive, having received a note from Garth dropped from a taxi at the feet of a policeman, according to instructions.

The Lady of Mystery House

By George C. Shedd

Character of story: Romance.

Theme: Conspiracy.

Characters: James McIntyre; Tom Masson; Caroline Webb; Sally Brown; Mrs. Belknap; Ollie Belknap, her daughter; Lafe Dodds, a native; Corwin, an unscrupulous business man; Ratchford, Malmesbury and Moreles, crooks; Dempster, a secret service man.

The Plot: Tom Masson's uncle sends for him and informs him that he has purchased some property in the South with the intention of building a winter resort and afterward selling off some of the extra land for farms. The promoter of the scheme and Tom's uncle's partners have both died suddenly in the midst of the development of the plan. There is an heiress to the property in the person of Caroline Webb. Tom's uncle, not having time to go into the matter himself, has deeded the property to Tom and packs him off South to investigate and to make plans with Miss Webb who owns the other half of the property. Arriving at a litle town in Florida where the property is situated. Tom finds that a man named Corwin has claimed Miss Webb's house on a mortgage, which afterward proves to have been forged. She and her aunt, Mrs. Belknay and cousin, Ollie, are permitted to remain in the house as guests of Corwin. He also has as his guests two Englishmen of questionable antecedents who were evidently once gentlemen but now living by their wits. A clash between Masson and Ratchford, one of these men, at a hotel warns Corwin that an outsider is on the scene and in order to keep him under observation, he invites him to come to Webb House to stay. Masson goes with the idea that he may be able to protect Miss Webb by being at hand. At first she mistakes him for another of Corwin's friends and will have nothing to do with him, but he soon explains that they are partners. Then begins a series of exciting adventures for them both. They know that Corwin and his friends are up to some mischief, shipping mysterious boxes to an island nearby, but they cannot learn what this business is. The Hon. Senator Sagebrush

By Francis Lynde

Character of story: Romantic drama.

Theme: Politics.

Characters: David Blount, Senator Sagebrush; Evan Blount, his son; Dick Gantry, Evan's friend and railway official Hardwick McVickar, vice president o the Transcontinental Railway Company Mrs. Senator Sagebrush, Evan's step mother; Patricia Anners, a girl fron Boston; Professor Anners, her father S. P. Hathaway, lumber pirate; politicians, etc.

The Plot: Evan Blount, having been away from home for many years, returns from college to his native state in the far West where he hears that his father has become a power in politics and the boss of the big political machine of the state. On the train Evan becomes acquainted with a timber man and by way of a joke permits this man to jump to the conclusion that he is an agent of the Forest Reserve out to hunt down those who steal timber from Government land. The train is held up by a wash out and Blount determines to travel on horseback to the ranch of an old friend in the vicinity. He is held up by three men and nearly meets his end before he makes them understand that he is the son of the Senator. They then take him to a large house on a country estate nearby for identification. A lady there identifies him although he has never seen her before. She invites him to stop at the place until the next day, saying that her husband will be glad to see him. Blount discovers in the morning that this house belongs to his father and that this woman is his step-mother whom he had expected to hate. Blount does not approve of machine politics and tells his father so. He accepts a position as attorney for the Transcontinental Railway Company and becomes their campaign manager under the impression that they are being unjustly taxed. His father, meanwhile, had threatened the railway company that if they did not conduct a clean campaign this year he would make his son attorney-general. Evan finds himself involved in a situation where everyone's hand seems to be against him. He makes promises for the railway which they encourage him to make, and then he finds that they are continuing their usual corrupt practices. He believes that his father is also trying to defeat his efforts to establish clean politics. Evan collects evidence which proves the corruptness of the railway regime and threatens to expose them all if they do not make good the promises which he has made for them to the public. Evan believes that this evidence will involve his own father—the Boss—and that the ruin of the company will mean the ruin of the entire machine. In spite of this he is determined to make the evidence public, intending, afterward to resign and act as his father's attorney. He turns his evidence to a Supreme Court judge. He then learns that his father is not involved and that from behind the scenes his father has been working with him all of the time to bring the railway company around to his own point of view—that the time for old fashioned methods in politics is gone. Acting as Evan's advisor, Patricia Anners takes part in the campaign and at its close, marries him.

Locale: A Southwestern state.

Picture High Lights: This is a story laid in the new West of cities and civilization and has practically none of the ordinary Western effects. Even the ranchhouse has given way to the country home.

El Supremo

By Edward Lucas White

Character of story: Romance.

Theme: Love and intrigue.

Characters: Dr. Jose Gaspar Rodriguez de Francia, El Supremo, dictator of Paraguay; William Hawthorne, U. S. A.; Don Beltram Jaray; Donna Juanna Isquebel, grandmother of Don Jaray; Senorita Ventuara Velarde, the Dictator's fiancee; Dr. Tom Parlett; Don Vincente Mayorga; Dr. Bargas; Domingo Rodriguez; Donna Ce-[illegible] Rodriguez; Cecelia D'Arcy; Span-[illegible] Creoles, Indians, Soldiers, etc.

The Plot: William Hawthorne, an American who has taken part in two or three South American revolutions, hears that Paraguay is suffering under the heel of a tyrant and comes to investigate, with the intention of unseating the Dictator by revolution. The Dictator learns of this intention and makes a point of keeping Hawthorne near him, hoping to convince him that Paraguay needs this sort of government and that nobody else is capable of keeping the country at peace or prosperous. This he succeeds in doing before the end of the story. In the seven hundred pages of this story there are numberless thrilling encounters of one sort or another, Hawthorne three times saving the Dictator from assassination. The character of this man, Francia, stands out strongly. An ardent patriot, he is forced to be a tyrant because of the turbulent nature of his subjects. He dares not make friends among them lest he weaken his hold upon them; he dares not reverse his own decisions lest the Indians cease to think him infallible. His determination to treat the Indians as well as the Spaniards gains him the enmity of the aristocracy who are, however, in deadly fear of him. The story of how he wins his bride, only to lose her to the man whom he most trusted and who betrayed him, Don Beltran Jaray, is, in itself, material for a picture. The love affair of Hawthorne with a woman whom he finds in prison and believes to be the wife of another man is also highly romantic, from the point where he first discovers her on a tour of inspection of prisons to the point where he thinks he has killed her by mistake, provides a second love theme throughout the tale. The story is full of color and action and the character of the ruler, El Supremo, is drawn from that of the real Dr. Francia, the first dictator of Paraguay. Donna Isquebel, grandmother of Don Jaray, and god-mother of the dictator, is the only woman in the entire country who dares talk with the Dictator as an equal and, until he falls in love with Senorita Ventura Velarde, the only woman who can induce him to go against his own judgment. A particularly interesting incident is where this young woman, with a friend, enters the cathedral dressed in the fashion of the ladies of Buenos Ayres instead of the sober church garments of Asuncion, thus scandalizing the natives and being ordered to leave the church. When complaint is made to the Dictator he is inclined to let the matter rest until he learns the identity of the young woman driven from the church, whereupon he arrests the clergy, decrees that there shall be another special mass and compels all of the gentry to attend in order that these young women may be vindicated in the eyes of the public.

The Azure Rose

By Reginald Wright Kauffman

Character of story: Romance.

Theme: Love and adventure.

Characters: Charlie Carteret, an artist; Seraphin Dieudonne, another artist; Fourget, a dealer; Mlle. Urola, the Dona Dolorez; Don Ricardo Ethenard-Eskurola d' Alegria; Chitta, servant to Dona Dolorez.

The Plot: Charlie Carteret, an American art student in Paris, has been cut off from his allowance by his uncle who has given him only two years in which to complete his art education. He has, however, sold a picture, and according to the custom of the Latin Quarter, is about to spend the purchase money in giving a dinner for his friends. Entreing his room he finds there a beautiful young woman who treats him as though he were himself intruding. It seems that she has the apartment across the hall and has made a mistake in the door. Carteret falls in love at first sight. When the young woman has gone he finds in his apartment an azure rose. Later he discovers Chitta, the young woman's maid, searching for this rose. The young woman explains that it is a superstition of her country that all who leave home take such a rose and if it be lost, then that person can never come home again. Carteret takes the rose from his pocket and gives it to her. From memory he paints three portraits of her. An art dealer offers him a large sum for one of them but he will not sell, although he is entirely without money. The dealer, taking pity upon him, buys a pot-boiler. Cartaret finds Chitta stealing strawberries from his room. She explains that her mistress has little money and that she, Chitta, is forced to steal food to augment the scanty table. Carteret gives the servant money and tells her to come to him when again in need. He has been invited to breakfast with Vitoria, the Lady of the Rose. She learns of the portraits and upbraids him for taking this liberty. She also learns that he has been giving money to the servant. She disappears, leaving the rose on his table. After weeks of searching he learns that there is only one place where such roses grow—in the Basque provinces of Spain. He has meantime had word from America that an oil well has been discovered on certain land belonging to himself and his sister. This provides funds. He seeks out the mountain province and finds that Vitoria is there known as the Dona Dolorez and that her brother is the lord of the surrounding territory, poor but very proud and powerful. It appears that the Basques never marry with strangers or foreigners and that the only thing that makes such a marriage possible is where the foreigner has "saved the family line" of the Basque; something which no Basque will permit if possible to prevent it. Carteret sees Vitoria and she tells him that the customs of the country will not permit their marriage. Learning that he has made love to Vitoria, the brother challenges Carteret to a duel. They use duelling pistols, one loaded with blanks and one with bullets. The brother has the first shot and his pistol proves to be the one with the blank cartridge. Carteret fires in the air. Then he mounts his horse and insists upon riding away despite the efforts of the brother to stop him. Arriving in Paris at his place he finds Vitoria waiting for him. She tells him that in firing in the air he has saved the line of her house and it is now, by the custom of her country, her solemn duty to marry him—a very pleasant duty from her point of view.

The Man with Three Names

By Harold MacGrath

Character of story: Drama.

Theme: Love.

Characters: Brandon Cathewe, the man with three names; his mother; Elizabeth Mansfield; Dunleigh Mansfield, her father; Dr. Maddox; Nancy Maddox, his daughter; society people, police, reporters, etc.

The Plot: Brandon Cathewe sees Betty Mansfield at the opera in London and immediately falls in love with her. He is crossing the ocean when he goes to her father and proposes that he pay his addresses to the girl. As Cathewe is traveling steerage to gather material for a novel, her father is at first astounded and then uncertain whether to be indignant or amused. Knowing himself to be the absolute dictator of the city, he ironically promises Cathewe that if the latter will come to Mansfield's home city, Bannister, and become a force in the community before he speaks to the girl or makes any attempt to meet her, consent will be given to the marriage—so far, at least, as the father is concerned. Cathewe takes up this challenge. He goes to Bannister and buys the Herald. After he has learned of the many evil things Mansfield has done for profit and without actually breaking the law, Cathewe determines to show him up by making an attack upon his moral character, reciting, one after another, the instances where he has robbed an inventor, grown rich from the income from low drinking places and from the rents of rookeries unfit for human habitation or beaten an opponent unfairly by force of his financial backing. Meanwhile Cathewe has been writing anonymous love letters to Betty—letters which have picqued her interest and caused her to indulge in some romantic day dreams. Cathewe has also written a novel under the name of George Cottar. This novel is a great favorite with Betty and her friend Nancy Maddox. Nancy is more than half in love with Cathewe. Manseld returns home from New York to do battle with the Herald. Investigation shows that the Herald has deposits in the banks amounting to half a million dollars but that Cathewe never uses any of this money for himself. Further investigation shows that Cathewe is the son of Digby Hallowell who amassed a fortune selling worthless oil stocks to the public. All of this money was placed to the credit of his wife, then living in Europe and ignorant of its source. Hallowell was eventually arrested and died in jail before his wife could reach him. When Cathewe reached the age of eighteen his mother asked him what they should do with this money. He determined to use to defend the poor against the predatory rich. Betty accidentally makes the acquaintance of Cathewe but does not know that he is the owner of the Herald. She is very indignant at the attacks which the Herald makes upon her father. She succeeds in buying enough of the Herald stock to give her the control, and meeting Cathewe at a dinner at Nancy's house, she tells him that she will assume the control of the paper on the first of the year. That night Germans blow up the munitions factory of Betty's father and Mansfield proves himself a hero by rescuing three children at the peril of his own life. Cathewe gives him credit for his heroism in the newspapers. Mansfield, because he has come to be very fond of his daughter, sees a new light. All are reconciled and Betty and Cathewe are married.

The House of Balthazar

By William J. Locke

Character of story: Drama.

Theme: Can a man come back?

Characters: John Balthazar, professor of mathematics at Oxford; Godfrey Balthazar, his son, a young officer; Marcelle Baring, a student, later a nurse; Dorothy Mackworth, a society girl; Lady Edna Fonnelthorpe; Edgar Donelthorpe; Quong Ho, a Chinaman.

The Plot: John Balthazar, a university professor and scholar of great attainments and reputation is unhappily married. He and his wife are not congenial. He falls in love with Marcelle Baring, one of his students and she with him. In spite of his efforts to put this passion out of his heart and in spite of his determination not to speak of it, the words escape him. Bidding the girl good-night, he goes home and prepares to leave England forever. His wife is independently rich and there are no children, so he feels that to save the girl, the best thing he can do is to go away. This he does, going to China where he becomes a great man. Godfrey Balthazar grows up knowing nothing of his father save the fact that his mother was deserted, and led to believe by his relatives that his father left as the result of some sort of disgrace. As a young officer in the late war he is wounded and sent to a London hospital. There he is nursed by Marcelle Baring. From her he learns the true story of his father and for the first time learns that his father did not know of the impending birth of his son when he went away. Marcelle does not tell that she was the student in the case but Godfrey guesses this. John Balthazar, meanwhile, has adopted in China a young Chinese student, Quong Ho, and has come home to England. Finding all strange and depressing in London, he retires to a stone house in the middle of a desolate moor and there he and Quong Ho pursue their studies in mathematics and other sciences. Arriving before the outbreak of hostilities and Quong Ho, who does all of the marketing, etc., being strictly enjoined not to bother his master with news of the outside world, John learns nothing of the war until it has been going on for nearly two years when a zeppelin drops a bomb on his house and Quong Ho is hurt. Going for help, John learns of the war. In London he finds things even stranger than before and determines to look up some of his friends in the university. He finds one professor of his acquaintance who tells him he has a son. John goes to call on Godfrey and there he meets Marcelle. John takes a house and takes Godfrey home with him. He urges Marcelle to marry him but this she will not do; she has lost something of her early passion for him. Marcelle and Godfrey continue great friends. Godfrey and John both secure important Government positions. Godfrey is jilted by Dorothy Mackworth, with whom he fancies himself in love. Through his father he meets Lady Donnelthorpe, the young wife of an old husband. He entrusts her with an important drawing. Her husband gets hold of this and through jealousy makes it public. Godfrey and Lady Donnelthorpe attempt to elope. The husband comes to the station and John takes the blame, claiming it was with him that she was intending to run away. He makes Godfrey promise to return to France and see no more of her until the war is over. The husband of Lady Donnelthorpe tells John that unless he resigns his office and accepts a government mission to China, he will disgrace them all. John resigns and as he is about to leave again for the Orient, Marcelle comes and tells him that she is going with him this time.

American Legion Writes Eslie Janis

A letter has been received by Selznick Pictures Corporation which adds another compliment to the ability of Elsie Janis as an actress and indicates beyond all doubt that the "regular girl" is a prime favorite of all doughboys or ex-doughboys.

The letter is from Corporal Burt Foster Post 361, American Legion, McKeesport, Pa., and is over the signature of Bernhard Ragner, adjutant.

Adjutant Ragner said in his letter: "At the last meeting of Corporal Burt Foster Post No. 361, American Legion, I was instructed to extend to you sincere thanks of the post for your kind invitation to attend a pre-release showing of 'The Regular Girl,' starring Miss Elsie Janis, at the Olympic theatre, this city. We appreciate your kindness in permitting us to see this picture, and it was indeed a rare treat to see Miss Janis once more. Miss Janis, whom we all consider as one of our 'pals' of the A. E. F. Without a doubt she is pre-eminently one of the leaders of filmdom today, and her artistic, painstaking work in 'A Regular Girl' demonstrates definitely her ability as an actress. Thanking you once again, we beg to remain, yours very truly,

"Corporal Burt Foster Post,

Denison Clift An All-Round Picture Man

In the direction of "The Iron Heart," with Madlaine Traverse, at the Hollywood, Cal., studios of William Fox, Denison Clift attains an exceedingly rare position in motion picture production. He is at once story writer, scenario writer and director—certainly a combination which results not only in what should be the best pictures, but in the greatest economy of time, effort and ability.

Denison Clift is a graduate of Stanford University. He literally "broke into" directorship. A director had left in the heat of a story which Clift had written. The author, who was serving as scenario editor for Fox, assumed control and brought the picture to a highly successful ending. By a strange coincidence he again is called to finish a picture in like fashion.

Mr. Clift is delighted with the cast of "The Iron Heart." It includes in addition to the star, Edwin Booth Tilton, George McDaniel, Melbourne McDowell and Ben Deely, Gus Edwards, Frederick Bond, Mrs. Higgins, Mrs. Briscoe and little Nancy Caswell.

Only two women figure in the Selznick special, "The Law Bringers," a Ralph Ince production in which Ralph Ince plays the leading part. Andree, the half breed dance hall girl, is played by Zena Keefe, and Jennifer Ducane, the gambler's wife, played by Anita Booth. For the rest, "The Law Bringers" is a story of masculine adventure, outdoor life, battle, and the lawlessness of the far north.

Olive Thomas is enjoying a short rest after completing her sixth Selznick picture. Her next picture will be "Jenny," a comedy-drama by Roy Horniman. Alan Crosland will direct "Jenny."

Artists release, which will be a screen adaptation of "Op O' My Thumb," from the child's story. This will be remembered as a one-act play in which Maude Adams appeared a number of seasons ago, and is from the child's story of the same name. No definite time for the beginning of filming for this picture has been stated.

Dennis O'Brien, legal adviser of Pickford and a number of other screen stars, is in Los Angeles as a guest of Miss Pickford.

Kenneth McGaffey has taken up the duties of the publicity department of Mary Pickford productions. McGaffey will be remembered as director of publicity of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for four years or more.

J. Warren Kerrigan has a sympathetic role in "Live Sparks," the new Brunton picture to be released by W. W. Hodkinson

Here and There

In making the finishing scenes for his first First National release, King Vidor this week had the advantage of the experience of the Public Defender of Los Angeles, James Pope, in supervising court room scenes. It is expected this subject will be entirely ready for the editing rooms within the next few days.

Marshall Neilan this week made known his intention to go to New York for the filming of his third First National release, and arrangements are now being made for studio facilities in New York. The third picture will be an adaptation from "Old Jed Trouty," and those who in all probability will accompany the producer are Victor Heerman, Tom Held, William Lenehan and George Elder, who constitute his technical staff.

Director Colin Campbell and company, including Edith Storey as star, have gone to Palm Spring, California, for exteriors of the Haworth Robertson-Cole picture, "Moon Madness," and it is expected they will work there for several weeks.

David Hartford, who directed the filming of "Back to God's Country" and other subjects, has just returned from New York, where with James Oliver Curwood he made arrangements for the release of James Oliver Curwood's production. Mr. Hartford has begun the work of making plans

A score or more of commendatory letters from readers come to us each day. It is not so much the superlatives used that gratify, as it is the display of unanimity of opinion that the NEWS in its every department satisfies.

Practically every reader is a prospective buyer.

Advertisers have recognized the leadership of Motion Picture News in 1920 just as they have in former years. To date this year, however, they have recognized it just a bit stronger, as is indicated by the fact that they have placed 134¼ more pages of advertising in the NEWS than in its nearest competitor.

The reader by his say-so and the advertiser by deed agree that glow with happiness !

It Beats!

It beats like the quick pulse of youthful love. It beats with the warm glow of real humor. It beats any comedy of its kind ever picturized. It even beats "23½ Hours Leave" and "What's Your Husband Doing?" It is one continual smile surrounded by a couple of hundred long laughs. It warms the heart and tickles the fancy. You can take it for gospel truth that "Mary's Ankle" will fill your house to standing room only at every showing you can give it.

TO Realart, through MAYFLOWER, is to be accorded the privilege of making available to discriminating exhibitors everywhere a new series of

Charles Miller
Productions

—absorbing, masterful tales of the great out-of-doors, based upon the virile verse-stories of

ROBERT W. SERVICE.

Mr. Miller will specialize in work for which inclination, study and native ability have adequately prepared him. Realart expects from him productions which will mark a truly new era in the development of the silent drama.

REALART
PICTURES CORPORATION

THE scope of Charles Miller's experience is the whole realm of drama. Super, actor, star, stage manager, business manager, producer—he had achieved recognition long ere the blazing lights of the studio beckoned him to a new and greater opportunity.

Sky so blue it makes you wonder
If it's heaven shining through;
Earth so smiling 'way out yonder,
Sun so bright it dazzles you;
Birds a-singing, flowers a-flinging
All their fragrance on the breeze;
Dancing shadows, green, still meadows—
Don't you mope, you've still got these.

ROBERT W. SERVICE

NOT all the romance of motion pictures has yet been flashed upon the screen. For what picture has told the bewildering story of the successful actor of thirty-five, a leading man for Broadway stars, who blithely forsook a salary of $350 a week to begin anew at $3 a day as super in a studio? Yet thus has Charles Miller achieved success!

It isn't difficult to have faith in a man like that. Nor is it difficult to believe that in less than four years from the day he began in pictures, his annual income was exceeding $50,000.

The record of Charles Miller's achievements is his best advertisement. He joins MAYFLOWER because here he finds unlimited backing and unlimited confidence. And Realart opens to him as wide a world market as honest productions can find.

REALART
PICTURES CORPORATION

THE director who never had a failure!" So writes Charles Miller's biographer. And as we read, there comes to memory "The Flame of the Yukon," a Miller masterpiece. Yes, and "The Ghost of Yesterday" and "By Right of Purchase," in which Norma Talmadge starred! "The Sawdust Ring," too, and many more which you know as well as we.

They say also that Charles Miller has "made" six big stars, but it is of picture production, not star creation, that Realart is thinking now. It is on those wonderful stories of the big out-of-doors that Mr. Miller's reputation will rest—stories, we are pledged, of which "The Flame of the Yukon" was but a foretaste.

The Meteor is Coming!

ALL in a moment, a few short months ago, PRISCILLA DEAN flashed like some new-born meteor into public view—to grow and glow and soar to the top-most heaven of universal popularity—to fill the public prints with appreciations of her beauty and electrifying dramatic talent.

Today–like a meteor whirling in its orbit–PRISCILLA DEAN is headed for your screen again—this time clothed in all that greater beauty of investiture of which the tremendous drawing power of this amazing young actress has made her the rightful possessor.

Half a million dollars is your measuring stick for gauging the value of this new PRISCILLA DEAN-UNIVERSAL-JEWEL. Base your advertising expenditure on this fact—line up your publicity on it—keep it in mind in making ready for the crowds.

This half-a-million dollars gives you the quality of the Story, the brains behind the Direction, the sumptuousness of the Staging. Add this half-million of our effort to what you know PRISCILLA DEAN herself will do and you'll have a prophecy of that gratification which your public will express to you when you give them the Meteor of the Screen in her newest, greatest picture,

A picture built for all audiences.

OUR OPINION

One of those productions that has such a strong element of interest that it is adaptable for presentation to all audiences. That's what this Brentwood production is. The story is a strong drama—a theme which has been used before, but the handling of it has been very fine and the interest and continuity has been so well maintained that it is always a delight. The work of Mahlon Hamilton is of a virile and convincing type that will win his audiences. Betty Blythe in the stellar female role is excellent support. And a touch of heart appeal and genuine pathos is injected by the work of clever little Peggy Cartwright. The story has a society atmosphere and has been well staged.

STORY OF THE PLAY

Alden Van Dusen, the last of the Van Dusens, refuses to submit to the trickery of Cuthbert Steele, and instead plans suicide. He is saved from this by the attack of a thug, and he wanders to the west, where he learns that his wife and child have been cheated out of their share of the insurance derived from his reported death. He further learns that his partners have tricked their creditors and started a new firm. He leaves for the east and arrives on the day his wife, for the sake of their child, weds their old friend. But with his arrival matters are adjusted and happiness comes to all.

PROGRAM COPY—"Third Generation"—Mahlon Hamilton and Betty Blythe

Helen Van Dusen loved her husband devotedly, but the sunshine of social prestige had had immed her sight and she could not appreciate certain things. Alden Van Dusen would rather ce death than dishonest business dealings. And thereon hangs the plot of an interesting dram

RUIN!

The ugly fist of ruin smashed through the smooth shell of their smug, well-ordered lives. Prison confronted the father--poverty and disgrace the daughter. Then, in their black hour of despair, came a lonely, bitter man, for whom life had lost it's savor. How he sacrificed himself to save them, and how he saved himself in the act of sacrifice is told in this powerful picturization of Basil King's greatest book.

Mr. Paul H. Tessier, Mgr.,
Pathe Exchange, Inc.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Tessier:

We wish to advise you that your serial THE ADVENTURES OF RUTH featuring Ruth Roland, broke all Saturday records of this house, and when we state that we broke all records, we mean records that we believed were hard to beat. We were absolutely sold after viewing this serial that it was the best serial we have ever projected in our theatre, and as you know, we have run all of your serials and many of your competitors', and we have no hesitancy in stating that this is the greatest serial ever run.

We advertised the first episode extensively; also gave a free matinee at 10 o'clock Saturday morning for the children, and the regular matinee that started at 1 o'clock broke all box office records, as did the night show.

We also had three autographed photographs of Ruth Roland attractively framed, and displayed same in our lobby and also in the window of the corner drug store, and we advised our patrons that we would have a drawing of the lucky numbers for all those who attended the second episode of this serial, and give these photos away as prizes to the winners, with the compliments of Miss Ruth Roland.

We enclose herewith a picture, showing the number of children on the outside of the theatre, as well as those inside. This proves conclusively to us that if you buy a serial or feature that is a good one, and you will exert a little extra effort to advertise it sufficiently, you will reap a harvest.

Thanking you for your past favors, I am

Very truly yours,

A Ghosts' Definition of Love to Be Learned Friday Night

250 Ready to Snap Their Fingers in Mr. Spook's Face. Their Names Kept Secret, and So Are Cemeteries Picked for Their Vigils—No Joke-Playing on Madame Ghost.

There is a man in New Orleans who doesn't know what love is. He has read, in general terms, that love is what makes the world go round; he understands it is the seed from which a rich crop of wrist watches springs; he realizes it gives the census enumerator a lot of work.

But in his voyaging over the ocean of life, he has never seen the iredescently exquisite flying fish of love that make the surface of existence lovely and drive away doubts as to the fearful and unplumbed depths.

He was either down in the engine room looking at the machinery, or he was gazing at the clouds, or he was sea sick when the delicious vision vouchsafed itself; others aboard the ship saw it, but not he.

So if he is chosen by the Saenger Amusement Company to pass the night in a graveyard, and if a spirit does appear, he is going to ask that being what love is—what he must do to be worthy to search for that Holy Grail.

A Perplexing Theme

What is love? It's a great question, isn't it! Think of the poets, soldiers, statesmen, philosophers who have tried to tell what it was. They thought they knew—but perhaps after all they were no closer the reality than the man who is hoping that some of the Great Lovers of History will come forward Friday night and tell him where they erred, and show him what Love Really Is.

The applicants for the test now number 250. The lists will be closed at noon Friday. The names of those chosen to pass the night in a graveyard, chained, will not be announced, and the cemeteries chosen for the experiment will not be announced, until Saturday, after the test has been made.

This is to spike the guns of the practical jokers. Ghosts don't like practical jokers. There is no record of any ghost that liked to sit on a tack or to be, frightened out of his boots by hearing mysterious chains clanked. Being a ghost is a serious business for a ghost, and ghosts can't abide practical jokers playing ghosts. That's why ghosts won't have anything to do with practical jokers.

By keeping the cemeteries chosen a secret, the privacy that is so essential to the peace of mind of ghosts will be assured. There won't be any giddy crowds hanging around to criticise the ghosts' grammar. Ghosts are very particular about their grammar. Take Hamlet's ghost, for instance. He was so careful about his rhetoric that he didn't put enough hurrah and raspberry into his grouch, and little Ham was uncertain whether the old boy had a grouch or was suffering from an attack of rhetoric. So he had to get a burlesque company from the theatre to call the turn, and spilled Ophelia's brains.

To the white man who passes the night in a graveyard, the Saenger Amusement Company offers $25; to the colored man, $50; to the white woman, $75; to the colored woman, $100. They will be chained to the bed, given paper and pencil to record what happens, but no light. If no ghost appears a light won't be necessary. If a ghost does appear, the luminosity of his person will be sufficient. Ghosts have the reputation of always being lit up. Thoso chosen for the test must be absolutely alone. They will be unlocked by an Item representative in the morning and will give their experiences, under oath, to satisfy the yearning of their fellow creatures.

TWO WEDNESDAY EVEN

Graveyard Spirits Will Be Kept Busy Night of Jan. 23

Four Beds Await Ghost-Fearless Quartette Offered Money to Spend Few Hours Among Spectral Shafts of Stone and Listen to Gibberings of the Haunts.

If it is true the spirits cavort around graveyards at the witching hour of midnight; if it is true they squeak and squeal and gibber—many eyes in New Orleans want to see them, many ears want to hear.

In Tuesday's Item, the Saenger Amusement company advertised for a man or a woman to sleep in a cemetery " in the interests of science." The following scale for snoring was established: $25 for a white man; $50 for a colored man; 75 for a white woman; $100 for a colored woman. Open to everybody except a professional spiritualist medium. Time, 10:30 p. m., January 23, to dawn, January 24.

A bed with warm clothing would be provided among the graves; the scientific observer would be supplied with a gun; but he or she must be absolutely alone, without the company even of a dog, and must furthermore be chained to the bed. In the morning a representative would release him or her and take down the experiences. Later on, the science bugs would get in their work.

It was expected there would be one applicant, possibly two, and maybe—since these are times in which all the dope is upset—three.

Up to the time of going to press, however, there have been fifteen. They are of all classes—men and women, old and young and pretty; white and black. One social club volunteered in mass. A medical student at Tulane offered himself.

"My reason is," he writes, "that I want to do everything in my power to advance science. To this end, I'll have the spirits try to solve any scientific puzzle my professors may want me to clear up. The $25 reward, I'll donate to the French department of the Tulane university library. I only ask that I be provided with a gun, two or three novels, paper and pencil to record my experiences, an oil lamp to read by, and that chain be at least four yards long so as to allow free movement in case I am attacked."

One man wants to know why there is a discrimination in favor of colored folk.

Another says he is willing to make the test, but asks:

"How much does the bed weigh?"

A colored man writes: "I don't care to have a gun furnished me. I have a gun of my own and I'll take that."

Still another man asks if he will be allowed an umbrella and a pack of cigarettes.

One man said he would ask the spirits how to make the people move forward in the street cars, and so knock down Bleecker's $25 at the same time.

Applications are coming in so fast the Saenger Amusement company has already decided to put four sleepers on the job. They will be in four cemeteries, the names of which will be announced later.

On the whole it looks as if the spirits will have a busy time satisfying the searchers into science.

Cemetary Ghosts to Have Boy and Girl Callers Friday Night

A man and a girl have been chosen to beard the ha'nts in their lairs.

They are A. M. Lefeve of H. & B. beer, and Miss Eda May Smith, of 2024 St. Peter street, who will pass Friday night "in the interest of science and $100" for the Saenger Amusement Company, in the city graveyards and ask any wraiths that have no place to go or aren't in a hurry to get there, all about a lot of things.

Twenty-five dollars of the purse will go to Lefeve; the rest will go to Miss Smith. The friends of Lefeve are talking about presenting a bill to the legislature demanding equal pay for equal work. The purses will be presented in front of the Strand at noon Saturday.

The two were chosen by lot. Lefeve is a substitute, taking the place of a Tulane student who was picked, but apparently lost interest in spirits of the other world, for he didnt' answer a special delivery letter informing him of his selection.

A colored man was also chosen, but the company says it hasn't been able to secure a place to "plant" him.

Those making the test will be chained to bed in the graveyards, and will be absolutely alone. They will not even be allowed to have a dog. They will be supplied with paper and pencil with which to record the night's experiences.

To avoid the possibility of practical jakes, the names of the graveyards will not be announced until after the test.

Indications are there will be rain Friday night. Some who are acquainted with the habits of ha'nts, say this will keep the spirits down below ground. Who ever saw a ghost in a rainstorm? they ask. Ghosts only wear a sheet, they say; and who ever heard of a ghost with an umbrella?

Others, while admitting the cogency of this reasoning, urge that this is an unusual period in the world's history. "Of course, the ghosts will come Friday night, rain or shine," they say. "They want to find out if General McCrory has yet discovered Parker is elected."

Zell, the Gravier street manicurist, has been so busy picking horses that have the phenomenal gift of running backwards, that she forgot to put in her application.

"I'm plumb sorry," she said. "I'd 'a certaintly liked to have given those spooks a trimming."

Many Tempted By Offer of Money to Sleep in Cemetery

An earnest colored man called at The Item. From an inner recess in his habiliments he produced a copy of the ad calling for volunteers to sleep in the cemeteries on the night of January 23, thereby co-operating with he Saenger Amusement Company "in the interest of science."

"I'll sleep there," said the colored man. He added after a pause: "Lease-ways, I'll stay there in the bed. I 'd'no how sound the ha'nts, if there 's any ghostises, will lemme sleep."

He pointed to one of the conditions specified in the advertisement.

"But whaffor you goin' chain me to the bed?"

"That's to may sure you stay there all night," he was told.

"Huh! Make sure I stay there? I stay there all right. If no ha'nts come. I woudln't want to leave that bed. If they do, I couldn't move."

Sixteen more volunteers announced themselves Wednesday. That makes a total of 31. There are a number of negroes; and a surprisingly large number of white women and girls—upsetting two popular impressions.

The Saenger Amusement Company offers $25 to the white man, $50 to the colored man, $75 to the white woman, and $100 to the colored woman who sleeps in a cemetery.

Four will be chosen—and will be put in four different cemeteries. They will be chained to the bed and will not be allowed to have a companion, not even a dog, but will be allowed to have weapons.

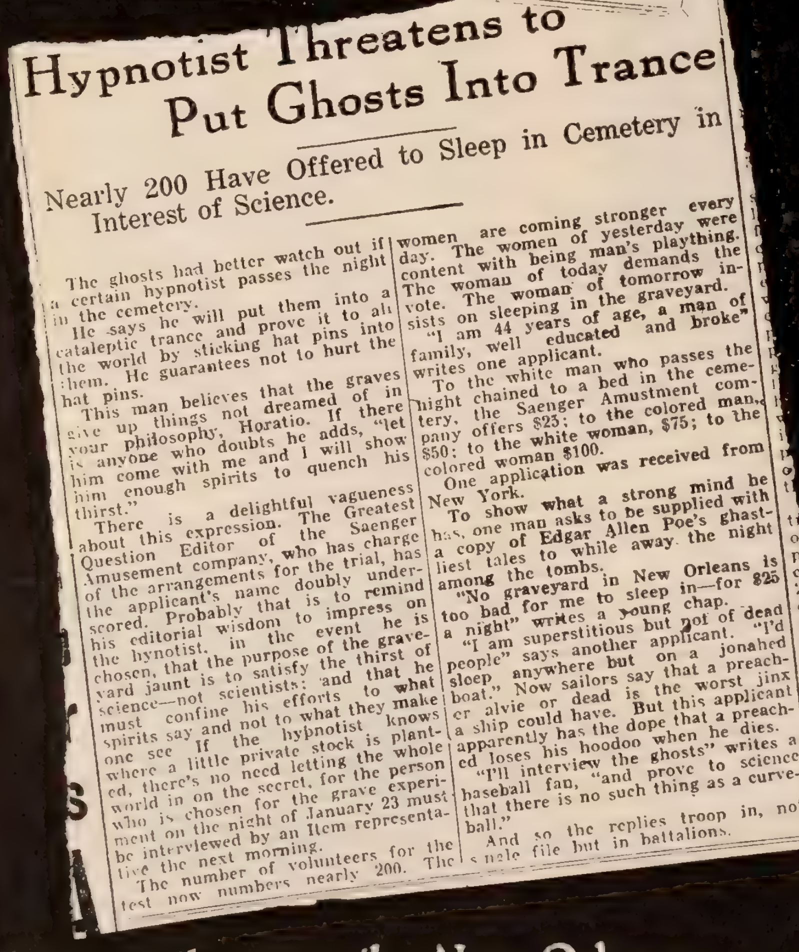
One of the applicants asked if he could have a phonograph—purposing, no doubt, if the spirits should show any signs of activity, to make 'em jazz. He was informed that this was a scientific research and not a function to entertain the spirits. A box of chocolates was the most he could expect. Spirits and chocolates don't mix.

A lady announced that she would try to find out what's wrong with the telephone service.

One or two expressed regret that the test was not being held before the election, because they might get a tip on how to place their money.

One white man said he would take up the proposition for $50, the reward offered colored men. Evidently he does not believe in cutting under negro labor.

Most of the letters or application were short and business-like, suggesting an utter indifference to the graveyard superstitions with which ignoramuses used to frighten little children.



Hypnotist Threatens to Put Ghosts Into Trance

Nearly 200 Have Offered to Sleep in Cemetery in Interest of Science.

The ghosts had better watch out if a certain hypnotist passes the night in the cemetery.

He says he will put them into a cataleptic trance and prove it to all the world by sticking hat pins into them. He guarantees not to hurt the hat pins.

This man believes that the graves give up things not dreamed of in your philosophy, Horatio. If there is anyone who doubts he adds, "let him come with me and I will show him enough spirits to quench his thirst."

There is a delightful vagueness about this expression. The Greatest Question Editor of the Saenger Amusement company, who has charge of the arrangements for the trial, has the applicant's name doubly underscored. Probably that is to remind his editorial wisdom to impress on the hynotist, in the event he is chosen, that the purpose of the graveyard jaunt is to satisfy the thirst of science—not scientists: and that he must confine his efforts to what spirits say and not to what they make one see If the hypnotist knows where a little private stock is planted, there's no need letting the whole world in on the secret, for the person who is chosen for the grave experiment on the night of January 23 must be interviewed by an Item representative the next morning.

The number of volunteers for the test now numbers nearly 200. The women are coming stronger every day. The women of yesterday were content with being man's plaything. The woman of today demands the vote. The woman of tomorrow insists on sleeping in the graveyard.

"I am 44 years of age, a man of family, well educated and broke" writes one applicant.

To the white man who passes the night chained to a bed in the cemetery, the Saenger Amustment company offers $25; to the colored man, $50; to the white woman, $75; to the colored woman $100.

One application was received from New York.

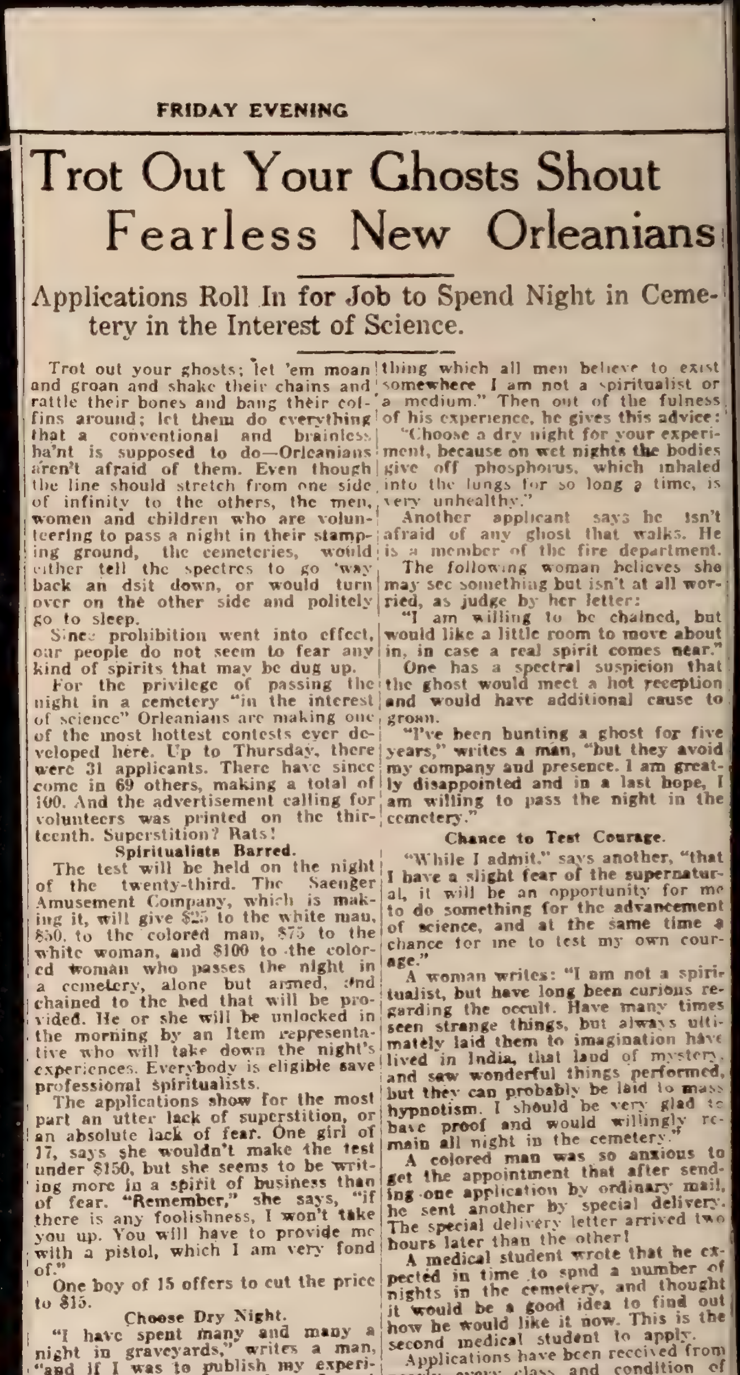
To show what a strong mind be has, one man asks to be supplied with a copy of Edgar Allen Poe's ghastliest tales to while away the night among the tombs.

"No graveyard in New Orleans is too bad for me to sleep in—for $25 a night" writes a young chap.

"I am superstitious but not of dead people" says another applicant. "I'd sleep anywhere but on a jonahed boat." Now sailors say that a preacher alive or dead is the worst jinx a ship could have. But this applicant apparently has the dope that a preached loses his hoodoo when he dies.

"I'll interview the ghosts" writes a baseball fan, "and prove to science that there is no such thing as a curve-ball."

And so the replies troop in, not single file but in battalions.



FRIDAY EVENING

Trot Out Your Ghosts Shout Fearless New Orleanians

Applications Roll In for Job to Spend Night in Cemetery in the Interest of Science.

Trot out your ghosts; let 'em moan and groan and shake their chains and rattle their bones and bang their coffins around; let them do everything that a conventional and brainless ha'nt is supposed to do—Orleanians aren't afraid of them. Even though the line should stretch from one side of infinity to the others, the men, women and children who are volunteering to pass a night in their stamping ground, the cemeteries, would either tell the spectres to go 'way back an dsit down, or would turn over on the other side and politely go to sleep.

Since prohibition went into effect, our people do not seem to fear any kind of spirits that may be dug up.

For the privilege of passing the night in a cemetery "in the interest of science" Orleanians are making one of the most hottest contests ever developed here. Up to Thursday, there were 31 applicants. There have since come in 69 others, making a total of 100. And the advertisement calling for volunteers was printed on the thirteenth. Superstition? Rats!

Spiritualists Barred.

The test will be held on the night of the twenty-third. The Saenger Amusement Company, which is making it, will give $25 to the white man, $50, to the colored man, $75 to the white woman, and $100 to the colored woman who passes the night in a cemetery, alone but armed, and chained to the bed that will be provided. He or she will be unlocked in the morning by an Item representative who will take down the night's experiences. Everybody is eligible save professional spiritualists.

The applications show for the most part an utter lack of superstition, or an absolute lack of fear. One girl of 17, says she wouldn't make the test under $150, but she seems to be writing more in a spirit of business than of fear. "Remember," she says, "if there is any foolishness, I won't take you up. You will have to provide me with a pistol, which I am very fond of."

One boy of 15 offers to cut the price to $15.

Choose Dry Night.

"I have spent many and many a night in graveyards," writes a man, "and if I was to publish my experiences they would fill a volume. I went not in the spirit of curiosity, but in the interest of science, as an honest soul seeking to find that something which all men believe to exist somewhere I am not a spiritualist or a medium." Then out of the fulness of his experience, he gives this advice:

"Choose a dry night for your experiment, because on wet nights the bodies give off phosphorus, which inhaled into the lungs for so long a time, is very unhealthy."

Another applicant says he isn't afraid of any ghost that walks. He is a member of the fire department.

The following woman believes she may see something but isn't at all worried, as judge by her letter:

"I am willing to be chained, but would like a little room to move about in, in case a real spirit comes near."

One has a spectral suspicion that the ghost would meet a hot reception and would have additional cause to groan.

"I've been bunting a ghost for five years," writes a man, "but they avoid my company aud presence. I am greatly disappointed and in a last hope, I am willing to pass the night in the cemetery."

Chance to Test Courage.

"While I admit," says another, "that I have a slight fear of the supernatural, it will be an opportunity for me to do something for the advancement of science, and at the same time a chance for me to test my own courage."

A woman writes: "I am not a spiritualist, but have long been curious regarding the occult. Have many times seen strange things, but always ultimately laid them to imagination have lived in India, that land of mystery, and saw wonderful things performed, but they can probably be laid to mass hypnotism. I should be very glad to have proof and would willingly remain all night in the cemetery."

A colored man was so anxious to get the appointment that after sending one application by ordinary mail, he sent another by special delivery. The special delivery letter arrived two hours later than the other!

A medical student wrote that he expected in time to spnd a number of nights in the cemetery, and thought it would be a good idea to find out how he would like it now. This is the second medical student to apply.

Applications have been received from nearly every class and condition of men and women except—

"Scare Me", They Plead in Letters to Ghost Editor

"I Would Only Be Too Glad to Be Scared to Death at Your Expense, Please Select Me," a Negro Woman Writes—One Wants the Money Beforehand

Every night at 12—which is a bonehead ghost's idea of daylight—for the past few months a certain woman in New Orleans has been awakened by someone calling her by a name she has not used since she was a child Then a strange reticence seizes the party. He, she or it doesn't say what he-etc. wants, and won't even tell his-etc name This woman thinks that the time is all right but there may be something wrong with the place

Now "in the interest of science" the Saenger Amusement Company a few days ago advertised for someone to sleep in a graveyard, offering handsome payment for the trouble.

"Just the thing," said this woman. "I can help science, find out the name of the party that's troubling me, and help the Christmas savings fund."

So she volunteered

"I know," she wrote to The Greatest Question Editor of the Saenger Amusement Company, in charge of the details of the experiment, "that communication between the dead and the living is posible. I will be glad to spend the night to demonstrate this."

There are scores of others who have the same desire Applications from every condition of mankind are flooding into the Saenger offices. The Item telephone is worked overtime answering inquiries. One would think the desire to sleep in a graveyard springs as eternal in the human breast as hope To date, 155 formal applications have been received—white men, white women, colored men, colored women, even children, educated and uneducated Many applications are from out of town. This business bids fair to rival the excitement created in the rural districts, by Stubbs' milking boast.

The applications reflect both lack of fear and magnificent courage Those who say they do not believe in ghosts are an illustration of the former—they are in the majority. But a great many applications have been received from persons who say they do believe in ghosts and have the natural dread of seeing them—but are yet willing to go through with the test.

One woman writes: "Would you be willing to give me the money BEFOREHAND? I might not have any earthly use for it afterwards."

A colored man in Mansfield writes: "I won't promise to do muc hsleeping in that graveyard, but if I am chained and locked, I know I will say there. Please let me know at once if you will give me the job, and I'll come down on the first train, because I need the money, and my expenses will be about $30 and that won't leave me much out of the $50 you offer, but it will help some."

A Harahan man offers to do more than the conditions require.

He says: "I will undress and I will sleep in a coffin, grave, vault or anywhere else i nthe interest of science and a check."

"I will post $50 to show my good faith," writes an employe of the Western Union, in submittng his application.

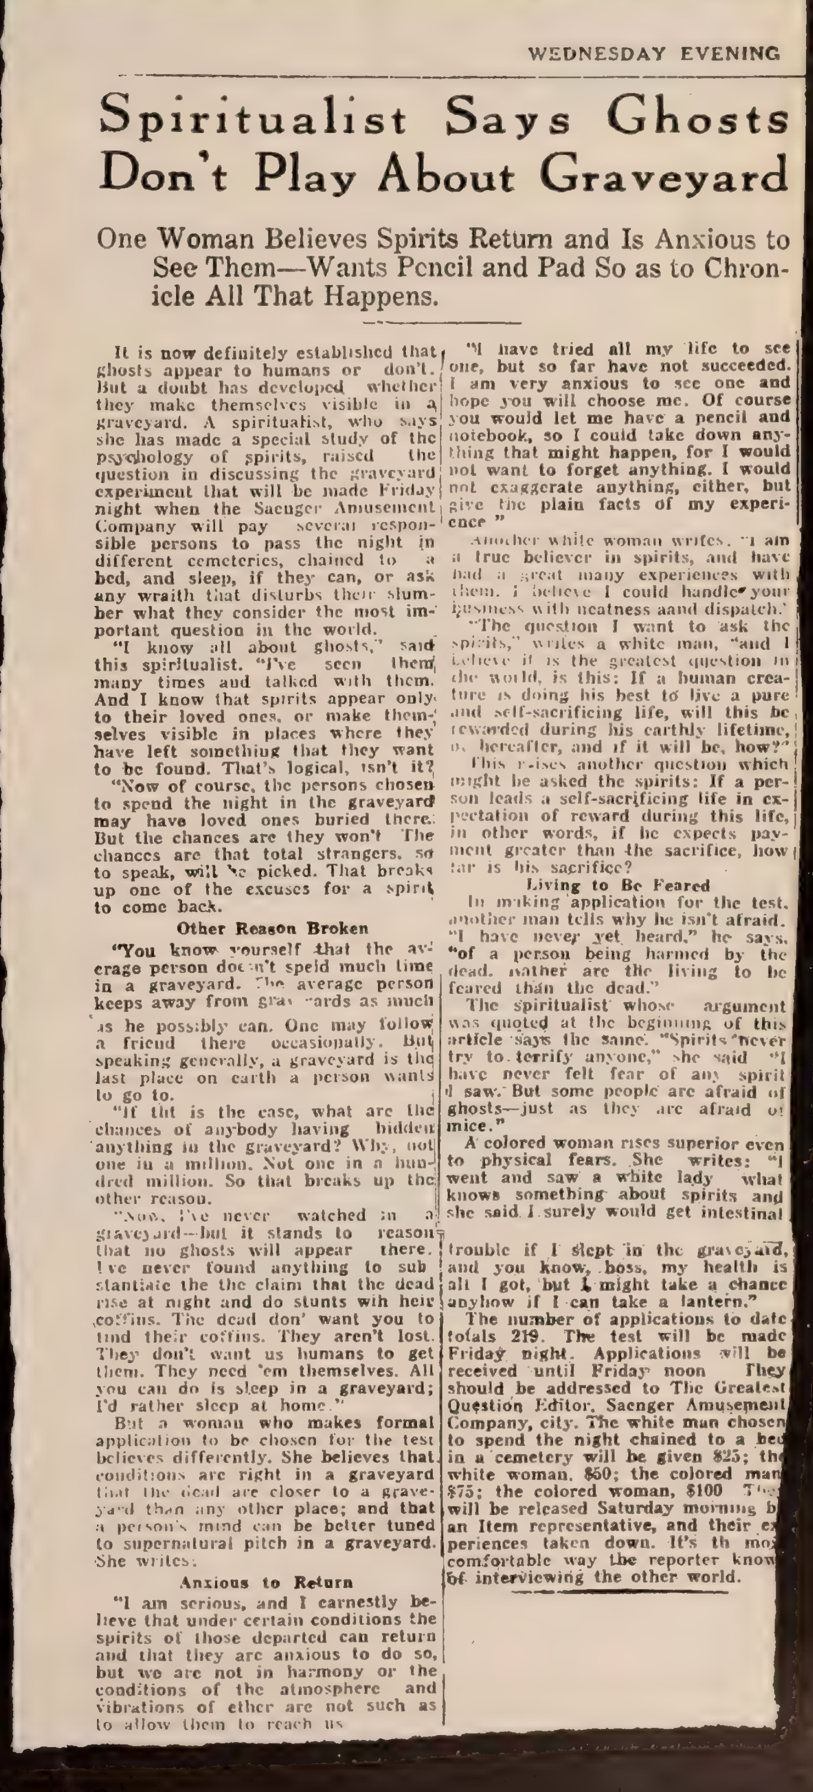
An employe of a storage battery business and a man therefore who may be presumed to be interested in live wires, writes. "I have often wondered if there was such a thing as a spirit. I'll take up your offer, and I don't even want a gun. If you chain me to the bed, I'll be there in the morning to receive the money"

"I don't need any weapons," says another applicant. "Just leave my good arm free so I can get a fair swat at the mosquitoes. That's the only thing I'm afraid of in any graveyard. I'll give the money to any charitable organization you name."

A negro writes "I would only be too glad to be scared to death at your expense. Please select me."

"I have no terror for ghosts," modestly confesses a business man.

January 23 promises to be a big night for science—the only doubt is, that the ha'nts will be so afraid of the concentrated determination and research that they won't face the music. Ghosts, accordng to revelations to date, are better at scaring weakminded persons out of their boots, and handing out flapdoodle to those who are willing to pay for it, than at doing anything constructive "in the interest of science."



WEDNESDAY EVENING

Spiritualist Says Ghosts Don't Play About Graveyard

One Woman Believes Spirits Return and Is Anxious to See Them—Wants Pencil and Pad So as to Chronicle All That Happens.

It is now definitely established that ghosts appear to humans or don't. But a doubt has developed whether they make themselves visible in a graveyard. A spiritualist, who says she has made a special study of the psychology of spirits, raised the question in discussing the graveyard experiment that will be made Friday night when the Saenger Amusement Company will pay several responsible persons to pass the night in different cemeteries, chained to a bed, and sleep, if they can, or ask any wraith that disturbs their slumber what they consider the most important question in the world.

"I know all about ghosts," said this spiritualist. "I've seen them many times and talked with them. And I know that spirits appear only to their loved ones, or make themselves visible in places where they have left something that they want to be found. That's logical, isn't it?

"Now of course, the persons chosen to spend the night in the graveyard may have loved ones buried there. But the chances are they won't The chances are that total strangers, so to speak, will be picked. That breaks up one of the excuses for a spirit to come back.

Other Reason Broken

"You know yourself that the average person doesn't speid much time in a graveyard. The average person keeps away from graveyards as much as he possibly can. One may follow a friend there occasionally. But speaking generally, a graveyard is the last place on earth a person wants to go to.

"If thit is the case, what are the chances of anybody having hidden anything in the graveyard? Why, not one in a million. Not one in a hundred million. So that breaks up the other reason.

"Now, I've never watched in a graveyard—but it stands to reason that no ghosts will appear there. I've never found anything to substantiate the the claim that the dead rise at night and do stunts wih heir coffins. The dead don' want you to find their coffins. They aren't lost. They don't want us humans to get them. They need 'em themselves. All you can do is sleep in a graveyard; I'd rather sleep at home."

But a woman who makes formal application to be chosen for the test believes differently. She believes that conditions are right in a graveyard that the dead are closer to a graveyard than any other place; and that a person's mind can be better tuned to supernatural pitch in a graveyard. She writes:

Anxious to Return

"I am serious, and I earnestly believe that under certain conditions the spirits of those departed can return and that they are anxious to do so, but we are not in harmony or the conditions of the atmosphere and vibrations of ether are not such as to allow them to reach us

"I have tried all my life to see one, but so far have not succeeded. I am very anxious to see one and hope you will choose me. Of course you would let me have a pencil and notebook, so I could take down anything that might happen, for I would not want to forget anything. I would not exaggerate anything, either, but give the plain facts of my experience"

Another white woman writes. "I am a true believer in spirits, and have had a great many experiences with them. I believe I could handle your business with neatness aand dispatch."

"The question I want to ask the spirits," writes a white man, "and I believe it is the greatest question in the world, is this: If a human creature is doing his best to live a pure and self-sacrificing life, will this be rewarded during his earthly lifetime, or hereafter, and if it will be, how?"

This raises another question which might be asked the spirits: If a person leads a self-sacrificing life in expectation of reward during this life, in other words, if he expects payment greater than the sacrifice, how far is his sacrifice?

Living to Be Feared

In making application for the test, another man tells why he isn't afraid. "I have never yet heard," he says, "of a person being harmed by the dead. rather are the living to be feared than the dead."

The spiritualist whose argument was quoted at the beginning of this article says the same. "Spirits never try to terrify anyone," she said "I have never felt fear of any spirit I saw. But some people are afraid of ghosts—just as they are afraid of mice."

A colored woman rises superior even to physical fears. She writes: "I went and saw a white lady what knows something about spirits and she said I surely would get intestinal trouble if I slept in the graveyard, and you know, boss, my health is all I got, but I might take a chance anyhow if I can take a lantern."

The number of applications to date totals 219. The test will be made Friday night. Applications will be received until Friday noon They should be addressed to The Greatest Question Editor, Saenger Amusement Company, city. The white man chosen to spend the night chained to a be in a cemetery will be given $25; th white woman, $50; the colored man $75; the colored woman, $100 Th will be released Saturday morning b an Item representative, and their ex periences taken down. It's th mo comfortable way the reporter know of interviewing the other world.

These news stories made New Orleans laugh.

Ghosts Shun Rain and Mind Own Business, It Is Found

Girl Finds Bouquet of Flowers on Bed After Spending Night in Cemetery—Man's Lantern Mysteriously Blows Out and Sock Is Misplaced During His Slumbers.

By THOMAS EWING DABNEY

One great doubt as to the hereafter has been solved. Ghosts know enough to keep in out of the rain. They know enough to attend to their own business.

Lift up your hearts and rejoice, therefore; for death has lost one of its horrors, as a result of the scientific expedition the Saenger Amusement company sent to the graveyards of New Orleans Friday night. Immortality consists in more than skeleton dances, parading around in sheets that render it impossible to distinguish a lady ha'nt from a gentleman, and in scaring strange children out of their boots.

If ghosts ever revealed themselves to mortals, they would have done so Friday night. The Saenger company's challenge was well enough advertised in The Item, and since no one doubts that a ghost has as much sense as a live person, and since politics doesn't enter into the question, it is to be presumed that ha'nts continue patronize this palladium after they have become disfranchised—though it is a fact that the advertising field in this direction has been very imperfectly worked. That however, is because Raleigh Schwartz hasn't gone after the business. If a man that fat could get himself put into jail, he could sell white space to a spook. Anyway, the fact that no wraiths showed up, proves conclusively that they have followed Laertes' advice to Ophelia, and don't reveal their beauties to the moon.

To Solve "Greatest Question."

A white girl, a white man and a colored man comprised the Saenger Amusement company's scientific expedition to seek the answer to "The Greatest Question." "The Greatest Question" happens to be the name of a dreadnaught drama of the movies coming to the Strand soon; but the purpose of this expedition was to ask the ha'nts to solve the riddle of the universe.

Miss Edna May Smith, of 2024 St. Peter, was the girl; A. M. Lefeve, of 3819 Bouden, the man, and Joseph Tim Burrell, employed in the mailing department of The Item, the colored man. They passed the night in three different cemeteries. The Saenger seekers feared that possibly ghosts might be prejudiced against certain localties, so they chose three persons for the test, and put them in cemeteries in various parts of the city.

They were chosen by lot from some 250 applicants. They received compensation as follows: Miss Smith, $75; Mr Lefeve, $25; and Tim Burrell, $50.

They were absolutely alone—not even allowed the company of a dog. But unknown to them, the Saenger company had watchmen stationed nearby, to prevent practical jokers from putting across any skulduggery. At the last moment, it was decided to do away with the leg irons chaining the seekers to their cots. The courage and the sincerity of the subjects warranted this.

Lantern Went Out.

Though they did not see any actual ghosts, they report some strange experience. Lefeve's lantern blew out. It is of the type of lantern that burns as steadily as taxes in a hurricane; but suddenly, it went out. Explain it if you can. Lefeve can't.

Then too, one of Lefeve's socks wasn't where he put it when he undressed. Explain that if you can. Lefeve's can't. He was asleep. He doesn't k[illegible] who took it from the grave and [illegible] it to a rose bush.

Finally, Miss Smith had a bouquet of roses when The Item representative found her very much at home in the graveyard Saturday morning. Eighteen witnesses positively declare she did not have the bouquet when she went there the night before. There is a delicious fascination about the suggestion that ghosts are as gallant as humans. And the fact that they do not leave their cards or make themselves known shows that they are more platonic.

Miss Smith, by the way, is quite a mystery in herself. She will not allow herself to be photographed full-face. Ghosts might reasonably be expected to want to know why and therefore reveal themselves. But the most they did—if they did that—was to lay some anonymous flowers near her sleeping foot. Not that she didn't have some experiences. She did. She had nearly a column of them. They are reproduced elsewhere. As the words fell from her lips they were caught by short-hand.

Lefeve Hard to Wake

It was like collecting a bill to wake Lefeve. His head was wrapped in his blanket and he was snoring like twin beds.

"Huh?" he said, after Foster Olroyd, manager of the Strand; Leon Harsh, of the publicity department, and the visitor from The Item had hammered on him a while. "Huh?"

"Did you see any spirits?"

"No, I didn't," said Lefeve, yarning and beginning to dress. "I've always been interested in spirits. I was especially hoping Old Taylor would come to me. There was a lot of things I wanted to ask him, as:

"Will Mayor Behrman get the dog catchers' vote?

"Why Ben Casanas wears a rose in his buttonhole Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and violets Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday?

"What General McCrory really thinks of the election?

"The day's winners?

"How long prohibition will last?

"What will happen to the policeman that witnessed the kindapping of Curly?

"What Jack and Van are going to do with Sassiety's goat?

"But no one showed up—leastways, not that I know of. Scout around, Olroyd, old hoss, and see if you can find my other sock. I can't finish putting on my pants until you do.

Wet Night in Dry Town

"Oh, yes, the light blew out. It's a good thing you birds gave us a tent last night. It sure rained. It was the wettest night I ever saw in a dry town. I don't know what made that light go out. It was the suddenest thing I ever saw. Now you saw it, now you didn't.

"Then after I got asleep—the first time, you understand—a Tom cat climbed up on the tomb next my tent and began to sing. Leastways, it sounded like a Tom cat. It had that vicious curl to its voice that convinced me it was a Tom Cat. I never heard a Tommie—I mean a Tabby-cat sing like he did. I was afraid to throw my shoe. I don't believe in ghosts—but there is no use stirring up trouble. Finally he went away after singing Pagliacci worse than Caruso. I wish General Arsene Perrilliat had been along. Maybe he'd learn something about the opera. It's a wonder Harry Brunswick Loeb didn't try to get my job.

"—On a rose bush? Who ever heard of a sock under the rose? That and the light going out! Well, so long as that $25 doesn't blow up, I'm satisfied."

But Lefeve gets more than $25 out of it. His office pals at H. and B. Beer's office bet him $115 that he dasn't sleep in the graveyard. He slept. He slept soundfully. And he's $135 to the mustard.

"Boss, it weren't so hard," said Tim Burrell, the colored seeker, "after I once got to sleep. But I didn't get to sleep until 'most daybreak. Too durned quiet. Then the win' came up and I hearn a noise like skeletons playing the xylophone on dey ribs, but I 'lows as it was on'y the magnolia leaves a-rustlin.' I sho' is glad to see you, boss."

"Would you sleep here tonight, Tim for another $50?"

Tim considered carefully.

"I gotter work tonight, boss.'

Tim is a diplomat.

Said Miss Edna May Smith:

"After being escorted to my bed in the cemetery, and bidding a last good-night to my escorts, I tried to compose myself for slumber.

Considered it a Joke

"At first I considered the whole proceeding as a huge joke, but when I glanced around into the black, still night, which appeared to be the blackest, stillest night I ever remember experiencing, the joke wasn't quite so funny, and the more I thought of it the more reason I had for coming to the conclusion that the joke was on me.

"An owl, perched on a nearby tomb, croaked in an uncanny voice, "Who's Who"—but by that time I could hardly tell who I really was, much less answer the owl.

"After sitting shivering for what seemed to me an eternity, I decided to try to sleep. Sleep doesn't come to one in a graveyard as soon as your head touches the pillow—oh, no! I tossed and turned. I tried to count the sheep jumping over the fence, but each sheep appeared to be a tombstone, and by the time I reached 901,873 I found it was no use. Oh! how I wished for just any kind of noise.

"I was quite conscious of all that was around me—but in thinking of the many forms under the earth, I went down, and down. I had all the time in the world—for I knew definitely that morning would never come. My thoughts dwelt on this old earth. I wondered just how old it was, how many, many forms were lying, wrapped in their last sleep, right under me. I followed this old earth from the beginning of time, through all the ages, up to the present day—or rather night. The formations of the earth and the various forms of organic life that had inhabited the earth since the beginning. How many graveyards were under my own special graveyard. Of course I realized that none of them could be quite as nice as mine, and was actually beginning to grow fond of my little cot and its surroundings. I classed the formations of the earth into a chapter of a great book, each stratum being a page. I turned pages and pages, from the first age, where new forms appeared as the leaves were being laid, the forms growing larger as each leaf was placed. I turned pages, up to the present time, and was ready to turn a new leaf when I noticed in the dim light an ugly shaped lizard making its way towards me.

Put Cover Over Head

"Now I have no special fondness for crawling creatures, but this certainly was the ugliest lizard I have ever met. And how it grew! With every inch closer to me it seemed to grow in size, yes, it grew to immense proportions, and was covered with horns. Its green eyes shone in the darkness like auto lights.

"I put my head under the covers and again tried to sleep. The night grew stiller and blacker, and the blacker the night, the whiter the tomb stones seemed to grow. They were constantly shifting around. They kept coming closer. I was in the center of a great crowd of dancing tombstones. A bell somewhere was softly tolling the midnight hour. A white mist seemed floating towards me, and as it came nearer the mist lifted, showing a grinning skeleton perched on the top of one of the tombstones. He pointed his finger at me, each joint in his finger visible. He leaped at me. I jumped and attempted to run. A cricket jumped on my face and I woke up.

"Again I fell asleep, and to anybody that needs absolute quiet to fall asleep, I can certainly recommend the cemetery as the spot for a good siesta. Again a white figure appeared before me, and this time I thought I would be brave. However, he put me at my ease immediately by remarking: 'Fear not, for I am with you.'

"Now I knew very well he was there, but whether with me or against me, I couldn't tell. But not to be outdone in politeness I inquired about his health, and asked what he wanted. He said he wanted a story for The Item and when I told him I was very sorry to disappoint him, that I hadn't "anything to say," he shed tears, yes, real tears, and as they fell on my face I awoke with a start. The rain was beating down on my face, I was wet through. In the east a gray light appeared in the sky and I rejoiced, for the day was breaking—no very nice day, to be sure, but any old day looked good to me."

Twelve Big Features That Will Pack Houses and Build Big Bank Balances

IN an idle moment, Sherlock Holmes declared to his friend, Watson, that if he could lift the roofs off all the houses in London and peep in upon the hidden lives of the inmates, the number of tragedies would be appalling. This is what does. He raises the roof and you peep in with him. They are your neighbors, that "Tex" introduces to you. Everyday folk they are, but they have their masks off and their heart rendering tragedies and carefully concealed sins, are unexpectedly revealed with a vividness that is startling.

GLEN WHITE AS "TEX"

It is this realism and humanness of the twelve five-reel "Tex" stories, in addition to the sustained interest and mystery always associated with the best detective stories, that will pack picture houses, and build big bank balances.

WHY did she hide the name of the real criminal and thus compel the man she loved to suffer imprisonment and disgrace? Was it the dread of scandal which kept her lips sealed? This is a typical situation in the "Tex" series, which gives these detective stories a gripping irresistible appeal, which is responsible for the dramatic touch that sky-rockets them far beyond the average detective story.

in

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS"

Screen adaptation by Lucien Hubbard

Directed by GEORGE TERWILLIGER

The greatest race that ever happened has been perpetuated on the screen. It will be run over and over again before the straining eyes of millions in the film version of this famous Drury Lane melodrama, "The Sporting Duchess." The plunging hooves of blooded animals, and the craning necks of blooded aristocrats and the sidelong, lurking gaze of plotting conspirators and the prayers of frightened souls all hanging on the turn of fate that lies in the hearts of those tearing animals—all form a brew of drama in this masterpiece of the screen.

Alice Joyce playing the role, is queenly. This is a film that will make one's blood seethe.

Interiors that Act

A. Béla Viragh-Flower
Art Director
Park-Whiteside Productions

One of the innovations of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside is that which has been developed in the scenic effects under the skillful direction of A. Béla Viragh-Flower.

Too few of the film producers have realized the possibilities of interiors. Some of the better stage producers, such as Belasco and Ordynski, of the Metropolitan Opera House, have proven that a whole story can virtually be told before a word is spoken, if the backgrounds and hangings are of the right kind.

In the new school of scenic art, we find such masters as Bakst, Anisfeld, Urban, Pogany and Wenger. Add to these the name of Flower, one of the greatest in film circles, because he has devoted his genius to the perfection of interiors related only to the screen.

"Interiors that Act" are a development of Park-Whiteside Productions. You will recognize Park-Whiteside Productions the moment the scenes appear on the screen by the fact that they are marvelous actors in themselves.

They tell the story before the human actors have moved a muscle or spoken a word.

Watch the other producers imitate Flower's Interiors that Act, but more particularly be the first in your city to take advantage of this brand new screen innovation.

Concerning Edward Small, Inc.

The Edward Small organization appreciates the coveted position to which it has risen in the motion picture field.

We know now, more than ever, that we must render a distinct service to the producer.

We did not spring " full blown " into being. Nothing of the sensational has attended our growth, nor has the element of chance contributed to our success.

We have continually prospered in a field strewn with the wreckage of transient competition.

That we have prospered and outdistanced organizations begun, apparently, with similar intent, is due we believe, to constant fidelity to the high resolve with which we entered the lists. That resolve was to render a service of such business like character to the producer, the artist and the author. upon whom our success is dependent, that we should come to be considered, by each and all, as essential to their highest individual and collective good.

The work of Edward Small, Inc., has been done in a new, but in a well-thought-out way. The artist, the author and the producer know that through us, they can transact business with a clean-cut business result. In our capacity of liaison between producer, artist and author, it is our business to represent, not only artists of known ability, in a way that the producer is kept in constant touch with their activities, but to bring new faces and new artists to the attention of the producer, and so represent, the heretofore unrecognized.

We live in a world where nothing is permanent—but change. A fickle motion picture public demands new loves each day. As the world goes 'round old people die and new are born to take their places, so in the Motion Picture World, old personalities wear out and new ones must necessarily be found to replace them.

Among artists, in a peculiar sense, only the fittest survive over long periods of glory and become standardized, and in an industry of such proportions as that of motion pictures, the needs of today, are doubled day after tomorrow.

A constant stream of new artists, of whom new things can be said and for whom new interest can be created, must pass into the studios and be utilized in productions.

An important function of Edward Small, Inc., is to acquaint the producer with these artists, new and old.

We have attempted in the past, and are highly resolved for the future to do this liaison work between the artist and the producer, and the author and the producer with such expedition and completeness that neither can afford to leave us out of the reckoning.

Faithfully,

Edward Small

Time was when the scenic picture was merely pretty
And the single-reel was simply a filler—

But that was then---and this is now

Today an "Educational" scenic attraction may be the brightest feature of the bill!

It has beauty—and action!
It has interest—and story!
It has pep and life and speed!

Today the modern showman knows the value of "Educational" short-subjects. The old-fashioned scenic has gone—never to return.

The Lord May Temper the Wind to the Shorn Lamb, but He Expects Motion Picture Exhibitors to Take Care of Themselves

THE fact that the exhibitor's prosperity is in direct ratio to the quality of the posters he uses is too well known to even need additional comment. Equally true is the statement that the RITCHEY poster is infinitely superior to all others in its ticket selling qualities. Every member of our entire organization focuses his efforts upon the final box-office results, for it is our business to make ticket-selling posters!

It is the exhibitor's business to get them!

It is just a case of co-ordinating the supply and demand. The exhibitor wants, and needs the finest posters attainable—which, of necessity, are RITCHEY posters. That is so because in the RITCHEY organization are the greatest poster artists, poster printers, advertising experts, and advertising psychologists in the world!

The result of their efforts is the production of perfect motion picture posters. The exhibitor should centre his efforts upon getting them!

The Theatre's Influence on the Picture

¶ Everywhere you go today the theatre is the thing.

Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver—even in Los Angeles where production has always ruled—they are talking of Grauman's and Loew's new sites, of what Fox and Goldwyn and Paramount will do, of Sol Lesser and Gore Bros. entrance into the First National, etc.

The theatre seems supreme.

And this fact is of much significance to the picture and the trade.

These many new theatres—there seems no limit to their size, cost, magnificence and the building advantages thrown recklessly their way—are going to demand a new order of picture.

There's no doubt about that. The far sighted producer already realizes it and feels the heavy responsibility.

Considerable and fine creature genius will be demanded.

Fine showmanship will be needed, too.

Two to five thousand seats will have to be filled—not merely on crowded Broadway but in many cities and in several competing theatres in these cities.

In the expansion of the picture, and the modes of presentation to meet this increased public demand, this highest class demand, the point should be made right now and emphatically that the picture itself should supply the new attractions.

We must not and we need not borrow from the speaking stage, opera, concert singing, instrumental music, etc., unless these borrowed attractions are made incidental parts of and apt interpretations of the picture itself.

If this is not done, not only will the possibilities of the picture be carelessly overlooked but its wonderful hold upon the masses will not be taken advantage of, and, in our opinion, the show will suffer.

Certainly, at this stage of the game, we don't want to subsidize the picture to less profitable entertainment and—what is highly important, to stultify its artistic development.

In our opinion, some wonderful new angles will be successfully developed this year in motion picture entertainment.

Other problems arise too out of our big new fleet of theatres.

Will the cities be over theatred?

We believe not. Prosperity is ahead of us, inevitably. Better pictures and better theatres will attract new classes. This is the day of the picture theatre in the entertainment world. And we have a new kind of picture theatre. We cannot use, for comparison, past traditions and conditions.

It is true that the building of new theatres in the larger cities is due, to a considerable extent, to the determination of the producer to secure first run representation.

It seems to us that too much insistence is laid upon first run representation and that good pictures—the right kind—do not need this artificial assistance.

Just the same it is obvious that the first run is a necessary factor to the advertising and selling of the pictures; and, at any rate, the producer is out to get it, at any cost.

One excellent readjustment will come out of the new theatre building. It will break down the closed town situation.

It is a dangerous thing for the customer to dictate prices. It has never been helpful nor possible in any other business, and it won't be in this.

Will there be enough good pictures for these new theatres?

Writing from Los Angeles and looking back to New York we would say yes—that never before has creative effort and the means to back it been so active and abundant.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Some of the men who make Chicago the important film center that it is, and concerning whom William A. Johnson speaks as will be noted on t opposite page. Top row, beginning at the left—George Kleine, veteran producer, and for years an important figure in the industry; Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company; George K. Spoor, of Essanay fame. Second row—Ross C. Cropper, president of the Cropper Distributin Corporation; Nathan Ascher, whose chain of theatres makes him internationally famous; Colonel Wm. N. Selig, another of the veteran producers; Peter Schaefer, one of the prominent exhibitors of the Windy City. Next row—Max Levy, manager of Robertson-Cole's Chicago exchange; O. F. Spahr, gener manager of the Enterprise Optical Company; Henry Weiss, manager of the First National Chicago office; E. S. Eschman, manager of Pathe's Chicag exchange; Ben Beadell, Chicago manager for Select; I. L. Lesserman, manager of the Chicago Universal exchange

Chicago's Place on the Map

By Wm. A. Johnston

"ON to Chicago!" was the title of an editorial we wrote sometime ago, in which a fervid appeal was made for attendance at one of our ever-disappointing exhibitors' conventions.

"On to Chicago," grinned a sophisticated New York newspaper man who was at that time a member of the News editorial staff, "why, everybody's on to Chicago."

This same individual is now a resident of Chicago and he refuses to see anything funny at all about the facetious remark he once made. In fact he avers solemnly that anyone, especially a New Yorker, makes a joke of himself when he attempts a joke on Chicago.

All other Chicagoans seem to feel the same way about it, especially those in the picture business. They have a kindly toleration for the provincial New Yorker.

"You fellows do a lot of talking," they say, "we deliver the goods."

And apparently they're about right.

Chicago is a very large dot on the motion picture map. It is a big exchange center—is, has been, always will be. We shall see there, some day, one of those big joint clearing houses which the film business is destined to have;—Chicago will have the biggest of them all.

Right now the exchanges cover a lot of floor space, we can recall them as small offices. They have grown so large today that the "loop" doesn't want to house them any longer, under present roofs, because of the film they store. Chicago needs a big film building very badly. It will be inadvisable to scatter the exchanges. The exhibitors' interests as a customer and their own interests as selling agents demand that the exchanges be housed together.

Chicago will always dominate as a distributing center, in the film business as in other business in which speedy shipments are necessary. It has the striking geographical advantage. Rothacker, for instance, while he is establishing printing laboratories in Los Angeles and New York will always maintain headquarters in Chicago because of its shipping advantages, especially in distributing the prints, and Rothacker ought to know.

Chicago's position in the film business has changed greatly. Its career in the film industry meanwhile has been prominent and interesting.

In the early days Chicago held New York's present place, as a political center. Here were held those exciting meetings, secret or supposedly secret, out of which were born the General, Universal and Mutual companies. Today that is all changed. The political pendulum has swung to and sticks to New York. Chicago keeps a large ear toward the eastern metropolis and Chicago's hands are very busy distributing film. Politics are decidedly incidental. Chicagoans Twentieth Century to New York nowadays, get an earful and go back to work. They say that once in a while is a plenty.

Because its exchanges are important, Chicago needs good men as exchange managers; consequently Chicago is receiving right along the men who make records elsewhere. The next stepping stone is apt to be the post of exchange manager in New York.

Here's the roster today:

Pathe Film Exchange, E. A. Eschmann;
Select Pictures Corporation, Ben Beadell;
Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, I. Van Runkel;
Vitagraph Incorporated, Fred Aiken;
Fox Film Corporation, C. W. Eckhardt.
Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, Max Levy;
Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., I. L. Lesserman;
Famous Players-Lasky, Fred Cresswell;
Metro Pictures Corporation, Jack Grauman;
First National Exhibitors, R. C. Seery and Harry Weiss;
United Pictures Theatres of America, Jack O'Toole.

Next year we may need some of these men in New York.

The Capital Film Company, headed by President Barnhardt, Treasurer Milligan and General Manager C. Eddy Eccles has become a prominent factor in the purchase of world rights to pictures as has The Cropper Distributing Corporation with Ross C. Cropper at the helm.

As a states right mart Chicago continues to be an important factor and among the companies active in this field are Mickey Film Corporation, Ludwig Schindler, Pres., Arthur Lowy, General Manager, which also has recently acquired the U. S. rights to the Sedish Biograph's big picture, "The Woman He Chose"; Bee Hive Exchange, R. C. Cropper, president; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, J. L. Friedman, president; Silee Film Exchange, Lee Herz, president; Unity Photoplay Company, Frank Zambrino, president; Doll Van Film Corporation, D. N. Vandawalker, mgr.; Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, H. A. Spanuth, president; Hyman Attractions and others.

Chicago used to be quite a producing center, too. Formerly the trade paper editor spent most of his time in the spacious offices of George Kleine, S. S. Hutchinson, George K. Spoor, Wm. N. Selig, talking about stars, directors, stories and pictures in general. Today the well-known Chicago studios of Selig and Essanay are closed. Their respective heads are not idle, it's true. Colonel Selig, who made the first big American picture, "The Spoilers," will, in our opinion, make more triumphs and, in fact, has recently scored with "Auction of Souls" and "The Lost City," made in Los Angeles. George K. Spoor is wealthy enough to devote himself to his hobby, the technical side of the business and in addition to his large printing activities is about to launch a new camera which may bring about a considerable technical advance in picture making.

George Kleine is bringing out "Deliverance," the important Helen Keller picture and is doing a considerable business with reissues of "Quo Vadis" and "Last Days of Pompei" through independent exchange distribution. The American Film Company headquarters in Chicago alone remain completely unchanged with its regular release through Pathe of the output of the Santa Barbara studios.

The Capital Film Company has opened its new extensive, executive offices in the Consumers' Building. The Emerald Film Company is producing with Billy West and Alice Howell at its Chicago studio. Joe Friedman of the Celebrated Players is making the "Gump" cartoons. The Rothacker studios are busy right along with the making of industrial pictures. H. D. Spanuth is turning out "Sermonettes" and his new "Billy Whiskers" comedies. Ebony is putting some comedies on the state rights market and recently released "Do the Dead Talk?"

The well-known George Kleine library of educational films and all of the Essanay subjects suitable for institutional showing have been taken over by A. F. Victor. Mr. Victor, whose Victor Animatiograph plant at Davenport, Iowa, has been enlarged to a capacity of fifty machines a day is now making his headquarters and devoting his entire time to the Safety Standard Film for the portable machine, to the very large and important work of the supply of adequate film service to go with it, to the perfection of the amateur camera and to all those big pioneer problems concerned with the bringing of the motion picture to the school, church and home.

We all glimpse at the possibilities of the huge new field for the film. We all know that its successful development is inevitable. It looks right now as if Chicago would be its center and permanent headquarters.

Chicago is the home of the Motiograph, one of American's best known projection machines, both here and abroad. A. C. Roebuck is now devoting practically all of his time to the greatly enlarged plant and business of the Enterprise Optical Company; and O. F. Spahr expects soon to have his office organization so complete that he can frequently get from his hard working desk and into the field.

Among the outstanding film personages in Chicago today, we find very prominent the heads of the large theatre chains. We talk a good deal and print a good deal about Nate Ascher, Sam Katz, Joseph Trinz, Aaron Jones, Peter J. Schaefer, Andrew Karzas and other leading showmen.

The Goldwyn Corporation has seen fit to centre its theatre affiliations in Chicago. The partnership deal involves not only the sixteen Ascher houses in Chicago but other Ascher and Goldwyn theatres in other cities, twenty-eight in all.

We must add, too, that Chicago in its Chicago Allied Amusement Association, to say nothing of its bright handy Bulletin, bi-weekly, conducted by Dr. Sam S. Atkinson of Evanston, has got about the most compact and powerful theatre local in the United States. They beat state censorship, conducted the theatre safely through the coal strike, actors strike and other labor troubles and now have the "Flu" situation, ably and safely in hand.

More power to them and more power to Chicago.

Powers Sees Producers in Bankruptcy

Foreign Situation Precarious and High Artists' Salaries and Overhead Driving Industry on Rocks, Says Universal Official

A NOTE of warning to producers of America is sounded by P. A. Powers, president of the Powers Film Products Co., and treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in a statement issued last week. Mr. Powers urges drastic retrenchment in expenditures for artists' salaries and for stories as the only way to meet the situation which he declares will obtain when the unprecedentedly unfavorable exchange on foreign money virtually cuts in on our foreign market.

"What is the outlook of the motion picture business?" said Mr. Powers. "I regret to say I am rather pessimistic. However, there is enough optimism in this business to offset that.

"The facts which have presented themselves to me in the last six months have convinced me that the motion picture industry in the United States is going to be up against a tough time, and apparently the large factors in the industry do not realize what is in store for them, or do not want to.

Conditions Getting Worse

"For the past four years, or since the war started, the motion picture industry in the United States has been blessed with unprecedented prosperity. Manufacturers have been able to secure unheard of prices for their productions both in America and throughout the world. This condition was due to the fact that European competition was entirely wiped out and we had practical control of the world's markets at our prices during the war. This does not mean that the industry as a whole has benefited by this condition, but the artists and writers have benefited by it to a very great extent, as you very rarely hear now that the motion picture industry is not paying the writers anything for the "children of their brain." They are getting now, and have been in the past, colossal prices for the picture rights for stories. The artists have also materially benefited by the conditions which have existed for the past four years and their salaries have increased by leaps and bounds.

P. A. Powers

"There has been keen competition among the producers for stories and artists, prices have been paid which have been startling to the general public. That was entirely due to the fact that we had the world's market and receipts from the product from the entire universe.

"Since the cessation of hostilities, conditions have changed United States and the European exchange to such an extent that foreign buyers at the present time are unable to fulfill their contracts as they could during the war when the exchange was at par. And in endeavoring to fulfill their obligations, foreign buyers have practically bankrupted themselves, with the result that they are now unable to purchase American pictures at wartime prices and pay for them in dollars, with the consequent result that American producers find themselves with an accumulation of productions which they are unable to market in foreign territories. This condition will continue to get worse instead of better and unless the American producers are satisfied to accept foreign currency for their productions they will force the foreign buyers into the production of pictures, which they had suspended during the war, and the American producers will find themselves up against that competition.

"To meet this future competition, it will be impossible for the American producers to continue paying the colossal salaries to artists and the phenomenal prices to authors for their services and stories, although they continue to do so, notwithstanding the facts that I have stated. Only last week I heard of a story which was sold in the neighborhood of $200,000, and in view of the many contracts which the American producers have entered into with stars and authors, they will find it a very difficult proposition to contend with. It will result sooner or later in considerable embarrassment in the industry.

"As a general thing, men in this business do not want to look cold facts

STATEMENT ISSUED BY W. E. FAULKNER, AGENT O LORD NORTHCLIFFE, BRITISH EDITOR

"MY mission is solely concerned with the creation of a better understanding between America and England through the medium of the 'Motion Picture.'

"Through unification of ideas and closer relationship in aims and ideals of the two great English-speaking nations, the trade interests of both should be greatly fostered.

"It is my belief that the 'movies', which speak a language understood by all, are the greatest source not only of entertainment, but of social harmony, ever known in the history of civilization.

"Personal contact is one of the greatest factors in promoting a better understanding between two peoples. With the seeming barrier of three thousand miles of water, what power is equal to the 'movies' in accomplishing such result, and serving as the channel of communication between us?

"The British people want to know more of the American people and the only practical means of acquiring an intimate knowledge of each other, is through visualization.

"I am very happy to state from personal contact with Lord Northcliffe, and my affiliation with the 'Northcliffe Press', that it has at all times been our aim to promote and maintain the best of good relationships between the American and the British peoples."

Exhibitors Demand a Say-S

Cleveland Body Believes It Has Right To Speak for Self Rather Than Producer

THE Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association on Jan. 21 sent the following letter to Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, asking pertinent questions as regards the Americanization campaign in which the picture will aid. No reply has been received by Feb. 7.

"Your letter of Dec. 30th, a copy of which has reached all our members, has been taken up for consideration by our association and, needless to say, we heartily endorse the Joint Congressional Committee resolution to 'upbuild and strengthen the spirit of Americanism within our people.'

"This association, at our Chicago Convention in September 1918, submitted a plan to Mr. D. K. Niles, representing the Department of Labor and Mr. William A. Brady, representing the Motion Picture Producers, to centralize screen publicity activities in such a way as to compel screen 'slackers' to do their bit and thus give 100% efficiency service to the Government.

"We, who are familiar with the methods of certain producers of industrial and educational films; films such as your department would, we understand, use in 'setting forth the accomplishments of American manhood and American institutions,' were compelled, in order to protect our screen owner members, to send out, last July, a circular, a copy of which I herewith enclose. This circular was mailed to all screen advertisers. It is self explanatory. We had been imposed upon during the war and we issued it, as a warning to producers and screen advertisers, not wishing to cause friction during the war.

"To be brief, exhibitors in general and, Cleveland in particular, want some very necessary information, inasmuch as there has been no opportunity for official action by a convention of exhibitors and we respe fully submit that the producers ha no authority whatsoever to ten the use of the exhibitor's screens any purpose whatever without givi official recognition to the scre owners, the exhibitors, in order tl certain abuses, with which your partment may not be familiar, may prevented. Our members are aski for details which the writer can furnish. I have evidence of a cc clusive nature, covering nearly ev state, showing the same general fe ing of dissatisfaction over the la of details. Your letter states, 'T plan is to produce, distribute and e hibit films,' etc. Please state these films to be new subjects or su jects to be taken, in part or as whole, from so-called 'Industrial a Educational films' catalogues now existence? The reason I am instruct to ask this question is, that ma films 'of superior entertainm value' of the above class, in f nearly all, carry an advertising propriation unknown to our patro and without the slighest regard as any remuneration to the screen ow or his organization.

"We are absolutely sure of the sition we assume regarding exist catalogued productions. It is qu possible to avoid the lease friction, we should in a patriotic movement this nature, but it is impossible avoid it and produce results unl the entire proposition, to the last tail, will stand investigation by exhibitors official representatives the Supervising Committee of Ind trial Films. This, we are sure, y department will grant us in the sp that we ask it.

"We do not intend any part this communication as a reflect upon the one exhibitor member your committee, Mr. Harry Crand of Washington, D. C. His integ is beyond question."

Carpentier Signed by Robertson-Cole

KIRKPATRICK'S STATEMENT ON THE SIGNING OF CARPENTIER

A. S. KIRKPATRICK, Vice President and General Manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, in commenting on the signing of Georges Carpentier said that it was one of the best strokes made by any motion picture firm in many months.

"Carpentier no doubt will be one of the best drawing cards a producer has ever given an exhibitor," said Mr. Kirkpatrick. "He is a fighter every inch of him. His war records prove that and above all he is a gentleman. Americans only know him as the idol of France and as the contender for Jack Dempsey's title. He is reticent and America wants to see the man who has been thrice decorated by France. The Carpentier Special no doubt will be the knockout of the year.

"While other firms capitalized the rumor that they were after the Frenchman's services, Robertson-Cole quietly worked until they had the contract in hand and then gave the news to the trade world in an official statement."

Heavyweight Champion of Europe, and a War Idol of His People Through Bravery During Struggle, to Make a Motion Picture Here

GEORGES CARPENTIER, world war hero, idol of France, heavyweight champion of Europe and one of the most talked of men in the world today, has been signed by Robertson-Cole to appear exclusively in motion pictures distributed by that firm.

The announcement was given to the film trade in the following statement of R. S. Cole.

"In view of the various conflicting reports which have been circulated as to Carpentier coming to this country, and also as to his having been engaged to appear in motion pictures, we feel it advisable to clear up the uncertainty by making the definite announcement that there has been executed at Paris, an agreement between this company, Descamps and Carpentier, whereby we have the exclusive right to Carpentier's services in a motion picture to be produced in this country and intended for world's distribution.

Coming Here March 8

"The writer was in London and present at the Beckett-Carpentier fight and in view of Carpentier's victory realized he must naturally be the next logical opponent for Dempsey, and that in view of this the American public would be extremely interested in becoming better acquainted with Carpentier. He therefore immediately opened negotiations with him with the idea of arranging along the lines as specified above. The negotiations were carried on by the writer's partner from the time that the writer left London, with the final result that a definite contract has been entered into.

"Carpentier, together with his manager, Descamps, will proceed to America on March 8 and will start his screen work for our production immediately upon his arrival."

Motion picture producers were after Carpentier the minute the big Frenchman sent Beckett, pride of England, to the floor for the count. Mr. Cole, who was present at the bout, lost no time in signing the Frenchman, and before Carpentier left the stadium on that eventful night Mr. Cole interviewed him. H. F. Robertson, partner of Mr. Cole, concluded arrangements.

Although Carpentier had signed with Robertson-Cole several weeks ago, officials of that concern would not make known the fact until the contract bearing the champion's signature, together with Descamps', his manager, was in the New York office.

Robertson-Cole executives realized the drawing power of the French idol. To back up his world war record, is his position in the athletic world. Acclaimed a marvel physically, with a mind that has won him honor after honor, and with the highest decorations France can give a favorite son, Carpentier will no doubt take the silent drama by storm.

In the columns after columns of publicity on the giant Frenchman appearing daily in the newspapers throughout the world, the leading sport critics have marked him "as the gentleman of the ring." Screen tests have proven, it

Nat'l Board Holds Luncheon

Pleas for Children's Pictures and a "Free Screen" Are Favorably Received

THE National Board of Review of Motion Pictures held its annual ncheon on Saturday, January 31, at he Hotel McAlpin. Those who spoke this last gathering, consisting of approximately 150 members of the Na- onal Board and a few invited guests, ere Miss Mary Shaw, stage artist, and iss Mary Gray Peck, lecturer and ub woman, both members of the Na- al Board's Advisory Committee; liam A. Brady, president of the onal Association of the Motion ure Industry; Major Raymond lman, Secretary of the American- on committee, appointed by Secre- ry of the Interior Lane; Rupert ughes, from the Authors' League; d George Middleton, playwright.

Miss Shaw won applause when she in a plea for special performances r children, and indeed for special eatres for children. The old and ddle-aged people, she thought, might for themselves, and if they some- nes saw motion pictures they did'nt re for it was their own fault for not ing more critical and making their sires known.

William A. Brady declared he was ere "to boost the motion picture." said that the motion picture had de such a record during the war riod with regard to loyalty, news ievement as well as general im- vement of quality, as to demon- ate that it did not need the inter- ence of legalized censorship. "Now all times the screen should be left Let us not permit a gag to be ed upon the motion picture such as exercised by the censor board in io when it prohibited the showing Villa's picture on the screen 'lest it ite to hatred,' when every news- er in the state had published it. finest agency to expose the Red xpose the corrupt politicians, is the ion picture."

Ir. Everett Dean Martin, chairman the National Board of Review and ctor of Cooper Union Forum, who presided at the luncheon, expressed his belief that the growing spirit of intolerance in this country was at the basis of any demand for legal censorship. He hoped that this spirit of intolerance would not enter into the use of the motion picture for Americanization purposes. This seemed to be guarded against, however, by the broad attitude towards the motion picture taken by Secretary Lane's committee on Americanization.

Marine Film Records Get Showing

The first public showing of the official record films of the activities of the United States Marine Corps in France and Germany was made on February 4 before the S. Rankin Drew Post, of the American Legion, at its general meeting and monthly dinner at Keen's, New York. As a part of the war records of the Navy Department, of which the Marines are a part, these films were ordered made by a detail in command of Lieutenant Commander Wells Hawks, U. S. Navy. He was assisted by Lieutenant C. S. Hutton, officer in charge of aerial photography in France. The photography was done by Chief Yeoman Harold Wenstrom, who before going in the service was a Metro cameraman.

J. Von Herberg Arrives in Seattle

Manager J. Von Herberg of Jensen and Von Herberg returned to Seattle Saturday after a month's business trip to the East including attendance at the First National Atlantic City convention, at which he was elected a director and trustee of the new organization.

His first announcement upon returning was that he had completed arrangements for a picture franchise for the new Jensen and Von Herberg picture palace in Seattle—the cost of which by his revised estimate will be $2,000,000.

Recent Appointments of Famous Players

Al Lichtman, general manager, department of distribution, announced the following appointments in the Famous Players-Lasky sales force, effective February 9:

Fred Creswell has been promoted to special representative in charge of the offices at Chicago and Minneapolis, and Indianapolis when opened.

Harris P. Wolfberg, formerly branch manager at Cincinnati, has been promoted to special representative, supervising the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Cleveland exchanges. Mr. Wolfberg succeeds Harry H. Buxbaum, who recently assumed the management of the New York branch exchange. Fred Strief, formerly a salesman in the Cincinnati territory, succeeds Mr. Wolfberg as branch manager. Allan S. Moritz has been advanced to the position of manager of the Buffalo branch exchange.

Board of Review Label on All Film

Adolph Zukor Declares Paramount-Artcraft Films Shall Hereafter Carry Stamp of National Board's Approval After Main Title

TO help the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, and also to assist exhibitors in the fight against official motion picture censorship, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is taking steps to have the insignia, "Passed by the National Board of Review" carried at the beginning of all Paramount-Artcraft pictures so that it will not fail to be seen when the pictures are shown in the theatre.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has ordered that the National Board's stamp of approval hereafter shall be carried in the beginning of all Paramount-Artcraft Pictures, instead of at the end, and has appealed to all exhibitors booking Paramount pictures to keep this approval in the film when it is shown.

Label at End Often Omitted

It has been the custom in the past to append the National Board's approval to the end of pictures. Many exhibitors, failing to appreciate the importance of this approval, have been in the habit of eliminating this stamp from the picture. Thus when the picture is shown in the theatre, even though the picture has been approved by the National Board, it fails to let the people know that such approval has been given.

Effective immediately, it is announced from the Famous Players' offices, all Paramount-Artcraft pictures will carry the National Board's stamp right after the main title. As soon as practicable this approval will be made a part of the main title, so that it will be complete.

Adolph Zukor

"I am moved to take this step," said Mr. Zukor, in explaining his action, "because I am firmly convinced that the National Board of Review needs the backing of everybody in the motion picture business in the admirable fight it is waging against official film censorship. All Paramount-Artcraft pictures are approved by the National Board before they are released. This not only is a protection to us, but is of immense benefit to the exhibitor showing our pictures.

"I wish to call the attention of exhibitors to the importance of carrying this approval on all their pictures. The National Board is composed of a representative body of men and women, who, acting without pay, work in cooperation with motion picture producers and pass upon all pictures before they are released. This board is absolutely free of any semblance of control by producers and distributors; and their approval of a picture is an unbiased expression of opinion. The National Board is opposed to arbitrary censorship at the hands of municipal, state or federal authorities, and is conducting a strong fight against such censorship. It behooves all exhibitors to cooperate with this board, because official censorship not only is vicious and un-American but it also can do incalculable harm to the industry, as has been proved in those communities where censorship already exists.

"I appeal to all exhibitors to join with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in standing firmly back of the National Board of Review. If the National Board approves a picture it seems to me that every exhibitor should not only permit such approval to be shown with the picture, but should make an effort to give a good display of the board's stamp. It is obvious that if a person in the audience sees on a picture the emblem, 'Passed by the National Board of Review,' he will be less likely to demand an official censorship."

Picture Used as Sermon in Church Service

Motion pictures were used last Sunday night in a regular church service. This took place at the Judson Memorial Church, at Washington Square, New York. The screen sermon was conducted by the Rev. Leslie Willis Sprague, former pastor of a Brooklyn church and now head of the religious and industrial sections of the Community Motion Picture Bureau of New York.

The sermon film was one of the Judge Brown series, entitled "Thief or Angel." It depicted an instance where a noble motive led to systematized thievery, and from this situation "Good Motives and Evil Deeds."

DEATH OF MERLE E. SMITH LAMENTED AS GRE BLOW TO INDUSTRY

MERLE E. SMITH, general manager for George Kleine, was buried in Calvary Cemetery, Chicago, recently, his body having been brought on from New York where he died at the Republican Club on Thursday, February 5th. His passing has saddened all who knew him and especially those of the film industry who had an opportunity of knowing his real worth through intimate association. Their feeling in the matter is well voiced by the following tribute written by Ralph Thomas Kettering, one of Mr. Smith's closest friends:

"To think that he should be taken just at the crowning point of his career is sad indeed but when one remembers that he was only twenty-nine years of age, the horror of it strikes to the very heart. As Hamlet said 'He was a man of infinite jest and excellent character.' How true indeed this is of Merle. With a laugh upon his lips and a song in his heart, he raced through his brief existence making people happy and inspiring good thought in the minds of those whom he met."

Americanization Campaigr

Lincoln's Birthday Marks Inaugural by Picture Houses; Lane Makes Speech

THE country-wide motion picture campaign to combat Bolshevism and unrest in this country opened on Lincoln's Birthday and from reports that have been received from every section of the United States the industry is working shoulder to shoulder with the Government against the common enemy.

All week telegrams have been pouring into Washington to Hon. Franklin K. Lane, the Secretary of the Interior, and chairman of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, from exhibitors who have pledged their screen to the movement.

On February 9 there was a meeting of all of the Washington exhibitors at the office of Secretary Lane. Harry N. Crandall and Major Raymond Pullman of the general committee were present.

Secretary Lane made an interesting address to the Washington exhibitors. He said, in part:

"The whole idea of this program is that we shall try to revivify the spirit of our people.

"We are in a slump; that is to say, we are not buoyant, we are not confident, we are not as sure of ourselves as we were.

"We are not unappreciative of the services—the immense service—that was done by the industry during the war; we think that the thing that you did then did much to strengthen your standing as a permanent factor in the development of the conception of the motion picture as an educational force in the United States. That undoubtedly is true. There was your opportunity. You took advantage of it, and you made the people of the country feel that the motion picture was as real as the newspaper or as the pulpit—as real, probably, as the pulpit used to be when religion had more definite hold upon the people. Now your opportunity is to continue to emphasize that spirit and that attitude."

Harry M. Crandall, the chairman of the exhibitors' branch of the general committee, gave out the follov statement:

"I am deeply grateful to the hibitors of the country for the splei spirit that they have shown in Americanization program."

Protest Against Fil Advertising Censor

Secretary Thomas Scott, of the tion Picture Exhibitors' Protec Association of Ontario, issued the lowing statement regarding the sion of the Ontario Governmen require all exchanges and exhibi to submit advertising of all des tion to a new moving-picture-ad tising censorship-board at Tor for approval or condemnation:

"Up to the present time nothing been done with regard to the cen ship of moving-picture-adverti but plans are being arranged to se changes in the regulations, if poss suitable to all exhibitors in the P ince of Ontario. Should this t come to a crisis, which, we trust, be prevented by this organization would be duty bound to stop all vertising in newspapers. Then, believe, the matter would be bro to the public's attention." Secr Scott referred to the new censoı law as a "grave injustice."

Anti-Censorship Victory in the South

Reports from Various Points Indicate Unusual Activity on Picture Legislation. Virginia Legislators Against Censorship

THE South has been the scene of unprecedented censorship activity during the past week. To Virginia belongs the distinction of delivering the most powerful blow against the attempts to impose upon the screen a legalized censorship. This victory was recorded, when on Friday, February 6th, the joint committee of the Senate and House on moral and social welfare voted against a bill proposing a board of censors to pass on all films before their exhibition in Virginia. The committee's report, recommending itself against the proposed legislation, was submitted to the state legislature during the week.

Three ministers, representing powerful church groups in the state, appeared in support of the measure. David Wark Griffith, the producer; Jake Wells, representing the Virginia exhibitors; and J. S. Connolly of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, led the opposition forces in the fight against the bill.

Counter-Proposal Offered

Willingness to submit to proper legal regulation was the keynote of those opposing the bill; which proposed to do what only four of the forty-eight States have done, empower three persons, one of whom may be a woman, to say whether a film may be exhibited in Virginia. That censorship, such as proposed in the bill, will throttle the motion picture business, was stated by both exhibitors and producers, who, as a counter-proposal, offered a bill which would specifically bring films under the provisions of the criminal statutes prohibiting immoral or obscene literature, pictures, paintings and other matter. Censorship as an encroachment on free American institutions was flayed by Mr. Griffith, who stated that he, as a son of Virginia, never expected to return to the State of his birth to plead for freedom in the halls of the Virginia Assembly.

The main arguments offered by Mr. Griffith are summarized as follows:

Censorship is un-American—Because it is founded on the principal of Autocracy—the right of a few to direct the mass. Every American precept is in opposition to it. Every time America has shed blood it has been to overthrow tyranny, and Americans will not countenance tyranny of though any more than they will countenance tyranny of physical power.

Censorship is senseless—Because it put into the hands of small-calibered politicians the right to edit our supply of thought and our means of recreation. As well permit these politicians to go into our libraries and re-write Shakespeare or the Bible.

Censorship is unjust—Because it restricts a great industry by building trouble-barriers as numerous as our states and cities. It is an unwarranted tax upon an industry—and the maze of hazards it erects discourages the spirit of adventure and originality without which the industry cannot exist. It is an assurance of screen mediocrity.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION STATEMENT

J. S. CONNOLLY, Washington representative of the N. A. M. P. I., has clarified the purpose of the legislation which formed the subject of an editorial in the February 14 issue of Motion Picture News, in the following statement:

"I have just read the editorial in the February 14 issue of the Motion Picture News entitled 'The First Shot Is Fired.' I am very sorry if there has been any misunderstanding relative to H. R. 7629, which unanimously passed the House of Representatives in Washington last week.

"At the annual convention of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held at Rochester last August, it was unanimously agreed that an attempt would be made to amend that section of the penal code relative to newspapers, books and printed matter, so as to include motion pictures. Under our present penal code we have no law prohibiting the sending of obscene, lewd or lascivious motion picture films by mail or by common carrier.

"This bill was drawn up by myself, representing the Censorship Committee of the National Association, and I appeared before the Judiciary Committee in behalf of it. I also succeeded in having it passed by the House unanimously. It is now before the Senate Judiciary and no doubt will be enacted within a very short time.

"Your editorial was based on the Weekly Review of the Chamber of Commerce dated January 19, and you based it around the word 'objectionable.' This word does not appear in our bill."

Sennett "Statement" Denied

Sennett Will Not Release via Associated Exhibitors, Declares E. M. Asher

E. M. ASHER, personal representative for Mack Sennett, who arrived in New York last Wednesday m Los Angeles, comes forth with rm denial of a report published in of the trade journals last week to effect that Mack Sennett, the fam- comedy producer, will release his edies through the Associated Ex- tors, Inc., as soon as his present ract with Famous Players-Lasky [illegible]

When seen Mr. Asher stated, "I ot realize how an article of this ure could have been published. When ight to my attention I was unded, for I have never met Fred . Quimby, who I understand is the eneral manager of the Associated ibitors, and who according to the r confirmed this report. I have been interviewed by any trade nal representative, so my con- ation to this statement is abso- ly unfounded. Mr. Sennett's con- t with Famous Players still has eral months to run, as do other ontracts of the other members of the ssociated Producers. However, Mr. nce, the president of the organiza- on, who is due in New York very hortly, has as yet not even made the emblance of an announcement.

"The report that Mr. Sennett would e in New York within a few weeks also untrue, as he is busier than r producing super productions to mply with the new releasing plans e announced later. I want to say I think it is very detrimental to publications and the industry to w unfounded reports of the above ature to be published, and I have oticed that many rumors have been fe as to the releasing policies of the ssociated Producers. Until an an- ouncement in the form of an adver- sement or through another medium pears in the various trade journals, ming direct from the organization, it is advisable not to publish unauthentic reports."

Capitalist Enters United States Photoplay Corporation

The entry of big capital into motion pictures was again exemplified this week in the announcement of the United States Photoplay Corporation of Washington, D. C., that E. B. Dean, Sr., a well-known capitalist of Scranton, Pa., has been elected director and second vice-president of the corporation. Mr. Dean has become one of the heaviest stockholders in the corporation, which is producing "Determination" and others of equal magnitude.

The balance of the personnel of the officers and directors of the corporation includes Capt. F. F. Stoll, president and acting treasurer, author of "Determination"; Dr. George L. Carder, first vice-president; C. L. Wakeman, secretary, active in the organiation of the United States Fuel Administration during the world war; H. H. Prentice, D. C., director; and Wm. P. Doing, Jr., director, vice-president and treasurer of the Doing Printing Company of Washington, D. C.

A. S. Kane Presides at College Dinner

Arthur S. Kane paused from business long enough last week to preside at the annual dinner of the Washburn College Club of New York City, of which he is president. The affair was held at Shanley's. The guest of honor was Dr. P. P. Womer, president of the Topeka, Kansas, college.

Oklahoma Association Holds Convention

At the annual convention of the Theatre Managers and Owners Association of Oklahoma, held last week at Oklahoma City, Ralph Talbot of Tulsa was elected president of the organization. The other officers are: Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City, vice-president; A. B. Momand, Shawnee, secretary; and H. W. McCall, Oklahoma City, treasurer. About three hundred theatre-men attended the convention—the largest gathering of the organization to date. Various distributors had displays arranged which covered an entire floor. It was announced that the Fox Film Corporation, the Vitagraph Co. and Select Pictures Corporation would soon establish branch-offices in Oklahoma City.

"Percentage Opponents Harming Selves

By Hiram W. Abrams

IT is absolutely no surprise to me that certain factions among exhibitors oppose percentage booking. When United Artists Corporation embarked on its percentage booking plan, I was fully prepared for just such objections as have been raised.

I have been in the motion picture business long enough—and I have seen enough in other industries—to realize that there is always a reactionary, stand-pat element that will not move forward with the times.

I knew that when we began renting our pictures on a percentage basis, we would have to wage a campaign of education and demonstration.

Fortunately, there are among the exhibitors a sufficiently large majority of far-sighted, clear-thinking business men who understand and appreciate the various economic evolutions that are witnessed in every line of business; and I might add that in every line of business there is likewise a reactionary minority, men who oppose and resist all progress and advancement and who usually have the limelight centered on them, because of the noise they are making. But while their insurrection is flaring up, the sound and clear-thinking merchants go about their daily business of making money and of adjusting themselves so that they may keep pace with the progress of their industry.

It is a simple matter to demonstrate that this objection to percentage is merely a matter of history repeating itself. From the time that the motion picture became a business, certain factions among exhibitors have repeatedly attempted to block the various stages of progress that have been for their own good.

Go back into the history of the business as far as you please. Do you remember the fight that was waged against producers and distributors who insisted that their pictures could no longer be shown for an admission price of less than ten cents? The stand-pat exhibitors rose in arms and said that no producers or distributors could tell them how to run their theatres and that they would show pictures for five cents, if they pleased, or that they would do without the pictures.

You couldn't have built the beautiful picture houses the country now boasts of, on five-cent admission prices. The higher admission prices made possible the motion-picture business of today—yet a lot of the exhibitors who have made fortunes as a result of the higher admission prices, were bitterly opposed to charging more than five cents in their houses.

Do you remember the cry that was raised on the part of certain exhibitors when the thought was advanced that a daily change of program might be improved on? Certain exhibitors were aghast at the thought that they might have to run pictures for two days instead of one day.

These same exhibitors declared that they never, never would run pictures for more than a day and affirmed that the next thing they knew, distributors would be insisting that pictures be run for three days or even a week; then the whole motion picture business would go to rack and ruin.

Yet, today, these selfsame exhibitors are running pictures for a week, two weeks, a month or even longer—and making money.

Time was when certain exhibitors banded themselves together and attempted to boycott any exchange that would permit a theatre to show more than three reels for one admission price. Any exchange that would dare to let a theatre have four reels to show as part of one program, would be put out of business.

Yet, somehow, despite the protests of these exhibitors, we have gotten to the point where a motion-picture program is a unit of entertainment and the footage entirely a secondary matter.

I could go on and cite case after case of exhibitor opposition to forward movements. The story is always the same. An innovation, an improvement, an advance is suggested for the good of the business as a whole, and immediately a group of exhibitors declare war on the innovation; but invariably the innovation, if it is right, survives and the exhibitors who tested the loudest are glad to shar the benefits that result to all.

Repeatedly we have witnessed spectacle of the exhibitor himself tempting to retard the progress of own business.

Fortunately, if a thing is right, i bound to succeed, for opposition t is purely selfish cannot frustrate thing that is basically right.

I have discussed percentage book with scores upon scores of the leadi exhibitors of the country, and I convinced, as most of them are, t percentage is the fair, equitable a ultimate method for the handling motion pictures.

The best evidence I can offer of faith in percentage is this:

I go on record now with the promi that as soon as this company has sufficient amount of product to wa rant the organization that will be r quired, we will book our pictur throughout on a straight percenta basis and do away altogether with guarantee or rental, except in so far a nominal deposit may be required a binder or as evidence of good fai for the protection of playing dates.

We are headed right for straig percentage; straight percentage wi require a big organization, but yo have my word for it; that as soon the volume of our product warrant the organization, we will book our pictures on a straight percentage basis

Screen vs. Newspaper Editorials

By Lewis J. Selznick

UNDER a heading, "Will the Film Replace the Printing Press?" the New York Globe on February 9 printed a double column editorial in which it opined that the question has come up whether or not books, magazines, newspapers — all forms of literature—will in time bow before the new method of transmitting thought.

After stating that there has been much speculation as to the future of moving pictures and their relation to the printed word, the Globe says "there is nothing that can be confidently prophesied about the place the cinema will take in the coming century except that it will be of extraordinary importance."

The newspaper then concludes:

"But it doesn't open up many new stores of information as the printing press did. It cannot explain or present doubts. It can only argue by means of assumptions."

By the last paragraph it is assumed that the Globe means that it cannot present arguments in the manner of the newspaper editorial. But there is positive proof that the Globe is wrong. In answer we can point to Herbert Kaufman's Weekly editorials in screen form, which are soon to be released, as the principal argument against the Globe's contention.

In the Kaufman Weekly the screen does something in an editorial way that the newspaper does not and cannot do. It not only drives home the printed word with terrific force, but it makes its meaning so clear with the aid of moving pictures illustrating the text that no person can mistake the point it aims to get across.

It is a fact that the average person does not read newspaper editorials. When the moral, argument and reasoning that the editorial seeks to implant, is flashed on a screen so illustrated as to be entertaining and at the same time "get over" its intent and purpose, the screen has done something that the newspaper will never be able to accomplish, for the reason that the average newspaper seeks to instruct without entertaining.

The Globe senses the truth of this statement when it says:

"The men who have thrown their destinies with the moving picture predict that the printing press will soon be obsolete. Just as Guttenberg's invention of movable type drove out the ballad singer and the art of declamation, they say, the film will drive out the linotype machine and all its accessories. The parallel is too close to be comfortable for the scrivener. . . . The moving picture makes the transmission of thought simple and easy. For the lazy-minded it is a vast improvement over pages of symbols which each one must unravel for himself. . . . The greater part of thought is a balance and adjustment of ideas, and this the cinema cannot give us."

Wrong again.

Any one who knows the editorials of Herbert Kaufman is aware that the force of his writing lies in its plain presentation of facts which are not confined to one-sided argument. In his screen weekly, which is the first of its kind ever presented, there is not only a balance and adjustment of ideas, but it is done in such a manner that even the most passive observer cannot help but profit by it.

The screen editorial is new, but it has come to stay. Its audiences will not, for they cannot, skip over it in the manner of the average newspaper reader of average newspaper editorials. For its value lies in the fact that its truths are put over in action following up the printed word, and above all, it entertains.

Herbert Kaufman, probably the most widely read editorial writer in the world, appreciated this fact when he gave up the vast audience of readers he was reaching through a newspaper syndicate each week, and turned to the screen to get over his preachments.

"Open Market Ghastly Joke"—Laemmle

Calling a "spade a spade" and forcibly denouncing the "open market" promises as a "ghastly joke," Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., has issued the following statement:

"Last spring, various producers and distributors blossomed forth with marvelous utterances to the trade. The trade journals were filled with rich and rosy promises; the trade paper editors interviewed this producer and that producer. Each one was asked whether he really was in earnest about selling his pictures on the open market. Each one looked grave, said a whole lot of words,—and replied in the affirmative.

"The trade papers believed the millennium had millenniumed. Utopia had utoped. The producers assumed the role of Moses, and individually they kissed each exhibitor smack on the mush with a brotherly, open-market kiss. Everybody was happy and yappy. Spring was in the air. All nature, plus Moe, expanded under the beautiful sunshine of love and good-will and everything..

"Then something quietly happened to the spring blossoms. Most of the blossoms were broken like promises, or else they developed into bloomers. Nearly every Moses in the business who had been right down on the ground, playing leap frog with the lowly exhibitor, suddenly remembered his dignity. His publicity and advertising men abruptly quit talking about open bookings.

"While it lasted the exhibitor was happy; but his exuberance was of short duration. His hope that each picture would be booked alone, and that no picture would be used as a club to make him book others was like a bubble—it was pretty and colorful and rode on the air, but it soon burst. There had been other bubbles, but somehow or other the exhibitor had taken more faith in this one. But alas! Again he has been forced to realize that he has been made the victim of a ghastly joke!"

"This has been the history of this business of 'spring blossoms'—forgotten promises. Each year has always brought an abundance of these, and yet each year's crop has always been eagerly grasped by the enthusiastic exhibitor.

"That is the whole story. A careful survey of present booking conditions, as far as I can see, shows that only two companies have lived up to the letter and spirit of the open booking promises, the "spring blossoms."

"One of these companies is the United Artists. The other is Universal. I have been told by exhibitors that when they try to book one, two or three pictures, they find it impossible. If they want that particular picture or group of pictures they must book thirty or forty more to secure them.

"This is a state of affairs which is all wrong. It is against the principles of good business for the simple reason that a man is being forced to buy something he doesn't want in order to secure something he needs. This works both ways. The exhibitor is forced to show some inferior pictures because he has managed to secure some feature production. His patrons go home dissatisfied. He loses his prestige for quality pictures.

"The producer, however, profits by his scheme—at first. Because he has a good picture he has managed to get rid of a couple of poor ones. He counts his money and overlooks the fact that his poor pictures are being fed to people who are paying for quality productions. Eventually his trademark isn't going to be worth copyrighting.

"The 'open market' is no dream. It is a necessity. Any attempt to tie up the exhibitor and force him to the point where he will have to foist literally 'damaged goods' in his patrons in order to hold a 'sale' is bound to result in disaster for the motion picture industry.

"The open market, because it is a necessity is bound to come. The exhibitor will have the privilege to book as he chooses. The policy which has always been adhered to by Universal is to allow an exhibitor to book a single picture, a group, or the entire output if he wills. But the exhibitor does the picking. This is the only real plan. Any other system is built on a false basis.

Carl Laemmle

"The Universal policy is correct and fair in principle. When a company stands on principle it stands on the only solid foundation big business has. The very fact that our organization is doing by far the greatest business of its career is proof enough that the principle is absolutely 'right.'

"Spring is at our door again. With its coming a brand new set of 'Spring blossoms' will appear. It will be interesting to learn whether the exhibitor has at last learned his lesson or is again going to 'fall' for the soft stuff.'"

Pro and Con Volleys on Percentage

A Few Straight to the Point Expressions of Views Held by Exhibitors in Widely Scattered Territories

I HAVE been reading very carefully the various articles pro and con in the NEWS regarding percentage. Your editorial of January 31st, to my mind, hits the nail on the head. Percentage is bound to come and it will be of most benefit to the exhibitor when it finally does really come.

One of the first essentials, however, to a percentage arrangement must be "Fairness." A percentage arrangement in which the distributing companies ask an exorbitant amount as a guarantee—in many cases the guarantee being more than the exhibitor could really pay them on flat rental—is not fair to the exhibitor as it guarantees the distributor a profit whether the exhibitor gets one or not.

The percentage arrangement cannot be on a flat percentage of gross receipts. Practically every exhibitor knows that in these cases after playng a big percentage picture and doing a remarkable business he has still but very little more than he would make with his ordinary pictures; in many ases he has doubled his admission to ven accomplish this, which of course oes not help his business before the ngagement or afterwards.

I heartily concur in your opinion that the producers must have an incentive or good productions, that incentive of course being a proportion of the abnormal receipts which accrue from the exhibition of these big productions, and the only way it seems to me that this can be equitably arrived at is to protect the producer for his outlay in the cost of the productions by allowing him a guaranteed rental based on his production cost, at the same time allowing the exhibitor to take out his house expenses before any split in the profits. The percentage of the split, of course, would be governed by the local conditions. It is not fair for a producer to attempt to charge a guarantee rental based on more than the production cost of the pictures.

This kind of percentage on big pictures is the exhibitor's only protection.

Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.
H. B. Wright,
Secretary and Manager.

Having read your articles touching upon percentage, having heard the big guns and little guns explode, and reading both pro and con, not an article has ever touched upon the principal item attached to either side of the plan.

Being a small gun in the Lone Star State of Texas, in a small town, I am going to shoot a small caliber gun for both sides, and will state that old saying that Goldberg uses, "We all fall sooner or later" and "They look better when they are far away."

But, the principal item that has not been mentioned, and I would like to have same answered, is the fact, "How much of a guarantee is Mr. Producer going to demand from Mr. Exhibitor on the percentage plan?" The reason that I am asking such a question is the following plan was made to me from a Producer. I have been getting late pictures from him at a flat price from same stars; on one of the late pictures from same star, he made me the following proposition. I put up $50 guarantee for two nights' run, add overhead and advertising, then split 50-50.

Now, I am going to shoot and shoot straight as all Texans do; how can a small town exhibitor come out on such a plan when the town is too small for two nights' stand, still he will have to stand the pruning of a large town exhibitor on the guarantee?

Now, gentlemen, if you can show me where Mr. Producer will lower his sights on the guarantee when we can all get a shot at the target, I will say on with percentage. I am with you, but as long as Mr. Producer has his pruning knife ready to trim us all, I say, boys, who are against percentage, stay hitched and you can get what you want.

I am a franchise holder and beg to state that I am very much pleased with its workings; for instance, the big city boys were showing a certain star that was a big favorite, and a good bet. I applied for prices for one-night show, as my patrons asked me to get same, and the price actually stunned me. Sixty days later I joined the franchise plan, and I am showing the same picture for one-quarter the money, and all of you picture exhibitors well know to fall in behind the big city boys 60 days is not long, and I consider very new.

Having taken up about enough space, I will state for the benefit of all Little Folk Exhibitors that if we stack up our little guns together, throw them in as machine guns, we can get Mr. Producer to give us a percentage, with a reasonable guarantee. Picture to be put up as other staple articles, upon its or their merits. I am with them. With my best wishes for better plans for exhibitor and producer, I beg to remain yours truly,

H. A. Kempen, Manager,

Nixon, Texas.

Carpentier Signs With Robertson-Cole

The history of the Frenchman reads like a romance. Born in Lens, the coal mining centre of France, on Jan. 12, 1892, and worked in a coal mine when only a small boy. When only fourteen years old he became interested in the Anglo-Saxon sport of boxing, which was just leaping into popularity in France with the visits of Kid McCoy and other skilful American artists in the glove wielding sport.

In battle and in the ring Carpentier seemed the favorite of the gods. Thrice decorated for bravery and receiving the French Military medal, the highest honor a man can receive from that country, Carpentier goes about as if the war had been a dream. He is not of the boastful character, reticent about his own deeds, he always finds time to praise the men of the allied armies.

Just after the war broke out Carpentier called off all engagements and was on his way to the front in the first mobilization of French troops. Being an expert automobile driver, he was detailed to drive a French General's car. He did this for a time and then tsked to be transferred to the flying corps.

Right here began Carpentier's greatest career. At first he was engaged in flying new planes from the factories to the front. After a while he became an expert aviator and was shifted to the front around Verdun, where he became an observer. Flying alone, he took many daring flights over the German lines, in the course of which he was frequently attacked and on at least one occasion brought down a German attacking plane.

Then came the Crown Prince's most desperate drive to break through at Verdun. Carpentier, sent out to locate the German batteries, flew over the German lines at a low height of about 200 feet, obtained the needed information, signalled back to the waiting French batteries so accurately that many German batteries were quickly destroyed by their fires, and returned with his plane shot full of holes. On one of these daring flights he returned with nearly a hundred bullet holes through the body of his plane and the wooden uprights splintered in several places. He was thrice decorated and his exploits given official mention in the order of the day.

His nerves shattered by the constant strain of active air work, Carpentier was sent back to one of the camps and made boxing instructor for the troops there. He quickly picked up his old skill and not only acted as instructor, but took part in several bouts with opponents in the French troops.

Carpentier made a large fortune before the war, but most of it was invested in the mines near Lens, so that he practically lost everything during the German occupation.

Carpentier is in the prime of life. In spite of the strain of four years at the front in an airplane, the idol of France has come into his own and has an excellent chance to annex the world heavyweight championship.

He has fought the best that Europe has produced and has outfought them all. Now that Beckett is a thing of the past, the war hero must look to America, and it is predicted that when Carpentier sets foot in America he will be given the most rousing reception the United States has ever given to a scholar world war hero, idol of France and one of the best liked men that ever stepped into the squared arena.

is said, the fact that Carpentier will not have to use his prowess in motion pictures, but that his personality, his good looks, and his character will stamp him as a real screen find.

It is not known whether the picture to be made in this country for Robertson-Cole will be produced in the East or the West. Executives are making arrangements for a studio, story and a cast of excellence. One of the best known directors in the production of pictures will be in charge of the big Robertson-Cole Carpentier Special.

Carpentier is claimed by his friends to be the most learned man that ever stepped into a ring. He is a student at all times. He fights for the money he gets out of it, but never in his many battles both on the battlefield and in the sawdust ring has he ever forgotten the fact that he is a gentleman and scholar.

BAND FOR INDEPENDENT PURCHASE OF ACCESSORIES

SEVENTY-FIVE exhibitors of San Francisco and vicinity recently met and formed an Exhibitors' Protective League. D. S. Markowitz was named President; H. Gobish, Vice-President Robert McNeil, Financial Secretary; Nate Herzog, Executive Secretary; Sam Gordon, Treasurer; A. S. Newburgh, Attorney and W. J. Clark, Chairman of Publicity.

A set of resolutions was drawn up declaring for the right of the exhibitors to purchase their own accessories and advertising matter wherever he wished, and resenting the alleged action of one company in requiring the purchase of such from the exchange.

The organization it is said was formed simply for protection against exorbitant demands of film exchanges.

Canadian Branch Buys Toronto House; Further Acquisitions Are Planned

FOLLOWING a conference at Ottawa on Saturday evening, January 31, between N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, managing director of the new Famous-Players Canadian Corporation, and Harry Brouse, of Ottawa, owner of several theatres and a franchise-holder of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announcement was made that Mr. Brouse had sold his half-interest in the Strand theatre, Toronto, to the new theatre corporation. The Strand is one of the best known and largest moving picture theatres in the Toronto downtown section and has been closely linked with the Regent theatre, another large Toronto house, for a number of years. The Strand has enjoyed highly successful business for several years.

Mr. Brouse continues to own the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, and the York theatre, Toronto, as well as other holdings. The transaction does not affect in any way the arrangement for the distribution in Eastern Canada of the First National releases, which are handled for Mr. Brouse by the Regal Films Limited, of which Mr. Nathanson is also the managing director.

Details are also forthcoming regarding the large new moving-picture theatre which is to be erected in Ottawa by the Famous-Players Canadian Corporation. The new company is offering for sale $4,000,000 eight per cent. cumulative first preferred shares and with this money is to be erected a string of seven theatres in as many different Canadian cities, including the proposed structure in Ottawa, the Canadian capital. The company has also just closed a deal for the erection of a theatre on St. Catherine Street West, Montreal, to seat 3,100 and to be ready for occupancy next December. Other houses are to be built at once in Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver and Quebec. A little later new theatres are to be erected in Edmonton, Windsor, Halifax, Moose Jaw, Brantford, St. John, Saskatoon and London, these to be in operation in 1921.

Shifts Affiliation

After an affiliation of about eight years as Los Angeles manager of the Los Angeles Universal Exchange, David Bershon has tendered his resignation in order to accept a similar position with the First National Exchange in Los Angeles. Bershon, in the point of affiliation with one exchange is the oldest in the southern California territory, and during his management of Universal distributing affairs has seen changes made at every other exchange. In many instances the management has been changed a number of times. His acquaintance with exhibitors of the territory is perhaps greater than any other branch manager, and he, Bershon, enjoys the confidence and respect of his many friends in the picture field.

In the new position Mr. Bershon will be wholly in charge of the Los Angeles Exchange which was recently purchased by Sol Lesser and Mike and Abe Gore.

Clark-Cornelius Gets Larger Quarters

Having found their quarters at 1600 Broadway inadequate for the proper serving of their clients, the Clark-Cornelius Corporation has acquired the entire third floor of the Hooven Building, 117 West 46th street.

Censorship

It is the beginning of the encroachment upon the freedom of the press. As well permit an appointee of a city council to sit at the desk of a newspaper editor and delete the copy not to his liking.

Censorship is unlawful—Because the screen is a form of expression, and the right of free expression is guaranteed under the Constitution.

Censorship is needless—Because the exposure of an indecent or immoral film is a misdemeanor under all laws which now exist and comes under the proper police regulation in every community.

Censorship is unfair—Because, on the plea that it protects youth from seeing those things which the adolescent mind should not know, it robs the adult majority of those things which ought to be shown. Better to keep the children out of the picture theatres. Children do not go to the legitimate theatres.

Rev. J. J. Wicker, D. D., pastor of Leigh Street Baptist Church, representing the Baptist Ministers' Union of Richmond, was the first speaker in favor of the bill. Dr. Wicker frankly stated that he was a great admirer of the screen drama and receives much pleasure and benefit from the motion-picture exhibitions he witnesses here. He also had the highest words of praise for those exhibitors he has become acquainted with here. "But I feel that this bill will prove a fine asset to the motion-picture men," he stated. Rev. T. A. Smoot, of Centenary Methodist Church, representing the Methodist Ministerial Conference, also, lauded motion pictures and the houses conducting them here. He stated, however, that censorship was needed, especially as 80 per cent. of all knowledge comes through the eye. Rev. W. A. Hall, of Porter Street Presbyterian Church, representing the Richmond Ministerial Union, stated that he was not against a legitimate business, and that he had never seen a suggestion of evil in a film production. He denied that censorship was undemocratic, and differed with Dr. Wicker in that he would like to see a woman member on the proposed board.

An important development of the hearing given the bill before the joint committees of the House and Senate of the legislature was the announcement that Virginia exhibitors are favoring a movement to establish a national board of censorship so as to take such authority from various state censor boards and prevent the present system of indiscriminate censorship, through which system the producer never knows whether a picture shown in one state will stand the test in some other state.

The question of legalized censorship is also being agitated in South Carolina. The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., is endeavoring to organize the exhibitors of that state into an active group to oppose the censorship movement. With this end in view, the association has addressed a letter to all the exhibitors of the state. The letter is intended to be a call to arms, and frankly informs the exhibitors that only by their own efforts and initiative can they hope to avoid the imposition of legalized censorship on the screen.

Censorship Proved to Be Inefficient

Official Ruling Handed Down by Attorney-General's Office Makes Exhibitor Liable Even After Censor Board Has Passed Picture

THE astonishing principle has just been established by an official ruling of the Attorney-General's office of the State of Pennsylvania, that a motion picture exhibitor may be fined or sent to jail as a criminal for displaying a film that a court may regard as improper, even after the State Board of Motion Picture Censors has given its approval to the film and sanctioned its use on the screen.

This practical admission of the inefficacy of the motion picture censorship in accomplishing the purpose for which it was enacted—that of preventing the exhibition of immoral or indecent pictures—comes from the highest legal authority in the State's employ, and is being pointed to by motion picture interests as just another clinching proof of the contention so often made heretofore that legalized censorship in Pennsylvania is a hopeless farce.

Exhibitors Disappointed

Moreover, the ruling is a distinct disappointment to the exhibitors of the state, who heretofore had felt that if the censorship law was of any practical benefit to the men in the film business it was from the belief that it provided a barrier, once a specific film was approved, that protected the exhibitor from the annoyance of constant prosecutions under local ordinances or other laws.

The ruling, which was given in behalf of the Attorney-General office by Deputy Attorney-General, William I. Swoope, was in response to a request from Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, secretary of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, who asked to be advised whether the Act of April 13, 1911, regulating amusements, in so far as it relates to prosecutions of theatre managers for permitting improper exhibitions, was repealed, so far as motion pictures were concerned, by the Act of May 15, 1915, which is the existing law establishing the State Board of Censors and which prescribes the board's duties. The reply of Deputy Attorney-General Swoope to Dr. Oberholtzer is as follows:

"In reply would say that Section 1 of the Act of April 13, 1911, P. L. 64, provides as follows:

"'That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to give or participate in, or for the owner or owners of any building, tent, tents, or any premises, lot, park, or common, or any one having control thereof, to permit within said building, tent, or tents, or any premises, lot, park or common, any dramatic, theatrical, operatic, or vaudeville exhibition, or the exhibitions of any fixed or moving pictures, of a lascivious, sacrilegious, obscene, indecent, or of an immoral nature and character, or such as might tend to corrupt morals.'

"This is the act regulating all kinds of public exhibitions and amusements, including moving pictures, and providing for a criminal prosecution for showing immoral shows. It does not conflict in any way with the act of May 15, 1915, P. L. 534, establishing the Pennsylvania State Board of Cen-

John C. Flinn, who takes over executive details at F. P.-Lasky, and Jerome Beatty, who succeeds him as Director of Advertising and Publicity

Flinn in Important Position

To Handle Executive Details for F. P.-Lasky; Beatty Succeeds to His Office

JOHN C. FLINN, for the past three years director of publicity and advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been succeeded in that position by Jerome Beatty, advertising manager.

Mr. Flinn immediately takes up duties of an executive capacity which will place him even closer to Mr. Adolph Zukor and Mr. Jesse L. Lasky than in his past work. Because of his intimate acquaintance with the different activities of the corporation, Mr. Zukor has selected him to handle much of the detail that passes between the production and distribution departments which has heretofore centered in Mr. Zukor's office. Mr. Al Lichtman, in charge of distribution, and Mr. Flinn will be closely associated. As Mr. Zukor is leaving for Europe in a few weeks the change in positions will be effective immediately.

Mr. Beatty has been assistant to Mr. Flinn for the past two years. He was a newspaper man and magazine writer of wide experience before he entered the motion picture field, having at different times been connected with the editorial staffs of the Kansas City Star, Washington Post, Los Angeles Express, New Orleans States, New York Evening Globe, New York Evening Mail, New York Tribune and the New York Sunday World.

His motion picture experience before he joined the Famous Players-Lasky organization was with Essanay, Thanhouser and McClure Pictures.

Mr. Flinn joined the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company as publicity manager five years ago. Previously he had been for several years dramatic editor of the New York Herald. He has always been active in the affairs of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is chairman of the fifth division and a member of the executive committee.

No Censorship Bill Expected

Mayor's Committee of New York State Not Expected to Recommend Such Bill

THERE will be no bills backed by the State Conference of Mayors introduced along censorship lines in the present session of the Legislature, according to a report current in this city today. The special committee named by the State Conference of Mayors to carefully inquire into the needs of censorship in New York State will make its report on February 24 when the mid-winter session of the mayors is held here. This report will not recommend a censorship bill.

There is a probability, however, that the committee will suggest that each city can handle its problem of censorship for itself, through the district-attorney, if the case is a flagrant one, or better yet, along the lines that Rochester has adopted. In that city there is a censorship board that works in harmony with exhibitors. Whenever a picture is about to be shown that strikes the exhibitor as containing something that might prove objectionable to the public, the exhibitor gets in touch with the censor and the picture is run off. The exhibitor abides by the decision of the censor and declares that as a result his patronage has grown.

UNIVERSAL CAMERAMEN BACK FROM AFRICA

STILL dazed somewhat, and just recovering from the shock of the wreck in which William Stowell and Dr. Armstrong were killed, Pliny Horne and Edward Thierry, cameraman and journalist of the Universal-Smithsonian African Expedition, returned to United States on the Adriatic this week.

Neither of the two men were very talkative, and the effects of their injuries were still apparent it being impossible to get much information from either of them. They both say from the moving picture standpoint the expedition will be a great success as some exceptional scenes were filmed by the party.

Horne says that their trip has been a succession of wonders to him. Universal, he says, will be able to release some of the finest travelogue pictures ever taken as the country the expedition traversed has abounded in unusual and beautiful scenery.

Holubar Makes Reply to Carl Laemmle

In reply to the statement recently made by Carl Laemmle about Mr. Holubar's relations with Universal, Mr. Holubar has issued the following statement:

"I did not break, nor attempt to break, my contract with Universal. Universal first broke its contract with me, by the entire omission of my name as author or director in much advertising matter pertaining to "The Right to Happiness," also by its failure to live up to its written agreement to remunerate me for stories written by me for Universal. I have made numerous requests for a settlement on these stories, but up to the present writing it has ignored payment, and even questioned my authorship."

News from the Correspondents

SEATTLE

"Whirlwind" Eden, who has just returned from a spin around the Northwest circuit, has returned with a pocket full of contracts. He just came back to see that the office was still on the map and is going back on another trip.

When Jack Rantz left the show business to enter the production game, he placed his three picture houses in Bremerton, Wash., on sale. It is known now that he sold them to A. Shemanski. Mr. Shemanski is a prominent business man in Seattle, who has recently been investing his money in picture shows. The Rosenburg Bros. will manage the houses.

Vernon M. Schubach, Northwest manager for the Universal Film Exchange, has been receiving good news from Wallace Potter, whom he sent to Spokane to establish a permanent branch and take care of eastern Washington, part of Montana and Idaho.

L. E. Tillman, formerly one of the proprietors of the Oregon Film Exchange, Portland, Ore., has accepted the position as assistant to manager Cobbs of the Northwest office of Vitagraph, Seattle. Charley Code has accepted the position of special salesman for Vitagraph.

H. Hopkinson, well known along the row, is now working under manager Lynch, of the Sun Film Exchange at Vancouver, B. C.

Since the United Pictures Corporation has been established, the Northwest branch is now located at 2010 Third avenue, Film Row, where the Triangle pictures were under the guidance of R. R. Nave. Hugh C. Dobbs, has been made local representative for Hallmark and has moved all his paraphernalia down to 2010 Third avenue, for the United will do the physical distributing for Hallmark. R. R. Arthur, Jr., has been made branch representative for United with offices at 2010 Third avenue, Seattle, and R. R. Nave will continue to keep his offices at 2010 Third avenue, where he used to distribute Triangle pictures. He has been appointed local manager for United.

BUFFALO

M. H. Greenwald, manager of the Fox exchange, has forwarded his resignation to the New York office, to take effect Saturday, Feb. 21. Mr. Greenwald has three very flattering offers from other film concerns, but is unable to announce which he will accept at this time. He came to Buffalo from the Cleveland Fox office last summer. He has been with the company two years.

Earl L. Crabb, managing director of Universal theatres in this country and Canada, was a Buffalo visitor, February 2 and 3. Mr. Crabb stopped off en route to Cleveland to look over the Universal interests there. He will go to Havana soon to inspect the house there. Mr. Crabb recently opened a new theatre in Salt Lake City for "U." He denied that his company is at present interested in establishing a home in Buffalo. Mr. Crabb is former manager of the Strand here.

Among the local film men who visited Albany last week to attend a meeting of the legislative committee of the State Exhibitors' League were Harold B. Franklin, managing director, Shea's Hippodrome; Charlie Hayman, of Niagara Falls, and Walter Hayes, of the Mark-Strand interests, who is also a member of the Governor's committee to investigate the censorship question. It is understood on reliable authority that neither the proposal to repeal the Sunday opening law and the creation of a state board of censorship will make any headway in the legislature.

The "flu" epidemic has become acute in Geneva, N. Y., and the Board of Health has ordered all theatres closed. Delevan, N. Y., authorities have taken similar action and Bradford, Pa., is considering a like move. In Buffalo while the number of cases has steadily increased the newspapers have adopted a policy of eliminating scare headlines and the psychological effect to date is wonderful. According to the health authorities, worry is the cause of most of the cases and in doing away with worry the fight against the disease is almost won. Local exhibitors have not given closing a thought at this writing.

John P. McConville, formerly connected with the Boston Famous Players-Lasky branch for the past several years in the capacity of exploitation man, has been assigned to the local office of the same company in a similar capacity. His first assignment here was the exploiting of "The Copperhead," at the Strand theatre.

The Commissioner of Public Safety has directed City Attorney Ralph E. Robertson, drafter of the film exchange fire protecting ordinance, to summon all exchange managers to attend a public hearing on the proposed ordinance in the city and county hall, Friday, February 13. The ordinance covered several typewritten pages. Most of the exchanges here have unusually safe arrangements for the storing of films.

Marian DeForest, dramatic editor of the Buffalo Express and author of several plays, among them "Little Women," and "Erstwhile Susan," will be appointed a member of the board of trustees of the Buffalo Public Library by Mayor Buck on March 15.

Paul Mooney, manager of the Anita Stewart Productions company, visited P. H. Smith, First National manager, the first week in February and discussed plans for the exploitation in this territory of "In Old Kentucky."

Henry E. Wilkinson, Realart manager, has started a campaign to place Allan Dwan's "The Luck of the Irish," in every theatre in Western New York on Saint Patrick's Day. Mr. Wilkinson will probably be satisfied if almost every theatre books the picture on "Auld Sod" day.

J. F. Kirsch, manager of the local Dooley exchange, 338 Pearl street, has returned from New York, where he accompanied Thomas W. Dooley, of Syracuse, with the announcement that Mr. Dooley has purchased 13 releases being made by the Bulls Eye Film Company, featuring Texas Guinan. "The Pendleton-Oregon Round Up" was also purchased. Mr. Kirsch visited Rochester, February 4, to sign up some of the new product.

New York interests have purchased the Jerry Linehan property in Broadway near the city hall in Hornell, N. Y., and will erect a modern motion picture theatre on the site.

Andy Sharick, Select exploitation man, recently screened "The Land of Opportunity" for the Y. M. C. A. Americanization committee and it is planned to use the film extensively in the work of helping Uncle Sam make new citizens.

The General Theatres Corporation has purchased a site on Genesee street, near Fillmore avenue, on which will be erected a modern motion picture theatre and business building. The corporation now runs the Allendale and New Arcadia. Harry Marsey is president of the company, Al Becker, vice president, and Harry G. Ess, treasurer. The name of the new house will be the Coliseum.

CLEVELAND

The "Flu" has played havoc with several of the smaller towns in Ohio. New London, Ada, Fredericktown, Geneva, East Palestine and Dillonvale were reported closed this week. In none of the larger towns, however, has there been any talk of closing the motion picture theatres.

E. C. Blakeman arrived in Cleveland last Monday, to become assistant manager of the local Pathe exchange. Blakeman was formerly associated with the Lynch enterprises in the South.

"The Lost City," the big Selig serial, which is being handled in Ohio by the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, opens its Ohio showing at the Orpheum theatre, Cleveland, the week of February 15. The Orpheum is one of the large down town first-run houses, and belongs to the chain of movies controlled by Paul Gusdanovic.

Syd Rosenthal, manager of the United Picture Theatres of America's Cleveland office, did a week's work one day last week, when he personally sold seven franchises within as many hours. The contracts were made with the Home theatre, Youngstown; Victor, Akron; Ideal, Akron; Norwood, Cleveland; Union, Cleveland; Rex, Cleveland, and Crawford, Cleveland.

The Bradley Features Company, of Cleveland, has been incorporated for $250,000, for the purpose of producing high class photoplays, and work on the first production will be started within a fortnight. The directors of the Bradley Features Company are Fred Desberg, Joseph LaRonge, Ed Strong, H. H. Cudmore, Arthur Brereton, Robert McLaughlin and Samuel R. Bradley.

The Andrews home, at 3001 Euclid avenue, which was the scene of the filming of "Hidden Charms," Robert McLaughlin's former film production, has been taken over by the Bradley Features Company on a long time lease, and will be maintained as a studio. Samuel R. Bradley has made the announcement that the new company will follow a policy whereby both productions and stars will be equally featured.

Arthur S. Hyman, of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Inc., Chicago and Detroit, will shortly open a new independent exchange in Cleveland at 2129 East 9th street. Among the attractions that he will distribute out of Cleveland will be "Deliverance." The exchange will be conducted under the name of Hy-Art Film Attractions.

Following the announcement that Cleveland won first prize in the big Universal sales contest just concluded, came word that Tom Colby was at the head of the local army of salesmen to accomplish this feat.

CINCINNATI

A plan to educate exhibitors to a realization of the importance of returning film on time has been worked out by the Cincinnati Exchange Managers' Association and the Indianapolis Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, following a conference of the two organizations at Indianapolis recently. Special effort will be made to acquaint exhibitors with the fact that when the return of a film is delayed, it not only inconveniences the exchange, but usually harms another exhibitor, who is forced to change his picture or run a dark house. Those present at the meeting from Cincinnati were Messrs. Wofberg, Kendal, Rowland, Johnson, Casaneve, Baum, Haines, Knoepfle and Zimmerman.

Al Walsh has been added to the Select road force and will cover the West Virginia territory.

The Wilson Film Company, which recently opened up offices at 301 Strand Theatre Building, has leased space on the fifth floor of the new film exchange building at Pioneer and Broadway streets, according to an announcement by George Wilson, manager.

Two new salesmen have been added to the Robertson-Cole sales force. Dick Roach will cover the Kentucky territory, and J. L. Jugans has been assigned to the West Virginia territory.

Owing to the fact that Oscar F. Bower, Goldwyn manager, is confined to his home as the result of a broken leg, District Manager Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, is temporarily taking charge of the office.

George Davis, formerly of the Cincinnati United office, is now covering Kentucky for Select.

Ben Bein, until recently connected with Pathe, has been named assistant manager of the Cincinnati office of the Standard Film Service Company.

Hand painted window tie-ups were used with good effect by Manager George Kyros, of the Virginian, Charleston, W. Va., in putting over a four-days' campaign on "The Beloved Cheater." Mr. Kyros, working in conjunction with Manager Casaneve, of Robertson-Cole's Cincinnati office, secured a number of stills, which were mounted on cardboard and then hand painted. Catch phrases such as "Do You Like Kissing" were used on the cards, followed by the words, "See Lew Cody at the Virginian," and the date. These cards were placed in the leading store windows of Charleston, as well as in the lobby of the theatre, and attracted a great deal of attention.

Other features of the campaign were a love-letter contest, in which $75 in prizes were offered; an airplane flight in which 10,000 dodgers advertising the performance were dropped over the city; and heavy newspaper advertising.

NEW ORLEANS

The "nickel" motion picture has become a thing of the past in New Orleans. But it was only last week this became true. Downtown theatres raised their prices five cents and suburban houses went up ten cents. The latter price also means an additional penny for war tax. The largest houses were charging more than a nickel, announced there would be no increase soon.

New Orleans is one of the last cities to raise its movie admission.

The dean of New Orleans film exchange managers, Mrs. Anna Sessions, left January for Atlanta, where she is to administer the affairs of the eight-state southern division of the World Film Corporation.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS

Miss Rose Tapley, of the Famous Players-Lasky, spoke on "The Message of the screen" at Trinity Methodist Church here tonight. "If people would only take the trouble to express their opinions of films to the managers of moving picture houses," she said, "we could have the very best pictures obtainable. The people are powerful and potent in this respect as reports of films are sent in to the head office each week." She said she personally knew of at least five different people who had been saved from moral or physical suicide by the "movies."

Goldstein Brothers, owners of the Broadway theatre here and of leading playhouses at Holyoke, Mass., Northampton, Mass., and other Connecticut valley cities and towns, announce they have become affiliated with the Lowe circuit. The new arrangement does not affect the ownership or management of the playhouses, but places within their disposal the vaudeville acts booked by the Lowe company.

In connection with a banquet and meeting of the Connecticut Valley Club of Printing House Craftsmen at the Hotel Cooley, in this city, Saturday night, Frederick Clark, director of the department of technical of the American Writing Paper Company, will give a motion picture lecture on "Paper Making." The films that will be used were made at the corporation's Linden mills and show all stages of the paper manufacturing industry.

Patrick J. Goode, of New Haven, Conn., for 17 years in government service, during that period private secretary to three different Congressmen, is to resign as secretary to Postmaster Philip Troup, of Elm City, March 1 to become connected with the S. Z. Poli theatrical circuit.

An address, "The Development of Moving Pictures in Advertising," was given before the Worcester (Mass.) Advertising Club last week at its weekly luncheon by Floyd A. Ramsdell, of the Worcester Film Company.

The Westfield Woman's Club at its meeting last week voted to indorse the movement now under way to bring about a more rigid censorship of moving picture productions. A committee of nine has been formed in Boston to have complete jurisdiction over the display of moving picture productions in all cities and towns of the State.

The local Woman's Club now has before it a proposition to have a similar committee formed in Westfield, Mass., to survey and censor motion pictures shown in local playhouses. Billboard advertising is being attacked, contention of the organization being that theatre and newspaper advertising is preferable and does not detract from the enjoyment of out-door traveling.

Local Chamber of Commerce of Bridgeport, Conn., is considering a proposition to have the Shuberts build a modern theatre here. J. J. Shubert, in a communication to A. H. Donahue, a broker, has brought the matter to the attention of the local commercial organization.

Through efforts of the Hartford, Conn., Tuberculosis Committee, about 100 patients of the State sanitorium at Newington were treated to a concert and moving picture entertainment at the institution Wednesday morning, Feb. 4. The program was in cooperation with Hartford Musicians' Union and will be continued weekly at the Newington institution and also at Wildwood on Cedar Mountain.

The program lasted two hours. The Will Rogers picture, "Jubilo," being shown at the Palace theatre this week, was shown for the special benefit of about 30 children, through the courtesy of Manager James Clancy, of the Palace theatre. The orchestra of that theatre provided the music. The local Musicians' Union has agreed to provide the weekly concerts, all of the 14 orchestras and six bands represented to have a part.

Chain Kwang Shi, acting counsel of the Republic of China at the New York consulate, has written to Mayor Richard J. Kinsella, of Hartford, a letter of thanks for his action in refusing to allow shown at a local theatre the film "The Tong Man." The ban was placed after local Chinamen had conferred with Mayor Kinsella.

Motion pictures of the banana industry in Central America, with an explanatory and descriptive address by Vice President V. M. Tucker, of the United Fruit Company, were given before the Rotary Club of Worcester, Mass., last week.

Manager Eschman of Pathe's Chicago Exchange, is building up a strong sales organization which will sell Pathe special features exclusively. This squadron of special salesmen is in charge of W. B. Frank, formerly with the Indianapolis exchange of Pathe, and includes H. J. Corbett, formerly manager of the Harper Theatre; F. B. Wathne and A. G. Hickcox, both of whom came on from New York to join the sales staff; A. Saxs of Indianapolis; A. G. Spencer, who for some years was connected with Metro; D. R. Davis, a New Orleans live-wire; and J. G. Davis, who is an expert on finance, having been a bond salesman for several years. These "Specialists" now are concentrating on booking "Other Men's Shoes" and are putting it over big. "Respectable By Proxy" will be the next picture they will exploit.

Reports reaching Chicago indicate that T. E. Delaney, who went from the local office of Vitagraph to be Omaha manager, is more than making good in his new position and already is breaking office records for bookings.

Manager Fred Aiken of Vitagraph reports that Ascher Brothers think so well of "The Fortune Hunter," a Vitagraph special that they will put the picture on for an extra day throughout their string of Chicago houses when it is released March 8th.

E. G. Newman's new house at La Salle, Illinois, the New Majestic, opened with "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" as its feature.

Lord Northcliffe, the great British newspaper owner, has sent W. P. Faulkner to America to make a study of the United States moving picture industry. Dr. Sam Atkinson, vice-president and business manager of The Allied Amusements Association of Chicago and a recognized authority on censorship questions, has been called to New York to discuss that phase of the industry with Mr. Faulkner. Both will have their headquarters at the Astor while in New York.

Dr. L. W. Jones, president of the Paragon Film Bureau, has returned from New York and is preparing to put out "The Great Miracle," a very interesting picture touching on spiritualism and other matters at present very much in the public eye. Dr. Jones states that he has purchased scenarios for several other pictures which will be produced at his California studios within the next few months. Later he will put "The Great Miracle" on the state rights market, it is understood.

Frank Flaherty, one of the best known picture men in the Chicago territory, has resigned as manager of Hallmark and accepted the position of general sales manager with Frank Zambrino of the Unity Photoplay Corporation. Mr. Flaherty has been connected with the motion picture industry in the Chicago territory for more than ten years and has an unusual wide circle of friends.

Hallmark has taken over the business of the Doll-Van Film Corporation for Illinois and will distribute the pictures controlled by the Doll-Van Corporation in that territory. D. N. Vandarwalker, who has been manager for Doll-Van in Chicago, goes to Hallmark as Chicago branch manager and will take his entire staff with him. He will occupy offices with the Triangle and United in the Mallers Building. The Doll-Van Film Corporation will continue to distribute their own pictures in Indiana and will maintain their Indianapolis office as heretofore.

Signs of spring. Geo. Moore of the Orpheum, Chicago, told the porters that in another month they could get the storm doors ready for storage. Sig Faller sold the electric heater in his office and had his flivver washed. I. Maynard Schwartz is writing poetry. Harry Weiss is getting his fishing tackle ready. Arthur Schoenstadt is buying new golf clubs. Joe Freidman is inquiring about the rates to Northern Michigan and the F. I. L. M. Club is talking about an outing.

Frederick Linick has purchased the interests of R. L. Jacoby in the Linick & Jacoby Theatrical Enterprises. This concern will hereafter be conducted under the name of Fred Linick Enterprises. Mr. Jacoby will leave the entertainment field for the present to become connected with the Mid City Printing Company. It is understood that Mr. Linick will have an announcement of considerable interest to the moving picture industry in the near future.

Manager Jack O'Toole of United, announces that 25 theatres in the Chicago territory have become exhibitor franchise holders in his corporation within the past two weeks. One of these exhibitors is Joe Hop, who, when Mr. O'Toole called in 1918 said, "Come back in 1920." Mr. O'Toole came back on schedule with the result that Joe took franchises for his big New Fort Armstrong Theatre at Rock Island and his Chicago Theatre.

Tom Norman of the executive committee of United, was in Chicago this week, following his trip to Minneapolis, where a convention of the United franchise holders was held. Mr. Norman is enthusiastic and reports northwest exhibitors are showing great interest in his organization. One of the things he arranged while in Minneapolis was for a United-Triangle week, the last of February, during which 100 exhibitors will show United-Triangle pictures for a solid week. Regional Director Phillip Myers of Minot, North Dakota was present at the convention and reported a successful meeting had been held at Fargo. United officials report that it will be only a short time until they can give weekly releases to their franchise holders.

A. F. Victor, head of the Victor Animatiograph plant at Davenport, Ohio

Nathan Ascher of Ascher Brothers, was in New York this week for a conference with the Goldwyn executives and is expected back in Chicago within a few days.

A new house is being built in Alton, Illinois, on the site of the old Ardrome. W. M. Sauvage is the owner.

E. E. Alger of Paxton, Illinois, has completed plans for the erection of a 700-seat house in that city.

Harry Weiss of the Chicago First National office is back at his desk after a three weeks' visit in St. Louis on firm business and reports a record-breaking trip. He placed "In Old Kentucky" in every town he visited. According to Mr. Weiss, one out of every ten exhibitors in every town in southern Illinois reports that he is about to either remodel or else build a new house and business was never better for the exhibitor.

The First National Exhibitors Exchange gave a private showing of the first independent production of Marshall Neilan, "The River's End" at the Playhouse on Tuesday with musical interpretation by the Riviera Theatre orchestra. A large number of exhibitors were present and the comments heard were very favorable to the stirring tale of the royal northwest mounted police.

A luncheon was held at the Morrison Hotel on Friday, February 6, in celebration of the Amalgamation of the Chicago Theatrical Managers Association with the Allied Amusements Association. Dramatic, Vaudeville and Burlesque managers and motion picture exhibitors were present and mutual congratulations were exchanged on the amalgamation which gives Chicago the strongest theatrical body in America. Plans were made to have the theatre men represented on the Allied Amusements Board of Directors by seven members and Dr. Sam Atkinson, vice-president and business manager of the association, outlined the work ahead of the organization. President Maurice Choynski welcomed the theatrical managers to the association and told of the benefits to be derived through thorough cooperation.

J. H. Mayer, Universal's new director of publicity

J. H. Mayer Made Manager of Publicity in East

J. H. Mayer, who has been acting as Eastern district publicity manager for Universal, has been appointed director of publicity succeeding Harry Rice, who returns to Chicago as district publicity manager for the Middle West. Mr. Mayer has been with the New York publicity department of Universal since last summer, coming here from Cincinnati where he was in charge of publicity for the local exchange.

Maryland Exhibitors Elect Officers

At the recent election of officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Maryland, the following officers were re-elected: Eugene B. McCurdy, president; Thomas D. Goldberg, vice-president; J. Louis Rome, treasurer and William Stumpf, secretary.

The new Board of Directors are: Frank Durkee, Charles Hicks, Walter Pacy, Frank Hornig, Louis Schlichter, Wallace Heigh and Benjamin Cluster.

Censorship Fails

sors, and giving them the power to censor moving pictures.

"Further, the same Legislature in 1911, by the Act of June 19, 1911, P. L. 1067, which was the first act in this State establishing a Board of Censors of Moving Pictures, showed its intention that both acts were to be enforced. In case a picture has been approved by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, it would certainly raise a presumption that the same was not an immoral picture, but I do not think that the two acts are inconsistent, or the latter act would repeal by implication the Act of April 13, 1911.

"You are therefore advised that there is nothing in the Act of May 15, 1915, P. L. 534, to prevent a criminal prosecution for showing an immoral picture under the Act of April 13, 1911, P. L. 64.

"Very truly yours, William I. Swoope, Deputy Attorney-General."

Exhibitors Plan Convention

Utica to Be Scene of New York State Exhibitors' Convention Next Month

THE coming State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York, which is to be held at the Utica Hotel in the City of Utica March 9th and 10th (Tuesday and Wednesday), bids fair to develop into an event of prime importance.

The record for successful state conventions has heretofore been held by last year's State gathering which foreshadowed the coming of liberal Sunday legislation. It is almost a certainty that the 1920 Convention will foreshadow legislation affecting the Industry more vital even than the law of last year which restored to the people the right to recreation after church hours on Sunday. When the joint session of the Legislative and Executive Committees recently held at Albany adjourned, every member had pledged himself to bring the greatest possible attendance of exhibitors to the Utica Convention.

The most enthusiastic worker for a record convention at Utica is the Treasurer of the Organization, Mr. William H. Linton, one of whose theatres is situated in Utica. Mr. Linton has gone ahead with elaborate preparations for the reception and entertainment of delegates and exhibitors generally who will attend the Convention.

The people of the City of Utica at the recent Referendum on the question of Sunday opening voted a decided majority in favor of having the motion picture houses open on the first day of the week. The press of Utica unanimously supported the liberal side of the question. As a result, the entire population of Utica is looking forward to the Convention, fully resolved to make the attending exhibitors feel at home and give them the Freedom of the City.

Motion Picture Bureau Has First Luncheon

The recently organized Motion-Picture Bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon last week launched their opening gun for a cleaner, better and more business-like industry here, when Harry M. White, chairman, outlined to the members the policies and functions of the new "Board."

Unusual interest is attached to the activities of this organization, accounting for this large assemblage of film men. This gathering, it is stated by a report from the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, marks the first successful attempt of exchangemen at organization. That it is being favorably looked upon by exhibitors is said to have been evidenced by the presence of nearly the entire board of directors of the Stanley Company of America, who are reported to have given their heartiest endorsement to the project.

Los Angeles Escapes the Epidemic Ban So Far

The Los Angeles territory has not been affected by the new epidemic raging in the eastern portion of the country with one exception. Public meetings in the small town of Columbus, New Mexico, on the Mexican border, have been ordered discontinued and the theatres there are closed; according to telegram received by the Los Angeles exchange this week.

Kenneth MacGowan Joins Bernay in Publicity

Moving picture concerns feeling the need for new angles in their publicity and new life in their promotion work generally, will be interested to hear that Kenneth Macgowan has associated himself with Edward L. Bernay's Publicity Bureau, to take special charge of the motion picture publicity and promotion for that organization.

Felix Feist Arrives in Los Angeles

Felix Feist, vice-president and sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles on Thursday, January 29th. The Goldwyn executive was welcomed by Branch Manager Maurice Wolf and his corps of associate workers and by Goldwyn studio officials. Mr. Feist entered at once into the formulation of a plan of campaign that would get him in touch with the exhibitors of the territory.

Theatre Space the Same in Paper Shortage

The Tampa, Florida, Daily Tribune is said to be short of paper. They have eight cars on the tracks, somewhere between Tampa and the factory. The Government seem helpless to get this paper for them, and as a consequence the publication has been forced to reduce its size. Many columns of advertising are forced out daily, but the theatres have been allowed their full space, and the "write ups" have been carried as usual, according to reports.

Combine Will Handle Film Affairs

Announcement is made of a new combination formed to handle publicity, plays and scenarios, with executive offices in suite 907, Brokaw Building, New York. The principals are Ray Owens, formerly associated with Frank A. Keeney's picture and theatrical enterprises; and Arthur Oliver, formerly Mr. Keeney's director of publicity.

Picture House Collapses in Lyndhurst, N. J.

The Stuyvesant theatre, of Lyndhurst, N. J., collapsed on February 5, it is stated, presumably from the excess weight of the wet snow. The only damage was that inflicted on the property; the house was empty at the time, and there were no pedestrians passing when the cave-in occurred, according to reports.

TROY HOUSES ARE LIABLE TO ANOTHER TAX

MOTION picture houses in Troy, N. Y. may be taxed two cents on every ticket sold on Sundays, without being allowed to increase the price of admission a like amount, if a resolution just introduced into the Common Council of that city is passed. The money would be used in replenishing the police and firemen's pension funds, now sadly depleted, it is alleged, by reason of politics and men being kept on the payrolls. The city plays to about 15,000 admissions each Sunday. The scheme has resulted in a wave of indignation sweeping over the city. Troy draws heavily on Sundays from Albany and other places which do not enjoy Sunday shows.

Predicts Bankruptcy

in the face. They live on optimism and any other atmosphere does not tend to make them happy.

"I have noticed in the trade papers during recent months several notices of warning from men who make it their business to sell pictures in foreign territories, but due to the fact that some of these men's names do not appear daily in public print, their warnings evidently receive very little attention and the game goes merrily on.

"Activities in the production centers still continue without any thought; extravagances of directors and stars are the order of the day. The business has not benefited as I stated before by the prosperity which this country has enjoyed for the past four years, as producers have put nothing in reserve to meet the situation which is apparent in the immediate future. The result is that today the cost of pictures that are in the making is based on world-wide receipts, when they should be based only on the revenue to be derived from the United States. And American producers must make up their minds to deliver their pictures abroad and accept therefore foreign currency instead of United States dollars. This will enable them to forestall any foreign competition in the future in their home market, but, for the American producers to accomplish this, there has got to be a retrenchment along all lines, particularly actors' salaries, and authors' prices for their stories. There has got to be a retrenchment in lavish expenditures which heretofore have been the rule. If this is not done and done immediately a hard time is in store for the picture industry in the United States.

"In order to accomplish the results, it is not necessary to cheapen or to put out inferior productions, but it is absolutely essential that every dollar be made to show on the screen; and the principal order of retrenchment must be made in the reduction as stated, of artists' and authors' remuneration, less lavish expenditures in sets and more attention paid to the dramatic effect.

"The Press Book by the Men Who Use Them"

A Series of Articles Secured by C. L. Yearsley, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit

By WILLIAM EDWARD MULLIGAN

Formerly With the Minneapolis Journal

WHILE moving picture publicity departments are struggling night and day with press sheets in the hope of being able to break into print in the newspapers with a few lines in behalf of a certain star or picture, they are truly overlooking one golden opportunity that is constantly beckoning to them.

The joy of the publicity departments seems to be complete when they register with some little story in the movie section of a metropolitan newspaper. But if these publicists only knew how the columns in the Sunday magazine and feature sections of some of the country's leading dailies are fairly yawning for live copy, whether it concerns the movies or politics, adventure or romance, I am sure they would do their share to meet this demand.

There are several instances of a passed up opportunity of this character that I might cite. The other day I called on Ray Marshall, Sunday magazine editor and feature writer for the Minneapolis Journal. As city editor of the Journal, Mr. Marshall had been my boss for nearly two years. I had my own ideas about press sheets, of course, but I asked Marshall, who among other things had himself been a movie editor, what he thought of them.

'In the main they're not delivering the news the way we want it," he said. "It is quite evident that the men getting out these press sheets are working under high pressure and at some disadvantage. They are apparently trying to fill up a vast amount of space. Naturally their work plainly shows it is forced and that they cannot be in direct contact with the source of their news. The result frequently is a lot of drivel in the press sheets about a beautiful actress appearing in some wonderful play, the story of a scene in extravagant language that is certain to excite a feeling of prejudice in the editor, but not a word containing one iota of real honest-to-goodness news appears. I would say that if the press sheets contained just one or two items of Simon pure news, a short synopsis of the photoplay and the advertising matter that may be helpful to the exhibitor, they could eliminate all the other stuff, save themselves lots of useless labor and give a rest to the overworked waste-basket. Editors recognize the fact that there is no subject of more general interest to-day than the movies. The country is filled with fans, and any real news concerning the doings in filmdom, which to them is a land of mystery, is always in demand. Why don't the press sheets carry some of this news? Why do newspaper men have to actually dig for it?"

Mr. Marshall produced a clipping that he had culled from a California newspaper. It had to do with a certain star, who was a favorite among Minneapolis photoplay enthusiasts. The story, which was rather brief, related that this particular star had resolved to make a sacrifice for the sake of science and the benefit of mankind.

"Here's a clipping, Mull, and I didn't get it from a press sheet either," he said. "Do you know what I'm going to do with it? I'm going to make a full page story for the Sunday magazine section of the journal. Our morgue has a good lay out for this star and the art department can frame up some nifty illustrations. Why in Sam Hill are the press sheets failing to give us even a hint of such stories as these? Every film fan in Minneapolis will read this story eagerly and the next time a picture comes to town showing this star many of them will be sure to go to see her.

I have refrained from mentioning the name of the star in question and her actual purpose at the request of Mr. Marshall, because he wants this magazine feature to be a newspaper "scoop!"

Certainly there must be things in the lives of stars, experiences, ambitions, etc., and in the production of photoplays that would be well worth the telling and of interest to fans and editors.

"Is Theda Bara dead?" was the queer question that Marshall shot to me.

I replied that I didn't think so, and asked him if the newspaper had received a dispatch stating that she was.

"No," he said, "but probably half the women in town think she is dead. Someone has informed my wife to that effect, and I have heard the same story from a score of other people. How it originated, I cannot say definitely, but I believe it started with a newspaper story saying that Theda Bara was cast in a play in which she committed suicide through despondency resulting from the injury of her eyesight by the use of bella donna. The clumsy wording of the article perhaps gave out the wrong impression. What a wonderful opportunity for a real live newspaper story! Theda Bara should rise to the occasion and assert that she is very much alive. It would undoubtedly be very interesting to get her views on suicide and the use of bella donna. As far as I know, Theda Bara may be either dead or alive, but I am sure that I would welcome a press sheet or other information that would throw light on this matter."

One of the big mistakes of the press sheet today as I see it is the habit of from time to time giving away some of the secrets of moving picture production. Stories of this sort, it is true, are frequently printed by the newspapers because they do constitute news, but I believe that this kind of publicity is more harmful than good. For instance a press story goes on to relate how realistic is the storm scene in a certain picture, then enlightens the reader by saying that it isn't as realistic as it actually seems. The story explains every detail of the mechanical methods used to produce this storm; in a word it takes the fan right behind the scenes and proceeds to disillusion him. What the fan wants is a real storm. As soon as he is told that it is a fake, he loses interest in the picture. He has a feeling that it is not true to life, and when in the picture theatre he comes to the storm scene, he begins to think of the mechanical effects that produced it, and the result is the story is spoiled for him. He doesn't leave the theatre with any happy illusions, that is, if he goes to the theatre at all.

The same is true of the so-called legitimate stage but this subject sets me off on another tangent. Why in thunderation do we who are connected with the moving picture game keep constantly referring to the "legitimate stage?" Perhaps if the press sheets would lay off of that expression the rest of us would, too. Is there anything illegitimate about the movies? I say emphatically that there is not. The silent drama is every bit as legitimate as the spoken drama, and it is by far the greatest medium of popular entertainment in this hemisphere to-day. Let the press sheets discourage, or at least let alone, this term, and they will be doing something to dignify the industry.

There are to-day few secrets of the spoken drama, vaudeville and the circus. The press agents have done their best to explode them in order to get publicity, but their efforts have had the effect of a boomerang. To-day it is very hard for the circus or the theatrical press agent to dig up a really good mystery story with which he can get by. The reason is he has laid bare the mystery, and it is this very subtle element that frequently makes a story worth while. Barnum was probably right when he said "The people like to be fooled." But I think his expression might better have been, "The people like to be fooled as long as they do not know it." When Barnum found out that the newspapers liked these mystery stories about the "woolly horse" and the Cardiff giant, he decided he would give them all the material he could turn out and so he hired a bunch of press agents. Every showman in the country at once emulated the great circus king. The press agents wrote fast and furiously. They virtually turned the show game inside out, until there was little left for the public to know. But how far would any circus get to-day with a "woolly horse" or a Cardiff giant? It takes a might good, hair-raising act to go over now. As one city editor said to me: "If the press agents hadn't broken their necks to expose every interesting illusion, newspaper editors to-day would be sending their reporters around to the theatres and circus lots, just as they do to the city hall and courthouse, to pick up live human interest and mystery stories."

The screen is still a thing of mystery, charm and romance to the public in this age. It is a wonderful opportunity to capitalize this essence of mystery and the unknown about it through the medium of the right kind of publicity. Sceen publicity is indeed a timely subject just now.

I for one feel that much criticism that has been aimed at moving picture press sheets has been unfair. I feel that credit should be given where it is due. Of course, there is room for improvement and that is why I have attempted to point out some defects as I see them, but there can be no denying the fact that the press sheet to-day is one of the most important adjuncts in the business of the really wideawake exhibitor. On it he relies chiefly for his advertising copy. Frequently he obtains from it valuable suggestions for exploitation. He also gets, or should get, the material for news stories.

The average press sheet servise the needs of the small town exhibitor and editor very well. I think I am qualified to make this statement, for two of

SEEGER'S
HIGH GRADE

One of the most attractive window displays we have seen for "Back to God's Country," the work of the Post theatre, Battle Creek Banner Week in Entertainment at Marion, Ind.

THE exploitation of George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" given by Billy Connors, manager, and Clarence L. Branigan, proprietor of the Luna-Lite theatre at Marion, Ind., was on a larger scale than in any other Hoosier city where the film has been shown. Connors booked the picture for an entire week, something which had never been done before in Marion, a city of thirty thousand., The usual run is for one day only.

Connors' task was made harder because Miss Dolly Spurr, enterprising and well known manager of the Mutual theatre company, booked "Old Kentucky" for her Indiana theatre to run in opposition to "The Miracle Man." A merry battle ensued.

If there was an inch of available advertising space in Marion which Connors left uncovered it could not be seen with the naked eye.

For a week preceding the film's run he had teaser ads in the two Marion newspapers. Late in the week he flooded the town with billboard announcements. Not content with the usual signboard lithographs Connors heralded the coming of "The Miracle Man" in practically every downtown show window with smaller cards. Among other stunts he actually got permission from the two principal banks to place portable sign boards right smack in the center of their naturally conservative fronts. "The Miracle Man" posters shouted from the fence corners out in the country and shrieked their message from the advertising boards on the front end of street cars.

To start the week off with a loud and resounding bang, Connors bought two pages in the heart of the Sunday morning edition of the Marion Leader-Tribune and blazoned forth the message once more.

On the strength of the size of his display the newspaper gave Mr. Connors a front page story in a box calling attention to the display with the announcement that it was the largest theatrical advertising ever purchased in the city.

Novelty Scores at Arcade, Jacksonville

PHIL. GERSDORF, publicity director, and J. O. Brown, manager of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, put over an exploitation stunt for "What's Your Husband Doing?" which can be O. K.'d without further try-outs as worth using for this picture and perhaps for other features based on a comedy idea. Best of all, as Mr. Gersdorf says in a letter describing the stunt, it doesn't cost a cent or at least didn't cost the Arcade anything since the wax figures were borrowed from a department store.

The Arcade idea, fully explained by the accompanying photograph, was to stand two wax figures, dressed as male and female, in one of the stage bowers provided in the Arcade at each side of the screen. Several days before the showing of "What's Your Husband Doing" the Arcade began showing these figures at the end of the screening of the feature then being run. The plan was to keep the whole stunt secret by allowing the figures to remain in the dark until the time mentioned and then suddenly throw a spot light on the bower disclosing what at first glance looked to be two lovers. The sign over the figures was the only explanation made as to the reason.

At the same time the light was focused on the dummies the orchestra jazzed into "You'd Be Surprised." With the colored lightings in the bower and the effect heightened by the distance the stunt never failed to arouse a round of laughter and the buzzing that could be heard throughout the house attested to the effect on the audience, according to Mr. Gersdorf's statement of how the stunt worked out.

Another exploitation idea was used for this picture was to send out postals from Atlanta, Georgia, on which was written in long hand, "What's Your Husband Doing? Doug and Doris." These of course was mailed to a selected list of married women in Jacksonville and created a whole lot of speculation. According to Mr. Gersdorf a half of Jacksonville's benedicts were being viewed with suspicion by their better halfs until the announcement of the opening date of the feature was made.

Attractive Window Display for Shipman Feature

AN inexpensive exploitation campaign that shows every evidence of bringing to other exhibitors the same box-office success it brought to the Post theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., has just been completed by Messrs. Lipp and Cross who operate the Post.

After arranging with a local citizen who had a great number of stuffed animals which either he or his friends had killed during winter hunting engagements, for the use of these stuffed animals, the theatre was enabled to have the benefit of a lobby display that featured practically every animal seen in "Back to God's Country."

One of the fashionable music stores was proud to permit the display to be used in his best window and in addition to an attractive card bearing the date and naming the theatre a notice stating where and by whom each animal was killed, was used in the window.

In addition to the display window, the management arranged for using the tracks of "Wapi—the Killer" extensively throughout the city with the result that "Back to God's Country" established a high record during its five day showing.

Teaser Idea for Advertising "The Copperhead"

H. B. WATTS, manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha, an A. H. Blank house, advances an idea for exploiting "The Copperhead," which has quite an idea in it. He figured that a lot of the younger generation would not know what a "copperhead" really was, and in consequence used the title of the picture as a "teaser" ad. He had cuts made one column by one-half inch, and two columns by an inch, and ran these one to page twenty or thirty times in the various papers. On Thursday before the showing he ran ten one-inch displays in each of the papers, which beside using "The Copperhead" cuts carried type reading as follows: "Maybe the name 'Copperhead' is some new breakfast food. Nope, see papers tomorrow." Other ads run where the sentences relative to near beer, automobiles, magazine, etc., were used instead of the "breakfast food" wording.

On Friday Mr. Watts came out with his announcement of "the Copperhead" booking and all the mystery was explained. According to advices from the Strand manager the scheme worked well.

WHATS YOUR HUSBAND DOING?

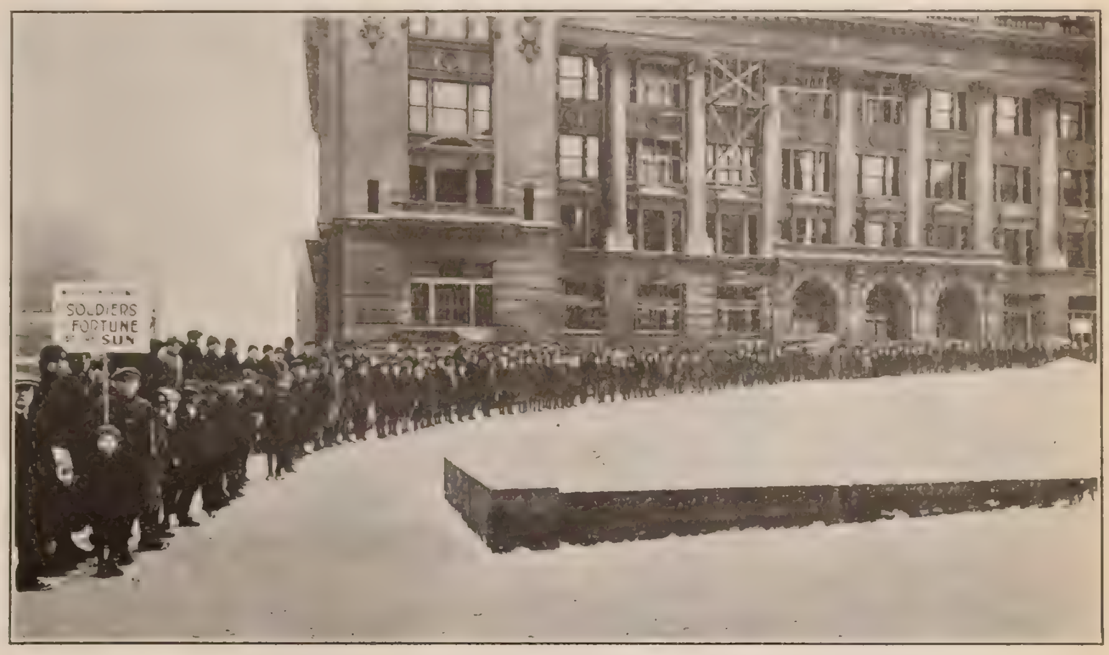
Good Exploitation for Allan Dwan Feature

Harry Goldberg, Manager of the Sun Theatre, Omaha, Neglects No Opportunity to Obtain the Public's Attention

THE plan of running "teaser" advertisements in newspaper's classified columns was adopted recently by Harry F. Goldberg of the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., in connection with the showing of "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production

In addition Mr. Goldberg tied up the showing of this feature with a visit of General Pershing to the city as told in last week's issue, and obtained front page publicity and other strong representation in the news columns. The net result of the strenuous campaign was that the house record of the theatre was broken.

An inspiring and thrilling incident was added to the exploitation when four hundred and fifty boy scouts paraded from the Court House to the theatre to witness a special showing. The picture went over big with the boys, who cheered it continually and broke into a small-sized tumult when the battle scenes were flashed on the screen.



The teaser campaign which ran in the classified advertising columns of the Omaha Daily News constituted an exploitation novelty with a definite box-office value. The idea consisted of inserting six different advertisements for seven days under various classifications:

Under "Situations Wanted—Male" the following appeared:

"Bright young man wants position as theatre usher. Prefer theatre that will show 'Soldiers of Fortune,' as I want to see this several times. Call Douglas 5342."

Another, under "Financial," read as follows:

"Want to exchange my new Ford roadster for ten reserved seats for 'Soldiers of Fortune.' Call Douglas 5342."

On another page under "Lost and Found" the following copy was used:

"Lost—Lady's black handbag containing two $5 bills, some silver and loge seats for 'Soldiers of Fortune.' Finder may keep bag and money but please return the tickets. Call Douglas 5342."

Under "Help Wanted—Female," was printed the following:

"Girls and women of all ages, who enjoy a good love romance, to see 'Soldiers of Fortune.' Call Douglas 5342."

The "Situations Wanted—Female" column carried this announcement:

"Beautiful blonde young lady desires position as theatre cashier. Wants to work in theatre that will show 'Soldiers of Fortune,' as she loves to be where the crowds are. Call Douglas 5342."

Under "Help Wanted—Male" there was this notice:

"Men, ages 17 to 71, who have not seen the biggest picture of the year, to see 'Soldiers of Fortune.' Call Douglas 5342."

It was possible to estimate accurately how effective this form of "teaser" campaign had been by the number of telephone calls that were received at the box-office for reservations of seats. Mr. Goldberg stated that the results in this direction exceeded his expectations and that the stunt had proved itself a box-office asset.

The strenuous exploitation campaign conducted by Mr. Goldberg with this feature also included a mail campaign in which letters were sent to 700 selected patrons and to 250 school teachers. The letter to the educators was good to admit two persons to any performance, but requested that the holder attend early in the week so that he might recommend it to his pupils as a type of story calculated to imbue the highest national ideals in American youths.

More than 1,000 automobiles were tagged early in the week of showing as a novel and sure means of attracting the highest class of patronage. The tags were small red cards reading as follows: "FINAL WARNING. Anyone who fails to see 'Soldiers of Fortune,' by Richard Harding Davis, at the Sun theatre next week, will miss the biggest picture of the year." Many cars bearing these tags drew up in front of the theatre during the week, testifying to the effectiveness of the stunt.

Mr. Goldberg started his newspaper advertising with a half-page announcement describing "Soldiers of Fortune" as the "cinematographic thunderbolt of all time." This ran in the Omaha newspapers on the Sunday that marked the beginning of the showing. The dominant reading notices and positions in the newspapers' pictorial layout were given this attraction in addition.

Stages Scene from Picture as Interlude

SID GRAUMAN, managing director of Grauman's theatre and Grauman's Rialto of Los Angeles, was one of the first exhibitors to recognize the value of the stage setting and prologue and of creating an atmosphere for the feature picture, and has continued to be a leader in this department until he has became an authority on this subject. Oftentimes Mr. Grauman's methods are simplicity itself and always they are based on mental suggestions induced by music, lightings, etc.

The week of January 19th marked the advent of the Thomas H. Ince production, "Behind the Door," featuring Hobart Bosworth, a sea story of marked power and intensity. Grauman's lighting effects throughout the entire incidental program ranged from a pale sea green to a marine blue, only changing to red later during the most passionate moments in the photoplay and during the scene in which the ocean liner took fire. The program opened with selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's opera, "Pinafore," played by Grauman's Symphony Orchestra. Of course, this number veritably smacks of the salty brine, and later on the program Milton Charles, organist, played the late song hit, "Dardanelles."

A baritone singer rendered "I am the Captain of My Soul, the Master of My Fate," with a background depicting the deck of "The Perth." Attired exactly like Hobart Bosworth was in the screen drama and strangely resembling Bosworth, the singer positively expressed Bosworth's screen character in "Behind the Door" in the song selected.

Sid Grauman had fittingly paved the way to a keen sympathy with and anticipation of "Behind the Door" before the cast of characters was flashed on the screen. His "piece de resistance" however, came in the nature of an interlude, in the opinion of many handled with a finesse surpassing all previous achievements at Grauman's or elsewhere.

It lasted six minutes, and presented in person Hobart Bosworth and James Gordon and Richard Wayne, in a climatic scene absolutely reproduced, with extreme care as to detail and atmosphere, from the photoplay. The inside of the cabin of the ship was represented, wherein Bosworth tells the mate and the first officer to LOOK BEHIND THE DOOR! Even the shadow of the fated Hun officer was there—in all its terrible significance. The applause was deafening, and recorded another singular Grauman triumph.

Boston Traveler Runs Contest in Connection with Pickford Picture

"WHAT was the 'gladdest' incident of your life?"

That is the contest that is being waged in the Boston Traveler for a period of ten weeks, a ten dollar prize being offered for the best "glad" incident, each week, and the three next best are given free admission tickets to the Mary Pickford production of "Pollyanna," which is having a most successful ten weeks' run at the Tremont Temple, in that city.

The Traveler in their announcement of the contest said, "Almost everyone has read or heard about 'Pollyanna the Glad Girl,' who with little enough to be glad for, nevertheless radiated the spirit of gladness and brought cheer to all with whom she came in contact.

"You have all felt the keen thrill of 'gladness,' either from a good deed you have done for others or from a kindly act that some one has done for you.

"Write the little story of your gladdest incident in not more than one hundred words and send it to the Pollyanna Editor, care the Boston Traveler. For the best letter received during each week a prize of Ten Dollars will be awarded. Ten minutes work may win $10."

The four prize winners for the first week were the following:

"A tired little mother came to look at the vacant apartment over ours. When moving day arrived, lo, what a sight. A tiny, wailing babe in her arms, and four other small children clamoring for lunch, when everything was in a turmoil. My heart went out to her. Quickly I spread my table, and soon the little family was enjoying itself most heartily, and, ah, the happy look on the little woman's face. The babe soon drifted to sleep, and the other kiddies went out 'to get acquainted,' leaving me with a new friend, and a true friend still."

MRS. FLORENCE M. POTTER.

The second prize was given to the following letter:

"The 'Gladdest' incident of my life came to me as I placed in a mother's arms her little daughter that I had saved from drowning at Venice Beach, California. While enjoying the beautiful winter bathing I heard a faint cry above the roar of the surf. To my horrow I saw a little one out beyond her depth and unable to swim. I swam to her and brought her to safety. The thrill of the gladness that came over me when that mother offered a prayer of thankfulness was the 'gladdest moment of my life.'" MRS. ANNA SMITH.

The third prize was awarded to the following letter:

"It was Christmas morning, 1919. I was feeling very ill, lying on my bed. My heart was sad; being a young shut-in I knew my Christmas would be sad. But just as I was feeling heart-sick and blue, a gentleman rushed in with a large square box calling my name. Forgetting my illness, I sat upon my pillow saying, 'Oh, mother, what can it be?' On opening it I found it brim full of presents from friends and neighbors far and near. That was the 'gladdest incident of my life.'"

DAISY ADA RUSSELL.

The fourth prize was given to the following communication:

"The gladdest incident I think I ever had in my life was when I was in the service of my country, and it happened in Beau-Desert, France. I was in Base Hospital No. 23, just recovering from a shrapnel wound in the left hip. It was in the 17th day of December, 1918, and I was just thinking of the dear folks at home when the sergeant major rushed into the ward and shouted, 'All patients who are able to walk will sail for the United States on the next boat," which was leaving Bordeaux the next day." The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

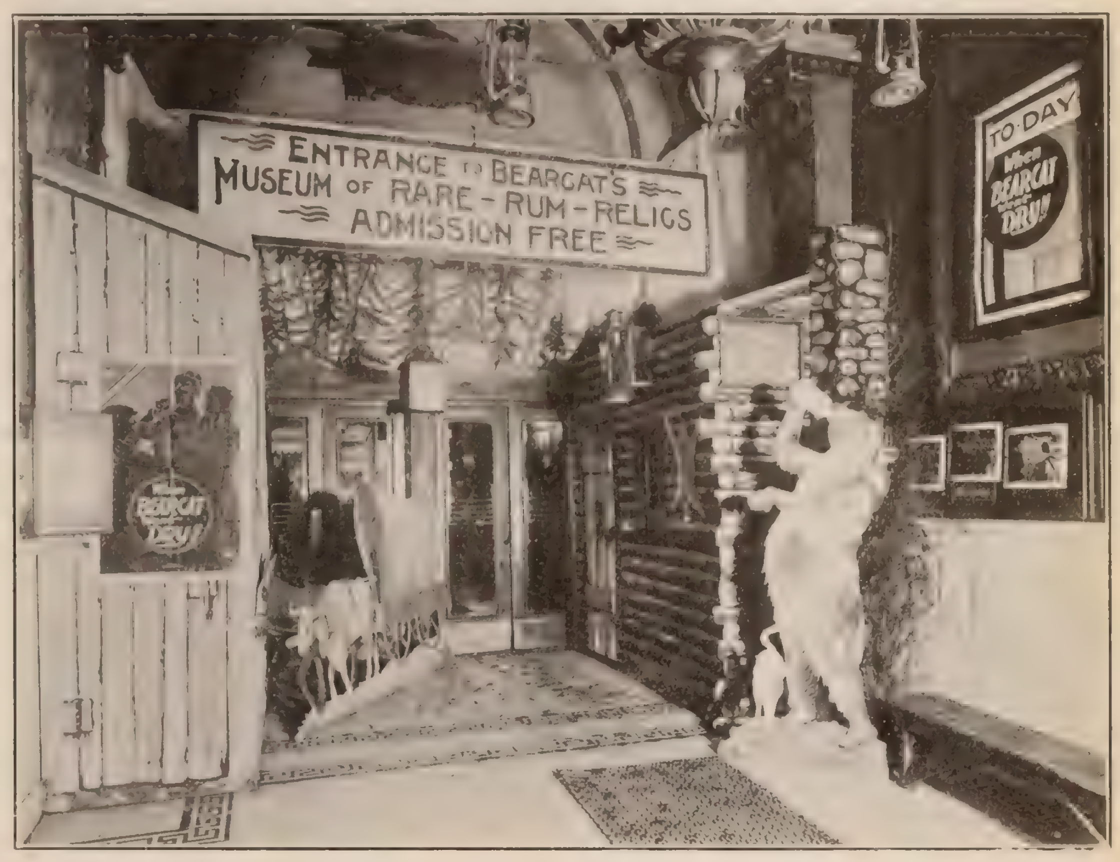
A Bear of An Exploitation Idea for "When Bear Cat Went Dry," the Work of the Victoria Theatre, Baltimore



NIXON'S Victoria theatre in Baltimore evidently wasn't taking any chances on the possible lack of humor in "When Bear Cat Went Dry." And lest by any chance the producers had neglected to put comedy into the picture itself, the Nixon-Nirdlinger management put it there through the Lobby Display. A glance at the accompanying photographs show that they overlooked scarcely a detail suggested by the title and theme of the picture. And as "Bear Cat" was presented at the Victoria at the very time that the 18th Amendment went into action, the display must have created a furore by its peculiar aptness. The main entrance of the theatre was transformed, by scenery, into a very suggestive semblance of a hamlet in the "moonshine country" mountains. The Main Show was reserved for the interior lobby of the theatre, which was converted throughout its length of over 100 feet into a "Museum of Rare Rum Relics." Here were gathered some precious souvenirs of some of Baltimore's most popular rendezvous of the days that are gone. There was, for instance, from the ancient Hotel Lexington, the oven on which "was fried the last terrapin served as free lunch with a 5c schooner." From a famous old road-house was obtained a chandelier under which "Tom & Jerry was first drunk in Baltimore." "Pink" West's famous cosy-corner contributed the last contribution-basket passed there by a Salvation Army lassie. Some of the relics shown were open to suspicion on the score of their authority. There were famous "growlers," alleged to have been "discovered in the Pyramids of Egypt and the Purlieus of Highlandtown." Then, too, there was a Statue of "Bacchus," the Greek God of Drink "on his last toot," which a placard pretended had come from Pompeii. A tiny vial contained a pinch of genuine mincemeat—"the kind mother used to make." Under a carefully guarded glass case was a sample of Dr. Keeley's Gold Cure. A Burglar-Proof dress suit case, contained "Bootleggers'" tools. An iron-barred cabinet displayed "popular temperance beverages now served at hotels, cafes and restaurants, Sloan's Liniment, Father John's Tonic, Peruna, Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, The Seven Sutherland Sisters, and Benzoate-of-Soda." An armed guard brought down from the Cumberland Mountains, where the scene of the picture is laid, protected "a million-dollar necklace, composed of such precious jewels as benedictine, absinthe, eau-de-vie-de-dantzig, maraschino" and other highly-colored rarities. The marble head that held this priceless necklace was further decorated by a coronet made of cocktail glasses topped by a full bottle—actually full—of champagne. There was a display of antique candle-lanterns, with which the revelers used to be supplied after a prolonged session with cronies in the haunts of Barleycorn. There were barrels, jugs, and kegs containing ostensibly the stimulants that have lately come into vogue, such as "dopey-croky," wood alcohol—"the drink with a kick—the bucket." Visitors to the Museum were warned away from a cage containing "pink camels and green elephants" which on close view proved to be white mice. A den of "flying fish and creeping hippopotami," rarely held nothing more dangerous than eight or ten live snakes, said to have been "captured in the last known case of D. T.'s." Perhaps the finest touch of specious seriousness was given the ingenious display by the series of oil-paintings that lined the walls of the lobby. These were portraits in caricature of imaginary figures in "Bear Cat"; among them was the portrait of "the Lady who put down rum in Bear

Fortune Teller Aids in Putting Over "Destiny"

THE Strand theatre of Cleveland besides the usual publicity like newspaper space and billboard space used some novel exploitation to help put over his engagement of "Destiny."

The plot of the picture suggested the uncertainty of life and the mystery of destiny. The manager of the theatre thought of a clever idea to interest the passerby and bring him extra-business. He hired a fortune teller, rented a tent and set them both up in business in his lobby.

Over the ticket booth he placed a sign reading, "Notice to Patrons—Every fiftieth ticket registered at box office this week entitles holder to a Free Fortune Reading for two." The stunt worked nicely. The fortune teller was kept quite busy but the best results were obtained because of the gossip which the idea caused around town.

Supplementing this stunt, the management arranged a tie-up with local music dealers who featured for the week a popular song called "Destiny."

"A little exploitation goes a long way," says the manager of this theatre.

Cat's town," and adjoining was the portrait of her husband "who also put it down." Then there was the Fireman, "always first at a Saloon fire." There was the old school doctor, who as soon as Bear Cat went Dry treated everyone of his patients for influenza no matter if their ailment were only chilblains, and prescribed accordingly. These paintings, the work of Mr. Harry McComas, Stage-Director of the Victoria, were so admirably done that one of the Baltimore Art critics "Reviewed" them in all seriousness as the work of a hitherto undiscovered genius.

The ingenious lighting-effects were arranged throughout the lobby by Mr. Daniel Lane, Director-of-Lights at the Victoria, and the entire scheme of the display was carried out with scrupulous attention to every detail, so that persons were puzzled for a moment as to whether the Management intended the "stunt" seriously or as a joke. Most, however, were quick to catch the humor. In fact, there was an element of danger in the complete success of the venture on this score, because some persons were heard to remark—"What's the use of paying to go inside when you can get as good a show as this out here for nothing."

The display idea was originated by F. G. Nixon Nirdlinger and G. F. Nirdlinger.

Small Town Exhibitor Finds "Stunts" Best Exploitation Medium

FOLLOWING is a letter from O. W. Jastram, manager of the Strand theatre, of Pecantonica, Ill., which we want every small town exhibitor to read. It contains especially two sentences which we don't want you to forget. They are "We are up against intensified advertising or close up business,' and "I have anxiously awaited the small town stunts but have failed to see any."

We too have waited for the "small town stunts." We want them more than the stories of what the "big fellows" are doing. Once more we ask you to tell us how you put over your show.

Since writing you last time I have anxiously awaited the small town stunts of other exhibitors, but have failed to see any.

I have found the best stunt I have ever used, if it can rightly be called "stunt." Something that will bring crowds, week after week, in a town small enough so that everyone knows everyone else. It is simply a "special attraction" night, as we call it. There are quite a few talented people in any small town, and if your show has the good will of the community, and a good reputation, it is easy to persuade them to co-operate. We have some extra attraction once every week (Saturdays during the winter), picked from our home town talent. There are several here who are fine, and probably we are unusually lucky in this respect. We have a professional dancer who lives here (ballet and special dances), several good quartets, one or two readers, two cute little girls (age 14 and 15), who sing duets all around the countryside; and by mixing in a little outside talent, we manage to have something good every week. And the beauty of it is that almost all of them will do it just for their admission to the show, especially the younger people; and you would be surprised how many of their friends will come to see them. We have been using this for nearly three months and it still works.

Here's another one we use on our big pictures—we run the good ones for two days, with only 1,200 population to draw from. Until recently we never raised the children's prices on any picture, as we want them to come; but with the higher prices of film we had to get some increase so we raised our children's prices to nearly the same as adults; then we put on a special children's matinee on the first day of the run, at 4 o'clock, and printed tickets—"This ticket and 11 cents will admit any school child"—you know the formula. The result is that we run from 150 to 250 kids at our matinee, and have that room at night for the higher priced adult tickets. Besides, the kids go home and tell their folks all about it. We have done this on three big ones, and intend to do it on all.

Our regular prices at present are 11 and 22 cents

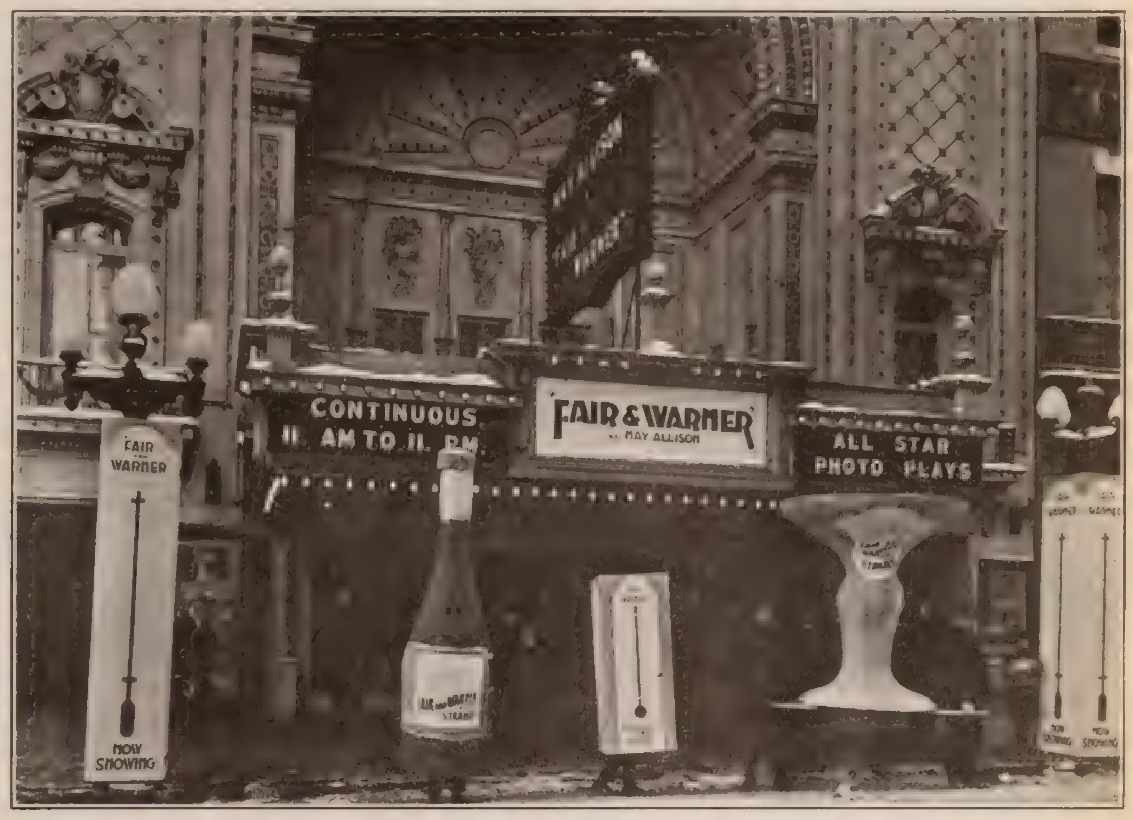
Ten Below Zero for "Fair and Warmer"

Charles C. Perry, Manager of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, Conquers with Unique Exploitation in Spite of Cold Wave

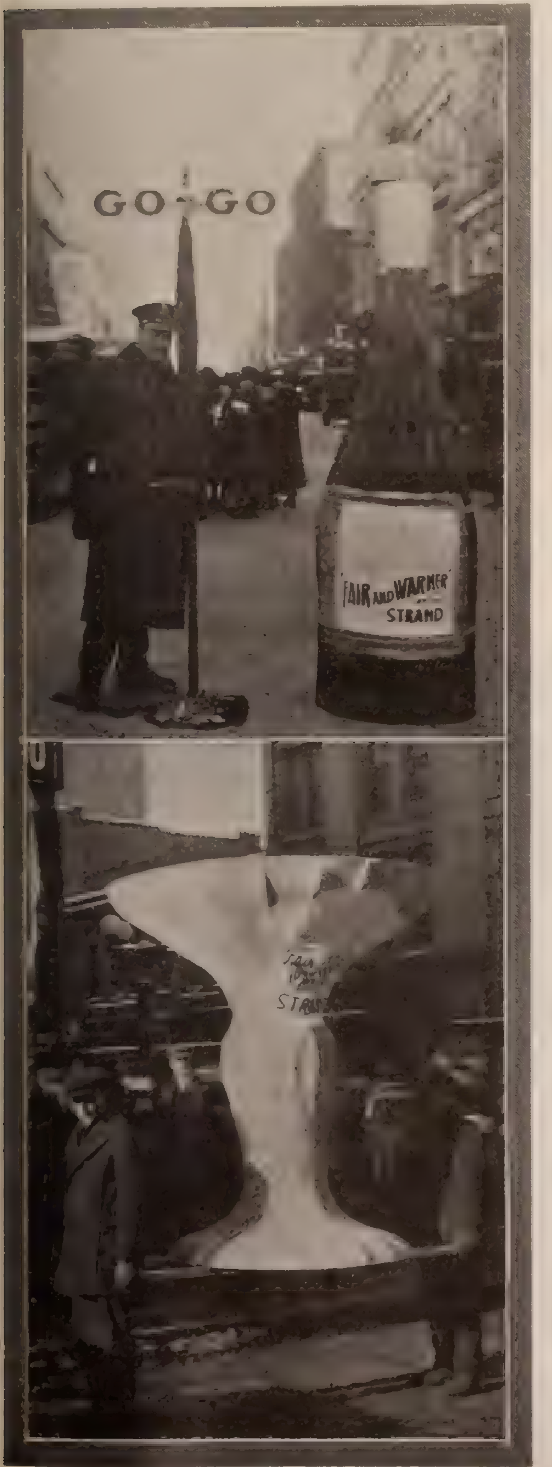
TEN-BELOW zero weather was unable to stop the successful exploitation of "Fair and Warmer" by Charles C. Perry, manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis.

There is nothing to prove that the title of the picture had any suggestive qualities, for it takes more than that to withstand the midwinter blasts of the Northwest, as any resident, or any visitor, either, will tell you. And the present winter has been one of the coldest and one of the most consistent of recent years, consequently reflecting on the box office.

Mr. Perry took advantage of the fact that the national prohibition amendment went into effect just at the time he played "Fair and Warmer." He did this by having a bottle, a thermometer and a cocktail glass, each so constructed that a boy could get inside of it, paraded through the streets during the busy hours of the day. On each was the wording, "this is the bottle (or the glass) that held the famous cocktail in 'Fair and Warmer' now at Strand theatre."



Here is part of the Strand's novel exploitation for "Fair and Warmer"



Two more of the Strand's novelty advertising mediums for "Far and Warmer"

Naturally these created considerable interest, since the average person connected them with the death of J. Barleycorn, and during that particular week the newspapers were devoting no little front page space to the prospective passing out of the symbol of intoxicating drinks.

Connecting "Fair and Warmer," one of the best farces ever written with drinks and drinking as its theme, with what was probably the most universally read news story of the week, proved to be excellent showmanship on the part of Mr. Perry. His opening was big, in spite of the fact that of all stage stories, scarcely one other is as well known through the Northwest as "Fair and Warmer," for during the past few years it has been played over and over at short intervals by road companies, and repeated in stock.

The familiarity of the play-going public with "Fair and Warmer" made it seem probable that the play would have difficulty in surviving a week's run. But Mr. Perry had confidence that it would.

In his advertising Mr. Perry laid emphasis on the subject as one that was even then being legislated into the discard; he posted the city on "the cocktail play." In short, he literally turned his theatre into a "funeral parlor," where "wets" and "drys" alike could hold memorial services or celebrate as their conscience dictated.

That Mr. Perry's bottle attracted attention as it was carried about the streets was evidenced when, on the night the nation paid its last respects to John Barleycorn, the bottle was appropriated, later being located in a lodge room where it had formed a part of sad ceremonies.

Mr. Perry's ability to make "Fair and Warmer" hold up successfully for one week is all the more praiseworthy since the dramatic editors found practically nothing of interest in the play for reproduction in their columns, everything having been said about it, in their opinion, that was worth saying.

An exceedingly large canvas "Wine glass" bearing the wording "Now Showing May Allison in "Fair and Warmer" at the Strand" was carried about the down town streets by two boys; a small label on the stem of the "glass" served to acquaint people on the sidewalks what the idea was all about but the main purpose of this novel

Soriero Wins Again With Personal Appearance of Photoplay Star

"VARIETY and novelty is the life of the motion picture business quite as much as it is of trade generally" is one of the axioms that Thomas Soriero works on in his efforts to meet the demands and fancies of the thousands of patrons who daily visit New England theatres over which he has general supervision, and is directing head.

"Don't disappoint," is another of his hard, set rules governing the policy of his theatres. "If you promise your patrons some special feature, be sure that that promise is realized, no matter what the cost. It pays in the long run," said General Manager Soriero to a gathering of newspapermen when interviewed recently as to his 1920 policy.

Practical demonstrations of what is meant by his rule "never to disappoint" is forcibly reflected in his recent experiences in presenting Montagu Love in person at the Strand, January 15th, was another incident demonstrating General Manager Soriero's iniative and resourcefulness in making good his personal promise not to disappoint. Mr. Love's appearance was well advertised, and a pleasant and enjoyable trip from Boston planned. Instead of figuring on one of the many mishaps of automobiling, Mr. Soriero found himself face to face with the most strenuous endeavors of the weather man, who provided a blinding, blustering blizzard that started early in the day, and continued throughout the night.

When he came to engage a limousine for the trip from Boston to Lowell he couldn't find anyone courageous enough to tackle the job at first. The roads were all clogged up, and the snow was getting deeper each succeeding hour. After scouring all over Boston he finally located a chauffeur who announced that he would "try anything once," and together with Mr. Love, whose spirit of adventure was quite on a par with Mr. Soriero himself, started northward. It was a long, hard grind but once again he succeeded in filling his engagement despite most discouraging odds. His efforts were well rewarded, for the crowd that greeted the appearance of the star was such that several hundred were turned away. Mr. Love is a big favorite with Lowell patrons. He and Miss June Elvidge, appeared in person at the theatre more than a year ago, being the first big screen stars to be seen on any local stage, having been brought on by Mr. Soriero, and at that time both made a genuine hit and many new and admiring friends.

In presenting him to the audience, Mr. Soriero commented briefly on the experiences of himself and the star to reach the city, and was given a most enthusiastic response of appreciation. Mr. Love made a stirring speech against State Censorship, and before he got through talking, he had convinced the audience that the National Board of Censorship is well able to censor all pictures made for the public of the United States. He told a few good stories appropriate to the occasion—and then held a short reception in the theatre lobby. He hardly had time to meet the hundreds who crowded around him, was hurried away to a dance given by the telephone operators. Here he was again the centre of attraction. Mayor Thompson formally presented him to the crowd, and later in the evening, danced with several of the young women.

Throughout the past year, several other well-known and popular film stars have appeared at the Strand, directly through the personal efforts of General Manager Soriero and his efficient resident manager, William Fleming, and besides these, there have been other interesting features apart from the usual run of high-grade photoplays of the first-run variety.

Below Zero for Fair and Warmer

ad. was to attract the attention of those busy in upstairs office windows. The wording atop the "glass" was sufficiently bright and legible to make it easily read from tops of twelve and fourteen story buildings, hence Mr. Perry killed two birds with one stone in conceiving this idea.

In presenting the feature on the screen Mr. Perry had his orchestra put added zest into the entertainment by introducing some specially written and unusually well played jazz tunes. In his newspaper advertising Mr. Perry had carried out the snappy, good natured style of copy and illustrations which have made the Strand notable for dependably good entertainment and good humor—always.

At time of going to press Manager Perry was busy calling the attention of Minneapolis and 50,000 national auto show visitors to "A Twilight Baby" by the use of a unique street parade, some original and snappy heralds and a number of humorous papier mache cows, dogs and chickens which formed a line in front of his theatre.

Amateur Showman of Twin Cities Give "Great Air Robbery" Exploitation Campaign De Luxe

Curtiss aeroplane exhibit in the West Hotel lobby, arranged through the efforts of the Minneapolis Aero Club for their showing of "The Great Air Robbery" at the New Unique theatre

HE "Great Air Robbery," featuring Lieutenant Locklear, is a picture which just naturally lends f to exploitation and many are the stunts ch are being pulled to aid in putting this pic- over.

no city, however, did it receive a more ex- ded campaign than in Minneapolis, where the ure played at the New Unique theatre all of week.

o make the showing and its attendant cam- n all the more noteworthy the exploitation and entation of the picture went out of the regular trical channels into the hands of what might ermed novices, in as much as the Minneapolis o Club, an organization composed of many of city's wealthy and prominent men bought the luction outright and managed the engagement ts entirety.

he tale of exploitation for this showing is so ed that our correspondent is unable to gather he publicity which the energetic embryo show- put over. To begin with, being men of influence prominent business connections, they were able enlist aid that would be out of the question the theatre manager. Especially was this of the co-operation they obtained from newspapers. Column after column of pub- y appeared in the Minneapolis dailies tell- about the wonders of the feature, the thrills ontained, the things the Aero Club itself was ng to put over the feature. Perhaps the best licity stunt was the inauguration of a model oplane prize contest for children for which es amounting to fifty dollars were given to winners.

he conditions for this contest are best given reprinting a story which appeared in the Minne- lis Daily News under a two-column head. Here :

ll you schoolboys—and schoolgirls, too—

ou whose big brothers flew fighting "ships" in air service; you who like to monkey with pliers screw-driver; you who have built model aero- nes; you who admired Locklear in his daredevil nts with aeroplanes—he Minneapolis Aero club wants to find out how much you know about 'em.

hey are offering three prizes, total $50, for best models submitted.

ou must be no more than 15 years old and at- ding school in Minneapolis. You may use your n judgment in choosing the material from which build your model; the material won't matter in arding the prizes.

The idea is to make your model as nearly as possible like the type of ship you're copying; that's how you are to show your knowledge of ships—not so much in locating each screw and fitting exactly as in knowing the general principles and proportions of the plane.

It may be a monoplane, like the Bleriot, Loening or Morane Parasol; a biplane like the Spad, Handley-Page, Curtiss, Nieuport, Sopwith, Morane biplane, DeHaviland 4, Bristol or Caproni biplane; or a triplane like the Curtiss Triplane, Fokker, Sopwith or Caproni Triplane.

The contest opens tomorrow and continues for 12 days, until Tuesday, Feb. 3. The Daily News will keep you posted daily on details. The big opening announcement with full particulars will be printed tomorrow.

If you have the mechanical ability to build a good model "ship," here's your chance. Try it in the cold evenings, when the snow keeps you off the skating rinks.

Remember—any material goes—the only absolute rules are that the model must not measure more than 36 inches in wing span and not less than 24 inches from propeller to tail tip.

If you decide to enter the contest, write to Aero-

The Press Book by the Men Who Use Them

my ten years' experience in newspaper work were spent in editing a small town daily at Minot, N. D.

The short news stories concerning a photoplay or star brought to me by the small town exhibitor were invariably run in exactly the form they took in the press sheet. After all the main thing the fan in the small town is interested in is the star and the picture showing at the local theatre. A short reader supplies this information. Inasmuch as I was managing editor, city editor, dramatic editor, sporting editor, reporter, proofreader and office boy, all in one, I must confess that while I was with this small town paper I did not have much time to rewrite movie copy. I imagine that other small town editors were situated in much the same way, and the copy was published just as it came from the press sheet. I will have to admit, however, that stories of keener news interest would have been more welcome. In the other eight years of my newspaper career I have been connected with larger dailies, my latest association being with the Minneapolis journal. My duties ranged from police reporter, general assignments, city hall and federal reporter, telegraph editor and rewrite man to special feature writer. I have had ample opportunity to observe what constitutes good and bad copy. These observations disclosed to me that despite the wailings of many carping critics the press sheets are nevertheless supplying the movie sections with stories. All that remains to be done now is to improve the press sheet and increased publicity will follow. While the small town exhibitor will frequently lift the ads bodily, the big city exhibitor usually employs the press sheet in his advertising department to make his own ads from the material available. That is fair enough. The best service the press sheet can be expected to perform is to supply the nucleus, and let the exhibitor do with it as he will.

I have observed that G. N. Briggs, publicity director for Ruben & Finkelstein, Twin City exhibitors, who has been so caustic in his criticism of press sheets, nevertheless seems to have good use for them. A glaring instance of how valuable they really are to him recently came to light in the daily newspaper of Minneapolis in the form of news stories based on material obtained from First National Press Sheet.

Three different stories were printed by the Minneapolis Daily News, the Minneapolis Tribune and the Minneapolis Journal. Two of these stories were based on "A Temperamental Wife" press sheet. One was a very interesting expression of the views of John Emerson and Anita Loos, authors of "A Temperamental Wife," on amateur scenario writing, a subject of vital interest to millions of film fans. This story ran under a two column head on the front page of the Daily News movie section. Another story to the effect that Constance Talmadge would consider marrying a man who was the composite of Charles Schwab, Theodore Roosevelt, Harrison Fisher, Ignace Paderewski and Robert W. Chambers appeared in the News, Tribune and Journal. It was a story with a punch in it. And still a third yarn lifted from another First National press sheet gave Anita Stewart's reasons for her opinion that a big cast of well known actors and actresses such as surrounded her in the production of "Her Kingdom of Dreams" does not detract attention from the main star but makes her extend herself.

Yes, there is plenty of room for constructive criticism of publicity departments, but there is also a tremendous void in a place where deserved credit and encouragement should be justly given.

Aero Club Buys Picture

and encouragement should be justly given. Builders' Exchange, with the name of your school, your teacher's name, your grade and your home address. Write plainly.

The Aero Club officials are inaugurating this contest as a feature of the presentation of "The Great Air Robbery," featuring Ormer Locklear, "daredevil of the air," starting at the New Unique Sunday, Feb. 1.

Be sure to read tomorrow's Daily News for further details.

The success of the contest was assured from the start. Model aeroplanes in quantities which astonished everyone began to pour into the contest headquarters. As soon as it was seen that the affair was to be a winner, a whole fourth floor was secured in the Donaldson Building housing one of Minneapolis' leading department stores and the models were placed on exhibition. Due publicity was of course given the showing and public interest was as great in this exhibition as it was in the Auto show which was being held in Minneapolis the same week, and which was an added stimulant to public interest in things mechanical, all of which worked to call attention to the showing of "The Great Air Robbery" at the New Unique.

At the time we received this information well toward the close of the showing, it looked as if the Locklear picture would establish a record for business at the New Unique, which had been previously held by "The Right to Happiness" and "Blind Husbands."

Accompanying are cuts of window displays used for the showing in connection with the link-up perfected with the Curtiss Aeroplane people. This alone was one of the best bets in exploitation ever put over in the Twin Cities.

Artistic Stage Setting and Prolog Featured at California

This cut will give you an idea of the arti stage setting and prologue number used at California theatre, Los Angeles, during the w of January 31, in which Charles Cadman the n Indian composer was featured.

The scenic canvas was brought into promin by flood lights focused on it and the silho effect is produced by the use of a silk curtai front of both the performers and the canvas.

The feature on the bill at which this prol was presented was Mabel Normand's "Pinto."

The Co-Operative Advertising Idea

CONCRETE proof that the box office rec attending the showing of special feature at tions are controlled by the appropriateness o exploitation designed in behalf of those attract is shown by the experience of three Clev theatres, the Metropolitan, Strand and Orph which combined in an exploitation campaign t over an attraction that showed simultaneous the three houses and which broke the best re of each house.

For the showing of "In Old Kentucky," boards, newspaper and other forms of exploita were used with joint date lines for the three atres with excellent results.

The use of a negro band to parade the st of Cleveland every noon hour was a great f in the success of the local engagement. Hun of patrons of the three houses recalled the fa Whangdoodle Band that paraded the streets ago when the play came to town and the q reminder of the past served to bring "old tir who rarely indulged in the picture houses with the photoplay fans and admirers of Stewart.

The High Lights of Broadway's Shows

LINCOLN'S Birthday is being recognized in all of the Broadway theatres this week by something in the way of recognition for the martyred president. At the Capitol, Strand and Rialto "The Land of Opportunity," a two-reel subject with Lincoln as its principal character is being shown. This picture presents Ralph Ince in the role of Lincoln and the story has to do with a fictional incident in his life before he became president and serves to teach a lesson in Americanism. The message it carries is well developed and should prove effective in converting the radically inclined to the doctrine of that brand of patriotism and love of country which Mr. Lincoln made immortal.

At the Rivoli perhaps the most impressive story of the screen, in which the character of Lincoln has ever been introduced as one of the cast, "The Copperhead" is being shown. While it is true that the role of the greatest of Presidents is overshadowed by that of "Milt Shanks," as played by Lionel Barrymore, nevertheless the Lincoln as played by N. Schroel is an important character in the picture, and also there is a great message of the "Americanism" type in the production.

"The Copperhead" is without doubt the real "high light" to be found in the programs at the Broadway shows this week. Certainly not since "The Miracle Man" has a picture been presented to the public which carries such a tremendous appeal, which has been so carefully produced nor so well acted in its leading role. The "Milt Shanks" of Lionel Barrymore is nothing short of marvelous and a fitting companion to the impressive figure this same actor gave the stage in the speaking version.

There is, however, something concerning this production about which it would seem wise to warn you. When you play it, you must not treat it as you would the ordinary feature intended only as entertainment, nor will it draw entirely from your regular patrons if it is to succeed either artistically and financially.

Regretable as it is, there are some people in this land of ours who will not appreciate this picture, who probably will not come to see it, and you must fill their places with faces you do not often view. To do this you must advertise it for what it is, an American classic, a wonderful acting vehicle for the star and a great production from every point of view. Eliminate from your clientele for the time being the matinee girl and her shallow pated escort and replace them with the people who are to be found usually at the opera, in the lecture hall, at the legitimate stage production and at church.

In the presentation of "The Copperhead," Managing Director Reisenfelt has shown rare artistic taste. Prior to the screening of the picture, Forest Robinson delivers Mr. Lincoln's Gettysburg address. To the world's masterpiece of oratory read in the resonant tones of the finished actor, the audience at the Rivoli looks out at a canvas painting of the Gettysburg field as it was after the battle which decided the fate of the Southern Confederacy.

The scene is dimly lighted with a scarlet-marked sky dominating. In the perspective of the horizon red flashes of light repeat at several points indicative that the cannon is still belching forth its hail of death. The dull roar that we have been told is the noise of cannonade at a distance is supplied by the orchestra. Then the scene is further darkened. The scarlet fades from the sky and in its place comes the purple hue of night.

Down front at the edge of the painting a smoldering campfire gives off a light drifting smoke. One can almost see the dim forms of tired soldiers sleeping arms in hand worn out by the terrible day of carnage. Imagination tells you that strewn across the uneven fields that rise to peaks in the distance are the bodies of the brave men in blue and gray who have given their lives for a cause that both thought just. It is in such an atmosphere that Mr. Robinson delivers the immortal address of the martyred President. It is in such an atmosphere that the titles of the picture are screened and the audience which has looked and listened in the silence of a church gets its first view of "The Copperhead."

At the close of the episode of the picture having to do with the Mexican war incident of the story, the picture is faded out against a net screen and a short intermission is given before beginning the Civil war action.

Toward the close of the scenes when Milt Shanks' life is ebbing out, the orchestra is gradually stilled and the chorus mentioned as having assisted in the rendition of the overture, sings softly off stage "John Brown's Body Lies Moldering in Its Grave" and other Civil War songs.

The new Capitol policy of a complete change of bill each week, including an elaborate musical offering, begins its second week, with "Southland" listed on the program as the sixth number.

Without meaning a thing disparaging, "Southland" resembles nothing so much as the home talent show with a lot of good voices gathered together and grouped about on the stage, with some of the best of the talent selected for solos, etc.

Before a canvas by artist John Wenger, showing a Southern landscape with a cabin in the foreground, the number opens with a string trio playing a medley of old songs, "My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Folks at Home," "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground," with the audience invited to sing. The banjo number is by the Crouch-Richards trio. Following this number, which has been accompanied by some pantomime up stage by characters playing an old colored man and woman, William Robyn appears and sings "Rose of Picardy." The male members of the Capitol chorus follow with "Go Down Moses, "Peter, Go Ring Dem Bells. The fourth change of the number is the appearance of the Capitol Ladies Ensemble, who render "I Want to Be Ready" and "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" in chorus.

The company assembled then give a plantation dance and minuet. The number finishes with the entire company singing "Oh, Southland."

All performers are costumed in the style of the Fifties, and the stage is elaborately lighted. The old tunes selected are really musical gems and may well be termed as they are on the Capitol house organ, "Immortal Southern Melodies." The composers are Stephen Foster and H. T. Burleigh, with the exception of the "Rose of Picardy" solo, which is the work of Hayden Wood.

The orchestration provided is a model of symphony. The chorus of voices is splendid for its volume and harmony. The invitation for the audience to join in the singing was not accepted to any great extent at the performance we witnessed.

Timely Tips on Short Subjects

Out of the Inkwell

Bray—Goldwyn Cartoon

THE Bray studio "clown," with Max Fleisher, figure in this fanciful creation of trick and straight photography coupled with cartoon work. The "clown" does a lot of tricks which are good for entertainment with the grown ups and will register as the best ever with the youngsters. The number is about on an average with previous releases on this series which have recommended themselves for the naturalness of which the cartoon figure performs, more than anything evolved in the way of "business." Shown at the Strand theatre.

Magic Clay

Prizma—One Reel

"MAGIC CLAY" is an educational subject basically, being a close-up view of how pottery is made at the Rookwood plant at Cincinnati. However, the Prizma process of coloring has been used throughout, enhancing the interest of watching the vases and other decorative chinaware grow from the clay. On the end is a little "magician act," in which the finished product from this plant is shown in vivid colors, together with the decorations of a room and the robes of the Oriental. Undoubtedly this is first-class advertising for the manufacturing plant, which leads the spectator to wonder if the producers are gaining from both ends. This fact, however, does not detract in the least from the entertainment value of the offering. It is a very worthy and artistic short subject. Shown at the Capitol theatre.

A Prohibition Monkey (Reforms Rumpus Ridge)

Joe Martin—Universal—One Reel

THIS is a combination of "Joe Martin's" monkey stuff and a burlesque on the old time Western melodrama. There is little of comedy in the Western part of the offering but there is considerable amusement and the usual wonder at the tricks which the inimitable "Joe" performs in aiding the parson to reform "Rumpus Ridge." The monk is aided in this picture by an elephant who also shows himself to be quite a movie actor. The monkey part of the picture is good for hearty laughs and the burlesque is full of fast action even if there is little new in it. Will please most audiences and prove another hit with children. Shown at the Capitol.

Plane and Tug Aid Ice Bound Ship on Lake Michigan—Kinograms

RATHER an unusual strip showing a tug and an aeroplane relieving a Lake Michigan ship which had become ice bound before reaching Chicago's docks. A blizzard is raging when the air craft flies out over the ship and bombs it with supplies. The tug is shown ramming its way through the ice floes.

Floods Ruin Autos—International

SCENES from Germany taken with the Army of Occupation showing a lot of automobiles half under water over a large flooded area. Although it is not so stated the supposition is that they are Army machines. The question is what excuse is there for Uncle Sam to leave his machines to be ruined by the flood when he might have run them to dry land.

Silence Is Golden Says the Sphinx—International

VIEWS of the famous Egyptian sphinx and other ruins. Not a new shot but very nicely arranged to show everything to the best advantage. Given added beauty at the Rialto by flooding the lower part of the image with a blue light and projected with stage settings hung within the side arches showing the sphinx on one side and the river Nile on the other.

Music Means More Than High Priced Organist, Says Gohlman

"MUSIC means more to an exhibitor than a high-priced organist who appeals perhaps to the lovers of classic music. There is an opportunity before the smaller-house exhibitors to reap a genuine profit from their music. I am sorry to say that in most cases this opportunity is being woefully neglected."

Thus did Leon S. Gohlman, manager of the Rex theatre, Dallas, Texas, characterize by a generality a novel bit of exploitation he used to put over "Back to God's Country."

Particularly interesting to exhibitors who generally play attractions second-run after one of the larger local houses has made use of the most apparent angles for exploitation is this description of how Mr. Gohlman seized on a local angle and the song-tie-up to put over his attraction.

"In most cases," Mr. Gohlman said, "the song that is usually issued with a motion picture does not reach the music stores until after the first showings of the attraction. It was this way with 'Back to God's Country.' The Old Mill theatre here had already played the picture and two weeks later I arranged for its second run.

"It happened in this case that the writer of this song was Paul Sarazan, a Dallas boy who had formerly been the photoplay editor of one of the newspapers. Thus it came about that through his personal popularity I was able to arrange for window displays and co-operative plugs in the music stores.

"Although I usually confine the program to the feature, a comic, a comedy or scenic, I changed my program three days before the opening of the attraction so as to provide for the rendition of 'Back to God's Country,' by Clyde Conley, a popular local singer. I used slides announcing that the attraction would be played at the theatre on the given date. Through Sarazan's local connections every theatre orchestra in the city was playing his 'Back to God's Country' song in advance of any second-run showing and several of the theatres were flashing the words and the writer's picture on the screen. By the time the picture was shown enough of Sarazan's personal friends were on hand to fill the house.

"I am inclined to believe that many exhibitors are overlooking a big bet on their failure to boost the picture songs," said Mr. Gohlman. The first run theatres that have ample new material for exploitation of the special feature attractions can afford to neglect the song tie-up with less harm than the smaller exhibitors who should take advantage of every reasonable promotion method to be found.

Omaha Bee Prints Ten Page Section for "Everywoman"

ANOTHER addition was made to the list of cities which have given unprecedented exploitation to "Everywoman" when the picture opened up at the Rialto theatre, Omoha, Neb., on January 18. The manager of the theatre, with the aid of Stuart-Gould Famous Players-Lasky's exploitation representative for the Omaha territory realized the fullest benefits of publicity, concentrating largely upon the local newspapers.

The Omaha Sunday Bee of that date appeared with a special section of ten pages, the front cover of which was a full-page advertisement of the production. The material for this was taken largely from the press book. Cuts were used in attractive manner to supplement the type and the title word "Everywoman" ran in broken letters diagonally from the upper left hand corner to the bottom right hand corner of the page. The advertisement took advantage of the all-star cast assembled in this picture by using the complete list of actors and actresses on the front page. News items, taken for the most part from material in the press book, furnished reading matter for the city's motion picture fans.

Support was given the "Everywoman" section in generous measure by Omaha advertisers by means of the tie-ups for the special "Everywoman" section, as a result of which the newspaper was able to aid in the publicity campaign with good advantage to itself. The advertising showed the usual line of tie-ups every one of which features the word "Everywoman" in its copy.

An unusual feature of the advertising was a quarter of a page bought by a dentist who took advantage of the opportunity offered by the picture to advertise the value of well cared for teeth as an asset to beauty. Another medical advertisement, occupying a full page, featured pictures of Violet Heming, Wanda Hawley, Monte Blue and Clara Horton.

Other advertisements featured beauty cream, automobiles, furniture, musical instruments, electric washers and candy.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

Avalanche of Exploitation Descends on Jamestown, N. Y.

THERE was an avalanche that descended suddenly on the city of Jamestown, N. Y., recently. No lives were lost because the only thing that covered the city was advertising, publicity and attention-compelling stunts on "Upstairs and Down," in which Olive Thomas was really made famous in this city. Co-operating with Howard Waugh, publicity manager of the Winter Garden, Andy Sharick, of the Buffalo Select office, pulled the switch on the publicity avalanche two weeks in advance of the showing of the production at the Winter Garden and the entire town sat up and took notice.

A large silver loving cup was purchased about two weeks before the opening date and put on display in one of the leading jewelry store windows. Then seven dance contests were arranged, each to be an "Upstairs and Down" affair, all attendants being furnished coupons for voting on the best dancer in the contest. These coupons were collected at each dance. Finally the Eagles staged a big Olive Thomas ball and participants in all the previous dances were notified that the final contest would be staged at this event to determine the winner of the cup. At each dance pictures of Olive Thomas were posted and the cup exhibited with a large card advertising the Winter Garden show.

The Jamestown Journal was induced to run a five day contest to find the girl in Jamestown looking most like Miss Thomas. The paper used different photos of Miss Thomas each day. The same newspaper also ran a full page co-operative advertisement for three days, almost every store that put in a display taking space and devoting it to a tie-up with the "Upstairs and Down" idea. In each ad was inserted each day the name of some Jamestown person. This person upon clipping the ad and presenting it to the Journal was given passes to the show.

A week previous to the showing twenty-two window displays were arranged for, hardware stores advertised household needs for upstairs and down, shoe stores advertised ladies' footwear for upstairs and down, millinery establishments advertising hats, using the stills from "Upstairs and Down," showing Miss Thomas eloping and taking all her hats with her. A large card reading "When She Eloped Her Hats Were the First Thing She Thought Of—Every Woman Thinks of Her Hats First and At the Same Time Thinks of Our Store —See Olive Thomas, the Prettiest Girl in America, at the Winter Garden theatre." Department stores, plumbing stores, wall paper and paint stores, furniture stores, music stores all were induced to put on big displays.

Three thousand paper bags were purchased by the Winter Garden, upon which was printed a large ad and cut of Miss Thomas. Leading grocery stores used these bags a week before the show.

Following all this exploitation, the Select exploitation department in Buffalo received the following letter from Mr. Waugh:

"We opened Monday against the toughest sort of opposition, a big musical comedy, the third that had been here this season. Ordinarily this would take about 400 from us, which it did. However, we more than doubled business over a week ago, against no opposition and a very strong star. Matinee business was fine. Tuesday and Wednesday were both sell-outs. We jammed them in. I want to give you full credit for what was done, as your ideas and excellent co-operation put the thing over. The star was practically unknown here and nothing put it over but the darn good advertising."

Spread "Selznick Propaganda" in Cincinnati Territory

A PLOT for the spreading of "Selznick propaganda" was uncovered in the Cincinnati territory this week when a Zanesville newspaper carried a story on the formation of a Selznick Movie Club" in that town. It seems that for some weeks past Jack Conant, local Select Manager, and James A. Carrier, Director of Exploitation, have been quietly at work in the larger towns of the territory forming the "movie clubs" among woman and girls interested in moving pictures. The purpose of the clubs is to furnish members with fresh information concerning the stars and latest releases of the Selznick organization through weekly letters. Autographed pictures and bits of "personal" news from the stars will be one of the big features of the plan, while another feature calculated to keep up the interest is the personal appearance of stars at club meetings whenever they are in the territory. In this manner the members will be on the lookout for the new Selznick productions long before they are released, and the clubs should prove a valuable exploitation medium when the pictures are booked in their town. The idea has "caught on" very readily in the towns in which it has been introduced, and a goodly portion of the members of the clubs are society women who should prove a powerful factor in boosting the pictures.

School Superintendent Is Strong Screen Advocate

WE know a school superintendent in a small, unprogressive town in Indiana, who tried to keep moving picture magazines out of the public library—so prejudiced is he against the screen.

And now we know a school superintendent in a live Ohio town who actually dismisses his classes early so they can attend a moving picture show which he considers worth while!

"The right kind of moving pictures are the greatest help to us educators; moving pictures as a whole are the greatest educational factors in the world to-day," said this up-to-date superintendent.

He is Prof. J. F. Prout, superintendent of Public Schools in Chillicothe, Ohio. Mr. Prout not only works in complete harmony with the theatres of his city, but he goes so far as to watch productions that are being made and urges C. A. Smith, manager of the Sherman theatre, Chillicothe, to book certain pictures. Already Prof. Prout is preparing to make full educational use of Paramount-Artcraft's "Treasure Island." Prof. Prout arranged it so his schools dismissed thirty minutes early to attend the matinees of "Huckleberry Finn." He also had his literature teachers turn to the study of Mark Twain's book prior to the showing of "Huckleberry Finn." He will do the same with "Treasure Island." "I find that by showing the moving picture version of these American classics, we can reduce the time of study devoted to the books by one to three weeks. It is a wonderful help. By the theatres showing these pictures, the schools are actually saved a great deal of money, because we would want to show them if the theatres did not. I am a motion picture devotee and I can truthfully say that in the last few months I can remember only one picture that I would be doubtful about my children seeing. The screen is constantly going forward."

What the Exchange Experts Are Doing

Doubles Mabel Normand for "Pinto" Showing

THERE are lots of stories around about exhibitor and distributor co-operation, but none of 'em can come within a mile of the effort that C. E. Deardorf, publicity expert of the Cleveland Goldwyn exchange put forth in connection with the recent tremendously popular engagement of Mabel Normand's newest picture, "Pinto," at the Grand Theatre, Columbus.

Will D. Harris, manager of the Grand Theatre, is known as an exhibitor who never does things by halves. When he undertakes a deal, he puts it through. Knowing that, Mr. Deardorf not only met Harris 50-50 on the exploitation spread for "Pinto," but he went him better by about another fifty per cent.

The first thing that Deardorf did, was to line up the newspapers, and get their help in exploiting a mystery girl. This mystery girl stunt has been pulled off in other localities, but this was the first time it has been tried in Ohio. The week before the picture opened at the Grand Theatre, an attractively gowned girl with a black mask hiding her features, was prominent in the lobby of the Deshler Hotel, the leading hostelry of Columbus. A reporter tried to get her to tell who she was but failed. This story was good for a photograph and half column story in the COLUMBUS DISPATCH. The following day, the paper featured a story by THE MYSTERY GIRL on "WHETHER COLUMBUS MEN ARE FLIRTS" with the answer in the affirmative. Next day, the cat's out of the bag, and THE DISPATCH tells its readers that the MYSTERY GIRL is part of the exploitation campaign for the picture "Pinto," playing at the Grand Theatre the week of Jan. 11th. But the grand denouement takes place the day before the opening of the picture when the girl, dressed a la Pinto, sold thousands of copies of the Columbus papers at one of the busiest sections of the city. People flocked to see her, and hear her tell about the wonderful picture that would open the following day at the Grand Theatre.

But, just to make sure that everybody in Columbus, and within hailing distance from Columbus would know about "Pinto," Deardorf went out and sold a double page ad for the Saturday edition of THE COLUMBUS DISPATCH, all centered about Mabel Normand in "Pinto." Twelve striking ads made up this double page. But not content with this, right in the middle of the page, an insertion in plain type stated that there were occasional misspellings in the advertisements, and to the ones who brought the correction to the store in whose ad the misspelling appeared, free passes to one performance of "Pinto" would be issued.

"The CITIZEN," another leading Columbus newspaper carried a full page ad on "Pinto" on Saturday, the day before the opening of the picture, and on Sunday, the CITIZEN, DISPATCH and OHIO STATE JOURNAL all carried the same full page ad.

Manager Harris furthermore created a large army of "Pinto Boosters" by giving a private showing of the picture on Saturday morning for the DISPATCH newsboys. About seven hundred invitations were issued, and Harris said he received very few regrets. They were all there, and they made a noise as if they liked the show immensely.

Prints Ten-Page Section for "Everywoman"

WHEN "Everywoman" played the Rialto theatre, Omaha, manager H. M. Thomas and Stuart Gould, Paramount's exploitation in that city combined forces and when they had finished a record had been established in several ways and especially in the matter of extensive newspaper exploitation.

A ten page newspaper section in the Omaha Bee, led off the campaign of advertising, followed by two full window displays in downtown stores and one hundred and fifty window displays in drug stores tying up the title with "Hind's Almond and cream." Then came billboarding with twenty-four sheets over all the street car lines in the city—and the Rialto artist got out special hand painted one and three sheets to adorn the outside boards at the theatre itself, in addition to three eighteen foot signboards, also hand colored and painted over the lobby of the house. Full page ads in the other newspapers followed with consistent follow up copy during the entire week.

The final touch in the complete campaign was the prologue presented before the showing of the picture twice each afternoon and twice each evening, consisting of a specially written part for "Nobody" and "Everywoman," with five pretty local girls in artistic dances, the girls representing "Youth," "Modesty," "Beauty," "Folly" and "Vanity." The prologue was the most pretentious ever attempted at any motion picture house in Omaha and went over with the greatest success.

The result of the campaign was that in spite of a good deal of local "flu" talk and an accompanying falling off of theatre trade over the whole city the Rialto played to full houses the entire week.

"Classy Advertisements" Help "Male and Female" Run

THE Strand theatre of Cincinnati, for the second time in its career, set aside its policy of week runs and played "Male and Female," for two weeks, topping the record of "The Miracle Man" which is the only other production holding the Strand's screen for two weeks. Manager Libson, of the Strand, after awakening Cincinnati (during the world series) with his circus exploitation of "The Miracle Man" pursued different tactics with "Male and Female." Long before the announcement of his engagement, Mr. Libson, in co-operation with Oscar A. Doob of the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, began getting publicity on "Male and Female" in the local newspapers. The Cincinnati Post, for instance, ran a series of six daily woman's page features, "A Day With Gloria Swanson," describing her various gowns at different times of the day. Then Miss Swanson's recent marriage was used for all it was worth, tying up this publicity with "Male and Female," telling how the courtship of Miss Swanson progressed during the making of "Male and Female." This news-feature stuff attracted great attention, the Commercial-Tribune making a Sunday, quarter-page story, out of it. The Cincinnati Post again gave splendid co-operation by publishing the complete novelette of "Male and Female" illustrated with a three column scene cut, on the Friday preceding the opening. An advertisement of the theatre was run immediately after the story on the same page.

Mr. Libson's newspaper advertising was especially distinctive—man designed the ads to make up a unit—the same border and type style being used throughout the campaign, which incidentally was an immense one judging by Cincinnati standards. The border was designed to convey an idea of class and massiveness. Stills from the picture were used to illustrate all the ads, several of which are reproduced herewith.

Mr. Libson did not entirely ignore the more pretentious exploitation. H. D. Brown of the Famous Players-Lasky exploitation forces secured a series of a half dozen window displays in the Dow Drug company's stores, displaying photos of Gloria Swanson in the bathroom scene in connection with toilet articles.

Lobby Mirrors Put to Exceptional Use

JAMES R. DUNCAN, Manager of His Majesty's theatre, in Sherbrooke, Quebec, Canada, is a great believer in the vanity of women and the mirrors that he uses in his lobby for their use, when they come and go to his performances, putting the latter to exceptional use during the past few weeks, in announcing on the mirrored glass the forthcoming productions of United Artists Corporation.

Sherbrooke, as Mr. Duncan communicates to us, is a very unusual community from a publicity standpoint, since all newspapers insist upon payment for all insertions, irrespective of news values, or despite the fact that extra advertising space is used.

"So it is necessary for me to utilize every medium possible to carry on a campaign big enough for the promotion of such special productions like "Broken Blossoms" and "His Majesty, The American," he says. "Recently I noticed in the lobby of the theatre, large numbers of women, fixing their hair, hats and coats, before two large mirrors that are there as part of the lobby decorations, and it struck me as a pretty good idea to utilize that space to have painted on it in an attractive and artistic manner the announcements of the forthcoming big productions. I am sure it is doing more than anything else I could have possibly done for future productions."

rture—American Festival March. Presented by the Rivoli orchestra assisted by the Rialto-Rivoli chorus toward the close of the number, the draperies being parted to disclose to view the singers. The march is the composition of Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli, and was first played on the occasion of the first anniversary of the Rialto theatre, April 1917. As an overture for Lincoln Week, a feature of the Rivoli program, the composition is especially appropriate, since there are portions of the good old melodies interwoven in the number.

Live News from the Producers

To Break Ground for Rothacker Plant

Ground will be broken within the next two weeks for the construction of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's Los Angeles laboratories, according to the statement by President Watterson R. Rothacker, who arrived in Los Angeles recently to make necessary arrangements for the construction of his western plant. Several months ago Rothacker purchased a plot of ground in Hollywood, and at present it is understood to be his intention to erect the laboratories here. Mr. Rothacker expects to be in Los Angeles until the middle of February, and plans that all arrangements for construction of the laboratories will be completed before his departure for the east.

Has Completed "Cynthia of the Minute"

Miss Leah Baird and her company have finished the filming of "Cynthia of the Minute," Miss Baird's latest vehicle, picturized from the novel of the same name by Louis Joseph Vance. Miss Baird is preparing to launch another production as yet unnamed, for the production, of which the company will go to Los Angeles, where studio facilities have already been procured.

The Florida scenes of "Cynthia of the Minute" are of a sensational sort, including some remarkable marine adventures in which Miss Baird displays her natatorial capabilities for the first time in a motion picture. Some of the specially designed water costumes worn by the star in this play are unusually attractive.

In one scene Miss Baird makes her escape clad for a long swim from the deck of a Citrus Fruit company freighter, the Carolinian, which vessel was on its way to Patagonia.

Leah Baird, who is the star in the Hodkinson picture, "The Capitol"

New Comedy Company in West

Special Pictures Corporation Organized in Los Angeles

BACKED by the most powerful financial interests in the West, the Special Pictures Corporation, capitalized at a quarter of a million dollars, announced its organization in Los Angeles to specialize in comedy features, the first of which will be released about March first, according to a statement issued by Louis W. Thompson, president of the new company.

This, according to President Thompson, marks the first serious attempt on the part of Western capital to invade the motion picture industry. It is significant because it shows that financial interests at the production center are waking up to the possibilities offered for investment in the picture industry. It has often been predicted that once Los Angeles capital becomes thoroughly interested in the film business, it may result in swinging the financial center of this great industry from New York to Los Angeles, where more than eighty per cent. of the production is now carried on. Aronson and Company, a Hallman interest, and one of the largest bonding houses in the West, is handling the financing of the new film corporation.

The Special Pictures Corporation plans to spring something entirely new in the way of comedy. Ward Lascalle, formerly connected with the directorial staff of Mary Pickford, will be director general of the new concern and states that he plans to have four companies working before the end of March.

That the Special Pictures Corporation intends to become a factor in the picture world immediately is indicated by the fact that the new company plans to enter the distributing field by distributing its own exchanges in the twenty-six key cities of the United States. The sales end of the business will be handled by H. J. Roberts, who made a remarkable reputation for himself with the Sales department of the Fox Film Company. Earl D. Shanks, formerly connected with the accounting and financial departments of the Mary Pickford Company, will act as business manager for the new company.

Before becoming identified with The Special Pictures Corporation, President Thompson was also connected with the Mary Pickford Company as special representative for Miss Pickford at the New York office of the United Artists' Corporation. The new concern will rent space for the present at some of the already established studios, but plans are now being prepared for a studio of their own which they believe will be built before the end of the summer.

Exhibitors are Pleased by Tie-Up

Arthur S. Kane Receives Assurances of Good Will at Outset

CHARLES RAY, announced last week as the first big star of the newly formed Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, is drawing to the young producing company many telegrams of congratulations on its initial acquisition, according to a statement from the Kane headquarters.

"The consensus of exhibitor opinion on the business possibilities of Ray point out the star as the one best bet and reveal his status among showmen today as of the highest. Great things are being predicted for his coming films under First National distribution," says the Kane statement.

The announcement that Arthur S. Kane was in business for himself, coupled with the news that Ray had become affiliated to the great body of alert showmen throughout the country who sense big things in the tie-up,

Harold B. Franklin, the progressive theatre man from Buffalo, New York, whose picture presentation at the big Hippodrome is regarded as among the best in exhibiting, has varied his usual practice of reticence in the praise of stars and producing organizations by coming out strongly for Charles Ray. In a telegram to President Kane, Mr. Franklin foresees great financial success coming out of the acquisition of Ray.

"'I congratulate you on your latest acquisition,' wired the Buffalo showman, 'and I have no doubt that it will result in great artistic and financial success to your company.

Harold B. Franklin, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.'

"The opinion of Mr. Franklin is echoed by other exhibitors of long experience in the business. In Lowell, Mass., Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Strand theatre, came out strongly for Ray. In a letter to Arthur S. Kane, concerning Ray's affiliation with the new company, Mr. Soriero wrote: 'I congratulate you. He is a wonderful bet. In fact, not knowing that you were interested in him, I have been negotiating for his pictures, just for Lowell. I am all the more keen for him now that you are connected with them. Very truly yours, Thomas D. Soriero, Strand theatre.'

"Another exhibitor, noted for his progressive methods of picture presentation, who has found the tie-up of Arthur S. Kane and Charles Ray a portent of big possibilities is W. S. McLaren, manager of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, Michigan.

"'Allow us first of all to extend our sincere congratulations to you upon the formation of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation,' wrote Mr. McLaren to President Kane. 'It has indeed been a pleasure to the writer to have done business with you in the past and I trust that these pleasant business relations may continue into the future. Charles Ray has always been one of our favorites. W. S. McLaren, manager.'

"Among many other exhibitors who foresee big possibilities in this tieup are Max Marcus, of the United States theatre, Cleveland, Ohio; F. T. Bailey, of the American theatre, Butte, Montana; J. C. Clemmons, manager of the Jefferson Amusement Company, Beaumont, Texas, and N. M. McCullough, of the Riviera theatre, Anderson, Indiana.

First National's Local Exchange to Move

The First National Exchange of New York is to occupy larger quarters. On and after February 12th, the new offices will be on the eleventh floor of 729 Seventh Avenue. In the new offices there will be ample room for individual offices for the sales force, private offices for the executives, and a large reception room. The office will occupy about 8,000 square feet of floor space.

New Bryant Washburn Film

"The Six Best Cellars" Is Called Best Prohibition Film Yet; Released Feb. 8

REPLETE with scintillating wit and with a farcical handling of an opportune theme in a manner that even the most carping critics would fail to take offense at, Holworthy Hall's famous story, 'The Six Best Cellars,' starring Bryant Washburn, is the Paramount-Artcraft picture scheduled for release February 8," announces Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"'The Six Best Cellars' is probably the funniest story ever written dealing with Prohibition," continues the Famous Players statement. "First published in McClue's Magazine, it was so good that Bobbs-Merill published it in book form, and 'The Six Best Cellars' actually became one of the six best sellers.

"Much after the manner in which Admiral Farragut tackled the torpedo question young Henry Carpenter, a newly-married society idol, played by Bryant Washburn, says: 'Darn the drought. Let's go.' Henry and his wife, Millicent, belong to the elect half-dozen, who are supposed to be the best entertainers in the suburban town which claims them on its census. They are credited with having a well-stocked cellar when the day comes for King Alcohol's abdication. As a matter of fact, Henry, is struggling along on high with his supply reduced to the final quart.

"Bryant Washburn, in his inimitable style, plays the part of the standard society idol with an ease of manner that marks him in real life. He is supported by Wanda Hawley and a capable cast, including Clarence Burton, in a character part; Else Lorimer, Josephine Crowell, Fred Vroom, Jane Wolfe, Richard Wayne, Julia Faye, Howard Gaye, Selma Maja, Parker Mac Connell, Ruth Ashby, William Boyd, Olita Otis, Allan Connor, Lorie Larson and C. H. Geldart.

"Donald Crisp who has directed the last five Bryant Washburn pictures, has given the production many unique twists in which he was assisted by Frank Richardson. Elmer Harris, responsible for the scenario of 'The Lottery Man' and 'Hawthorne of U. S. A.,' wrote the scenario from Holworthy Hall's work."

Lloyd Hughes Starts Work

Thomas Ince Expresses Satisfaction at Showing of His Latest Luminary

NO detail of production is being spared to insure the magnitude and box-office qualities of "Wheelbarrow Webster," the first production in which Thomas H. Ince will present his new star, Lloyd Hughes. Under the direction of John Wray and the personal supervision of Mr. Ince, the picture entered production last week on location on a farm near Sawtelle, California, where the first scenes depicting Mr. Hughes as a rugged son of the golden west take place.

Of particular interest is the cast selected to support the new "discovery" in his debut as a ranking star of screendom. Several of the most popular players will be seen with Mr. Hughes, included among whom is Gladys George, well remembered for her pleasing work as leading lady for Charles Ray in "Red Hot Dollars." Miss George is cast in the role of Beulah Rogers, who loves Joel "Wheelbarrow" Webster (Lloyd Hughes) despite the warnings and obnoxious interference of troublesome relatives. Jack Nelson, Fred Gamble, Charles Mills, Lydia Knott, Edith York, Gordon Sackville, Willis Marks and James Gordon are other favorite players helping to make "Wheelbarrow Webster" one of the most convincing and realistic of adventurous comedy-dramas.

First view of Mme. Marguerita Sylva, featured player in "The Honey Bee," soon to be presented by American Film Co. and released through Pathe

CHURCHMEN AGAINST CITIES VOTING SUNDAY OPENING

REV. O. R. MILLER of the New York State Civic League, is already taking action to back a movement started by the ministerial unions in various parts of this State to repeal the law that was passed a year ago, and which permits each city to decide for itself, through its governing body, as to whether or not it shall permit its motion picture houses to operate on Sunday. The campaign to bring about a repeal of this bill has already been launched in certain parts of the State. Rev. Mr. Miller characterized the passage of the bill a year ago as an insult to the church and predicted its repeal.

Just what attitude the Civic League will take on the bill which it is expected will be introduced along State censorship lines is still problematical. Rev. Mr. Miller and certain members of the State Conference of Mayors are not on the most friendly terms, in view of certain matters which occurred a year ago in connection with Sunday baseball bills and the Sunday motion picture bill.

Editing Drury Lane Picture

Final Touches Being Given to "The Sporting Duchess," Former Stage Hit

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS," Alice Joyce's big special production, which Vitagraph has made from the Drury Lane spectacular melodrama of the same name, is now receiving the final touches. The picture practically was completed when the race scenes were taken in New Orleans, but a few interiors remained to be made at the Brooklyn studio. Now that these have been taken the picture is being cut and will be ready on schedule time.

"Miss Joyce always has been fortunate in the vehicles selected for her, and 'The Sporting Duchess' is not an exception," Vitagraph asserts. "Undoubtedly it is one of the best of the star's successful special productions, and provides her with a role in perfect keeping with her beauty and personality. It is an exacting part—one that keeps the star almost constantly before the camera—and Miss Joyce has given it a splendid interpretation. In fact, as the unfortunate Duchess of Desborough she will add many laurels to her wreath of success.

"'The Sporting Duchess' is a big play, and required a big production as well as a long and capable cast. Among others who are seen in support of Miss Joyce are: Percy Marmont, G. V. Seyffertitz, Lionel Pape, John Goldsworthy, Robert Agnew, William Turner, Edith Campbell Walker and May McAvoy. George Terwilliger directed the picture.

"The Drury Lane spectacular melodramatic productions are famous the world over. 'The Sporting Duchess,' for which Rose Coghlan starred with great success, was one of the biggest and best. It was known throughout the country, and that it is not forgotten is attested by the advance bookings for Vitagraph's forthcoming screen version. There is every indication that as a motion picture play it will be even more popular than it was as a stage play."

Move Among Screen Players to Unionize

There is considerable agitation in Los Angeles among screen players for a more closely organized union, and workers are in the city working with the local officers to bring about the desired conditions.

Just what are the intentions of the union officers with respect to motion pictures has not been made known, but it is understood their first activities will be respecting players of the stage, following which they will take up matters pertaining to screen workers' welfare. It is predicted the unions will demand a minimum wage, and possibly set a minimum period of time for each engagement. Heretofore players have been engaged according to the part, the engagement, in many instances being as short as one day or one night. It is intimated the union will also ask for certain improvements in dressing rooms at some of the studios, and fix a definite length of time to constitute a day's work, while all time over that period shall be classed as overtime.

No overtures of any sort have been made to film producers by the union leaders recently, and little or no attention is being paid to the activities of the union by the producers.

Burston Coming East on a Flying Visit

Louis Burston, due in New York about the 20th of this month, will remain East only long enough to complete measures he has for the sale of the unsold territory for the King Baggot serial, "The Hawk's Trail," the disposal of the few states rights blocks still held of "The Mystery of 13," and the consummation of his recently formed serial pool.

From his Los Angeles Studio, when planning for his flying trip East last week, the producer said:

"In the syndication I've formed to supply buyers and exhibitors with an all-year serial supply, will be found, I think, a logical evolution considerably advantaging serial brokers, theatre men and producers.

"Desert Gold" Scores in West

"The Sagebrusher" Has Also Been Reported As Pulling Well

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S Emerson Hough story, "The Sagebrusher," was the attraction at Lesser & Gore's Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, during the present week, and Mr. Hampton's production of Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" was playing its second continuous week at the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles. The Zane Grey picture, incidentally, broke every existing record for patronage at the Alhambra, it is said, and H. H. Bosley, manager of the Alhambra, has kept a third week clear for his run of this picture. Bookings of both productions were made by F. A. Wagner, Los Angeles manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and immediately following its first run in Los Angeles "Desert Gold" goes to the Johnson theatre, Pasadena, for a full week's first run in southern California's millionaire town.

"The Sagebrusher" was the first big production booked by Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers upon their acquisition of the Kinema theatre from T. L. Tally, former owner of the house and the First National Franchise for Southern California and Arizona. The picture was opened after a heavy billboard and newspaper exploitation campaign of a dimension characteristic of Sol Lesser's exploitation of his own big successes. The result was that the house coming under new ownership started off with a convincing winner that received the unanimous approval of the Los Angeles dailies.

Incidentally "The Sagebrusher" has started off its first run career even more rapidly than "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold," the two previous Benjamin B. Hampton successes, this being due undoubtedly to the reputation that the Hampton productions are building among exhibitors for drawing power.

Heart interest and characterization are strong features of Benj. B. Hampton's production, "The Sagebusher," distributed by Hodkinson

Among the important first runs that have signed for "The Sagebrusher" during the past few days are: Tom Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C.; Jake Wells' Granby, Norfolk, Va.; the Majestic, Jackson, Mich.; the Liberty, Sacramento, Cal.; the Liberty, Fresno, Cal.; the Auditorium, South Bend, Ind.; Poli's theatres at Scranton and Wilkesbarre, Pa.; the William Penn, Chester, Pa.; the Auditorium, Eau Claire, Wisc.; the New Majestic, Evansville, Ind.; the Hippodrome, Miami, Fla.; the American, Sterling, Colo.; the American, Colorado Springs, Colo.; the Jackson, Lebanon, Pa.; the Casino, Jacksonville, Fla.; the Strand, Grand Forks, N. D.

Circuit Manager Lauds Lew Cody Picture

F. J. Rembusch, president and general manager of the Rembusch Enterprises, has written a letter to officials of Robertson-Cole declaring "The Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole special starring Lew Cody to be the most successful picture of the year. The Gasnier masterdrama played the entire Rembusch circuit and so effective were the showings that rebookings were made at once for the special feature, it is stated.

Mr. Rembusch, whose actions are the indicator in the motion picture trade in Indiana and surrounding territory declares that many patrons who saw "The Beloved Cheater" wrote letters to his various managers and askeo that more pictures of the Robertson-Cole type be used in the Rembusch circuit.

Pathe Reviews Short-Subjects

Analyzes Short-Reelers That Have Become a Regular Feature

AN analysis of Pathe supremacy in the field of short subjects is issued this week by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Basing its figures on the approximate eight thousand motion picture localities in the United States, Pathe attempts to show that the view alleged to be held generally by the trade of its superiority in this particular field, is thoroughly warranted. The Pathe statement follows:

"Analyzing first the Pathe News, which since its establishment, has come to be regarded by exhibitors and public the peer of all its competitors, the Pathe statement shows that the topical reel is supreme in sixty-five per cent. of the 8,000 localities.

"Even more imposing are the figures presented on the single reel comedies, which indicate that, in seventy-five per cent. of these localities, the Pathe laugh-makers have the fullest representation.

"But, considering the short life of a news reel, it is the wide distribution reported on the Pathe News that is regarded distributing organization as its most noteworthy achievement.

"On other of its short subjects, particularly the Pathe Review and 'Topics of the Day,' Pathe also offers an imposing record. Neither of these subjects has as yet attained the thorough distribution of the Pathe News nor the one reel comedies, but this is because they virtually are infants. The Pathe Review only recently celebrated its first anniversary and it is less than six months that it has been established as a weekly feature, being previously issued as a semi-monthly release. However, in that brief space of time as motion picture affairs go, the Pathe Review has become solidly planted in the admiration of the principal motion picture theatre owners in every section of the country, and it is only a matter of a short time before the Review's record will be just as remarkable as the Pathe News or the one-reel comedies.

"Regarding 'Topics of the Day,' Pathe asserts that no short subject it has ever handled, has met with a more spontaneous approval of exhibitors. Bookings on this exceptional feature, which are compiled from the press of the world by the Literary Digest, are increasing rapidly weekly. A vast majority of the leading theatres of the country have established this little feature as a main part of their programs each week, and from the numerous letters of approbation received on the subject, Pathe feels justified in its claim of a laugh a line on every issue of 'Topics of the Day.'

Recent reorganization of the orchestra of the Strand theatre, Seattle, one of the four Jensen & Von Herberg motion picture houses in that city, has made it one of the notable bodies of theatre instrumentalists of the country.

New Amusement Company Has Extensive Plans

Incorporation papers for the Scherrer Amusement Company, Inc., were recently filed in Albany. The capital is divided into 8,000 shares of common, no par value. The principal place of business is in Syracuse. The papers set forth that the company is to buy and lease theatres and to do a general theatrical business. It is understood that the new company will operate in the United States and Canada, and possibly in Cuba.

Seeking Another Story Like "Empty Arms"

Lester Park and Edward Whiteside are so pleased with the story of "Empty Arms," starring Gail Kane and directed by Frank Reicher, that they are willing to pay the unusual sum of ten thousand dollars for another one like it. The contest is open to professionals only, and the only conditions the producers lay down are that the story must fit a woman star, lend itself to exploitation of an impressive order and be absolutely an original work. Magazine stories, published novels and produced plays are barred.

Pioneer Forces Getting Settled Quickly

The new Pioneer main offices are rapidly emerging from the chaotic condition which always attends the moving of a large organization. The general manager's department, the publicity department, and the auditor's staff are now back to normal, while the film booking department which was moved over night and the next morning began operations. All of the departments which were located in other parts of the city will within the next few days be housed at the main offices.

Starts Fourth Episode of Leonard Serial

Benny Leonard started last week on the fourth episode of the fifteen-episode serial, "The Evil Eye," written by Roy L. McCardell and produced by Ascher Enterprises, Inc., and Frank G. Hall. The producers have completed all arrangements for Leonard and his company to leave for the Coast to complete the production.

Enid Bennett's Newest Will Be "Hairpins"

Enid Bennett's latest Thomas H. Ince starring vehicle, "Hairpins"—which highly entertaining script is hot off the C. Gardner Sullivan typewriter—promises to be one of the most popular of the Bennett pictures. Mr. Sullivan's story is a clever one, in which continually-slipping hairpins and the resultant untidy coiffure figure largely in a domestic near-tragedy.

"School Days" to Be Filmed

Gus Edwards Upon the Completion of Vaudeville Tour to Go to Hollywood

GUS EDWARDS, composer-producer-actor-manager, has joined the ranks of the motion picture producers. His opening shot will be an eight-reel feature, based on his famous "School Days," the premiere of which in 1908 was the cornerstone of his success. It will be produced by Gus Edwards Productions, Inc., organized by Mr. Edwards, Myron Selznick, Harry Rapf, West Coast production manager for the Selznick's interests; Harry Caulfield, Los Angeles theatrical manager for the Selznick interests; dent and general manager of the Brunton Studios.

Mr. Edwards is in the second week of his appearance at the Orpheum theatre, Los Angeles, and after playing one or two additional cities which will wind up his five months' tour of the Orpheum Circuit he will return to Hollywood to commence work on his first production. While in Los Angeles he has been working on the story with Mrs. Albert Shelby Le Vino, who is also preparing the continuity.

As soon as he arrived at Los Angeles, Mr. Edwards called upon Harry Rapf at the Selznick West Coast Studios and disclosed to him his plans for producing "School Days." Mr. Edwards spent much of his time at the studios, and within one week the company had been formed, the story prepared and all arrangements were made to cast the picture and start work upon Mr. Edwards's return from the road. He intends to "live" with the picture from the time the first set is erected until the assembling and cutting are completed.

New Mayer Studios Ready

Administration Forces Have Occupied Los Angeles Plant; Stages a Feature

THE recently completed $100,000 administration buildings of the Louis B. Mayer Company, 3800 Mission Road, Los Angeles, is now occupied by the studio administration forces. The building is thoroughly equipped and furnished.

The architecture is of the French medieval period and presents an imposing appearance in the stately grove of California eucalyptus. The offices are located in the thirty-five acre estate of Colonel William N. Selig, and new roadways are being graded connecting the buildings with Mission Road.

A large throng of visitors took part in the opening. Among these were Lois Weber, her husband, Philip Smalley, Grace Miller White and her husband, and Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Hoffman.

Two floors of the new administration building are devoted exclusively to dressing rooms. These are well ventilated and equipped with hot and cold running water. The top floors of the building are devoted to the housing of executive and technical offices as well as rooms for directors and cameramen.

In the rear of the building the brick cutting rooms and laboratories to be presided over by Billy Shea, chief cutter, are nearing completion. Individual dressing bungalows for Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, Louis B. Mayer stars, have been completed.

Three big dark stages have been completed, and the fourth will be started within a few days. On their completion the Mayer studios will be among the finest in the world and will be the most modern and thoroughly equipped, it is stated.

School Children Go to Capitol in Body

Thirty little girls from the Municipal school for the deaf, at 225 East 23rd Street, dropped their regular studies on the afternoon of February 5, to attend the matinee performance at the Capitol theatre as guests of Managing Director Edward Bowes. The little children, while totally deaf, are all expert lip-readers, and they were enthuisastic over the presentation of "Hiawatha," which they are studying, in operatic form.

"The Honey Bee" Said to Have Many Angles

"Seldom has a photodrama been produced which has so many and such diverse angles of interest through which to make its bid for popularity as "The Honey Bee," says the American Film. The American Film Company believes it has been particularly fortunate in its choice of story and cast.

Madame Marguerita Sylva in the role of "Hilda Wilson," portrays the highly successful and accomplished business woman, who at heart is the natural, primitive female impelled by the natural hunger for love and motherhood. This role the diva handles with an understanding and finesse which immediately catches and holds the undivided sympathy of the spectators. Thomas Holding is the serious, scholarly man of affairs in the play, "Harris Doreyn," whom the heroine loves against her will; while marriage rites bind him to a frivolous, young beauty. Nigel Barrie takes the role of the professional pugilist, "Blink Moran," strong and manly, the type the women of the audience adore.

The Full Cast of "The Penalty" Published

News of Eminent Authors Pictures received at the Goldwyn offices this week from the Culver City studios gives the cast of Gouverneur Morris' first production, "The Penalty," under the direction of Wallace Worsley. It includes Lou Chaney, Claire Adams, Kenneth Harlan, Charles Clary, Ethel Grey Terry, Milton Ross and Edouard Trebaol. Many of the scenes of "The Penalty" will be taken in San Francisco.

Exhibitor Names Infant After Harold Lloyd

Pathe announces that Harold Lloyd has scored again, but this time it is not in the way of a new picture hit, according to the report received. H. K. Hecht, owner of the Garden theatre, Passaic, N. J., states that the latest addition to the Hecht family has been named after the screen comedian, "Harold Lloyd Hecht," and is registered with this imposing appellation in the records of the City Hall at Passaic.

Await "Mutt and Jeff" Unit

New Fox Headquarters Expect the Bud Fisher Forces to Be Settled Shortly

THE Mutt and Jeff laboratories, it is announced at the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation, will be brought under the Fox roof in the near future. They will be located on the ground floor, 56th Street side, and will be under the personal supervision of Bud Fisher, the clever originator of the friendly enemies, Mutt and Jeff. New equipment, to meet the constantly increasing demand for Mr. Fisher's cartoons and the consequent pressure of technical work, is already being installed. A special projection room has been set aside for the purpose of expediting the production of the popular mirth-makers.

The advent of the Animated Cartoon laboratories to the new building is in line with the Fox policy of consolidating all the company's New York activities except the New York Exchange under one roof. "The Mutt and Jeff series—'the long and the short of it,' as a dramatic critic remarked— is demonstrating that there is a big market for genuine riproaring fun," says a report from the Fox Film offices. "Theatres, booking these comedies, are increasing at a phenomenal rate, many of them featuring the Bud Fisher triumphs on their programs. Unstinted praise from the lips of patrons has convinced exhibitors all over the country that the entertainment value of clever cartoons is enormous. The idea of rollicking hilarity is so closely connected with the names of Mutt and Jeff that the news of their coming to the new studio building has given the faces of the workers there a holiday aspect.

The latest of the Mutt and Jeff creations, scheduled for release this month, is "I'm Ringing Your Party." "It is a yarn surcharged with laughs, based on suffering humanity's telephone grouches. It is guaranteed to cure everything in the line of worries except the flu," says the Fox report.

Statement on "Empty Arms"

Lester Park Issues Announcement on Forthcoming Photodrama Production

WHEN seen at the offices of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, producers of the forthcoming maternity and birth control picture, "Empty Arms," at 500 Fifth avenue, New York City, Mr. Park said:

"Coming at a time when the world is in dire need of just such a photoplay, 'Empty Arms,' is destined to be carried across the Continent on a wave of interest such as has been showered on but few motion pictures in cinema history.

"'Empty Arms' is not a propaganda picture. It is, first of all, a picture vibrant with dramatic power, made with an excellent cast under the direction of a master craftsman of screen and stage. We do not believe in propaganda pictures—people do not go to the theatre to be preached to. They want a story. A powerful one is contained in 'Empty Arms.'

"Every exhibitor knows how much curiosity there is in every household about the perplexing questions of life and materity. Every woman is struggling with herself—every man has his dreams and ideals, either in the future or in the past. At this time the country is alive with the discussion of maternity. It is conservatively estimated that there are in the United States over 100,000 clubs whose weekly discussion is of, or connected with, this colossal subject. 'Empty Arms' is a photoplay which will be supported by thousands upon thousands of organizations with their millions of members. It will hurl a benefiting thunderbolt into the minds of the men and women of America."

Charles Ray Proud of Record

Says His Main Satisfaction in Past Is That His Products Have Been Clean

CHARLES RAY came to the end of one "era" in his life and began another the other day. He completed eight years of continuous service with Thomas H. Ince, the producer, and took up the duties incident to the formation of a company to make pictures under his own complete control. The occasion brought forth a statement which follows:

"As I look back over those eight years," he said, "I feel a satisfaction that I have never appeared in a picture of unwholesome nature. I deserve no special credit for this record; it is a normal impulse to want to be decent and to be liked and remembered for one's good influence, and I am sure actors who have departed from the lines of propriety have not always been able to control their own careers at every step. I have been fortunate in not having been tempted into an unhealthy course, but I have nevertheless followed my own inclinations and am glad that there is nothing to regret.

"I now take a vow to continue along this line. No amount of profit would persuade me to offend the sensibilities of people who properly have strict standards in the matter of their entertainment.

"My change to the position of an independent producer has brought many letters from both men and women thanking me for the avoidance of coarseness and telling me how glad they are they can always depend upon my films as worthy to send their children to see. I think a great deal of these tributes.

Cathedral Setting in "Earth Bound"

What is said to be the largest representation of a cathedral interior ever constructed on a motion picture stage is that used in the Goldwyn picture, "Earth Bound." Under the direction of Art Director Cedric Gibbons, his staff worked for weeks on the planning and construction of the big project.

One of the most impressive features of the entire cathedral is the crucifix. The figure of Christ is nearly thirteen feet in height, and is done in bas-relief, instead of the full figure. This design is unique, and is exceedingly effective. The figure, with the background, was designed and built at the studio.

Pathe News No. 10 Has Timely Views

Of all the recent uses in the development in the efficiency of the aeroplane, the strangest use to date is shown in Pathe News No. 10, when for the first time an aeroplane takes the place of a hearse in a military funeral. Another aeroplane is shown with the wheels removed and skiis substituted for winter use. The plane runs as smoothly over the ice and snow.

The first pictures of the U. S. Transport Powhatan, finally docked in the harbor at Halifax, after being storm tossed and in constant peril for eleven days, are also shown.

The First of De Haven Comics Released Soon

"Hoodooed," the first of the Paramount-Carter De Haven Comedies to be released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be available for exhibitors February 22, it is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, this series of comedies, it is declared, are expected to prove one of the most popular short subjects of the season. They are two reels in length and each of them is built around a theme familiar in every day life.

Universal's Magazine Releases No. 54

In issue No. 54 of Universal's New Screen Magazine, just released, the habits and life of the raccoon, mink and bear are pictured. The setting of traps to catch these fellows; the sale of the pelts for huge sums are all interesting as well as instructive scenes. Milady who is interested in next spring's styles will view the wondrous creations in taffeta and chiffon. Some very interesting traits of the ferret are also shown on this reel. This peculiar animal always wins the rat fight. He makes a good pet and is always at home with the children.

Referendum to Decide Sunday Opening

According to reports received from Watervliet, N. Y., it seems as if the fight waged for Sunday pictures is about to result in a victory for the motion-picture interests. The four theatres in this city circulated petitions to be signed by those who were in favor of Sunday pictures and out of 17,000 people, about 75 per cent. voted in favor of opening, it is said.

A hearing was granted at the City Hall at which 400 residents attended. A request was made that the question be submitted to a vote by the people. The decision of the city council will be given at their next meeting on February 10th. From all reports the decision will be favorable to the referendum.

Arrow Announces Recent Sales to Visitors

The Arrow Film Corporation announces the sales of Arrow features to L. C. Coen of Minneapolis, Minn., and to C. C. Hite of Cincinnati. Mr. Coen purchased from Arrow "The Vigilantes," a seven-reel superproduction for the territory of Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin; and "The Desert Scorpion" for the territory of Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

Both gentlemen report that business is very good in their respective territories and that there is a demand for feature productions especially.

Mayer Gets Well-Known Art Director

Richard E. Sibley, one of the best known art-directors of the movies and the legitimate stage, is now identified with Louis B. Mayer at the new studios at 3800 Mission Road, Los Angeles. For eighteen years Sibley was a successful artist of the legitimate stage. During the last eight years he has been identified with the movies and in that time is said to have designed some of the most striking settings the screen has known.

Comedy and Drama Found in Hodkinson Issue

"His Temporary Wife" with a good cast, including Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong and W. T. Carleton, is reported by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to be a production in which comedy and drama have a merry time battling for the supremacy. Prints of the picture are said to have been received by all the Hodkinson branches.

Three-Room Set Seen in "The Mad Talon"

Practically the entire floor space of the George B. Seitz studio, it is stated, has been converted into a three-room set for Juanita Hansen's first Pathe serial, "The Mad Talon," which is being directed by Bertram Millhauser.

Plan Chic Sale's Premier

His First Picture to Be Five-Reeler, Adapted from an Irvin S. Cobb Story

CHIC SALE'S picture debut is to be made under the auspices of Al. Christie at the Hollywood Studio of the Christie Film Company, work to begin as soon as Sale's vaudeville tour is ended about the middle of February. His first photoplay will be a five-reeler adapted from "The Smart Aleck," a story by Irvin S. Cobb in the Saturday Evening Post.

While in New York recently Charles Christie, the business head of the Christie Company entered into a contract with the Exceptional Pictures Corporation to produce the Sale feature comedy which is to be released by the Robertson-Cole Company. No expense is to be spared in making the production, as it is the plan of Mr. Sale and his business associates to make such an excellent start in the picture field that his future efforts will be confined wholly to the photodrama.

More Units at Fox Studio

Four Companies Are Housed in New Plant; Production Work Continues

WITHIN five days after the executive offices of the Fox Film Corporation were housed under the roof of the enormous new Fox building in West 55th Street, four of the organization's directors were shooting scenes in the huge studio, which occupies the entire top floor of the massive structure.

As was recently announced, Pearl White, the popular star, was the first to appear in her make-up on the big stage, in the screen adaptation of "The White Moll," under the direction of Harry Millarde. The next director to make his appearance with his company was Richard Stanton. The Stanton company has been at work for some time now on a production about which very little is known as yet; but rumor has it, according to Fox Film, that the picture when completed will bring to the silversheet an unusual production. Mr. Stanton, whose most recent production for William Fox was "Checkers," a racing melodrama, is said to be introducing some striking effects and thrills in his new picture.

Following the Stanton company came Charles J. Brabin. Mr. Brabin is engaged upon the production of "While New York Sleeps." "While New York Sleeps" is scheduled for early release.

Maeterlinck Leaves for West

Under Auspices of Goldwyn Company the Belgian Poet Travels On President's Car

AS the guest of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet, playwright and novelist, left New York, Tuesday evening, February 10th, in the private car, "The Mayflower," bound for the Goldwyn studios at Culver City.

"The Mayflower" is the car used by President Wilson on his tours, and this is one of the few occasions on which it has been placed at the disposal of anyone except the chief executive of the country.

Included in M. Maeterlinck's party are Madame Maeterlinck, a French actress of beauty and charm; Henry Russell, an old friend of the poet, who is acting as his representative in this country; Mrs. Russell, a native of California; W. R. Macdonald, Maeterlinck's business representative, and Edwin Justus Mayer, a well known magazine and newspaper writer from the Goldwyn home office. In addition to these there will be a corps of secretaries and stenographers.

The purpose of the Belgian's trip to California is to visit the Goldwyn Studios where he will study the technique of picture making preparatory to writing one original story a year for Goldwyn, according to the terms of the contract signed last week. But the itinerary of the tour is so arranged that stops will be made at a number of the most important cities on the line of travel.

On arriving in Los Angeles, the party will be met by Samuel Goldwyn, who went to the coast last week. The poet-philosopher will be introduced immediately to the mysteries of picture production.

New York F.I.L.M. Club Reports Activities

American Film Company, 1600 Broadway, New York City, have discontinued their membership in the New York City F. I. L. M. Club. A new rule was adopted governing grievance committee membership. Henceforth, five managers or executives will be selected by President Chadwick to serve four weeks. Then five others will be appointed for a similar period. By this plan, every member will be obliged to serve during the year on this committee.

More Bookings for the Louise Glaum Film

Increased momentum was given to the success of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second big Louise Glaum production. "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," this week when it was booked for first runs by Frank L. Newman, the big Kansas City exhibitor, for his Newman theatre; by Charles H. Miles for presentation at the Miles, Cleveland; by Jake Wells for his Granby, Norfolk, Va.; and his Colonial, Richmond; the Savoy, Wilmington, Del.; the Walnut, Louisville, Ky.; the American, Terre Haute, Ind.; and the Colonial, Seattle, Wash.

Subjects of Goldwyn-Bray Release 7026

Four subjects of contrasting character comprise the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7026, released through the Goldwyn exchanges. They are: "A Drink on the Fly," "A Bird City of the Pacific," "A Flying Furnace," and a "Jerry on the Job" cartoon, called "A Warm Reception."

Leonard's Support Go to Ringside

The members of Benny Leonard's supporting company working in his serial "The Evil Eye," brought their support as rooters to the ringside, when Benny Leonard met Johnny Dundee in their recent eight-round bout in the Arena at Jersey City.

"Universal Leads; Others Copy"

That's What Official Claims in Course of Statement

R. H. COCHRANE, vice president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., has just issued a statement in which he comments on "old" and "new" blood in the moving picture business and claims many productions, made by Universal, which set a precedent for other film companies to follow.

"It's a strange fact," says Mr. Cochrane, "a most unusual thing, that the oldest successful company in the business shows more new ideas, more pep, more out-of-the-ordinary novelties than any of the newer, younger concerns.

"In most lines of business the so-called new blood usually makes the old timers look like back numbers. In the picture business this is reversed, because Universal which is the oldest successful company in the business, is continuing to keep a little ahead of the other fellows, with new ideas.

"For example, we developed a brand new twist to the whole production end of the business when we offered Blind Husbands to the exhibitor. It was, and is, a refreshing change from the humdrum affairs known as program pictures. The picture is naturally making an unusual profit for exhibitors everywhere.

"Another new idea is the Locklear picture, The Great Air Robbery. Universal can claim the honor of being the first film company to realize the possibilities of aviation in making pictures. Our news reel had always featured flying. It was natural to attempt an aerial pace-setter. The Great Air Robbery is the result of careful planning on the parts of scenario writer, aviation experts and director. It may seem simple to say you are going to make an aerial feature picture, but when it comes down to producing an aerial drama of the highest quality, a picture which contains thrilling moments but which is not melodramatic, a great problem presents itself. Universal therefore takes just pride in having been able to release the first drama staged in the clouds."

"The Joe Martin comedies are a totally distinct attraction opening up entirely new possibilities for producers and exhibitors. Our unusual dog picture, The Eternal Triangle, in which all parts are played by dogs exclusively, has created somewhat of a furore all over the globe.

"We were the first to produce a Screen Magazine, and this, like our other features, has been copied by many producers. We made the first picture at the bottom of the sea. We made the first great war picture in The Kaiser, The Beast of Berlin, and the whole trade knows what a flock of copyists we had after we released this big box-office attraction.

"We sent the first great expedition to South Africa in conjunction with the Smithsonian Institution. Two other producers promptly tried to follow suit in a smaller way. We sent the first company to Europe to make serials. Others liked the idea so well they all started doing the same thing.

"At present we have Marie Walcamp and a large party traveling around China, Japan and the Philippines to get some unusual settings for a series of pictures. We expect a number of companies to follow the idea any day."

United Announces Two More Releases

"The Hick," a Recreated Triangle play, will be the United Picture exchange release following "The Corsican Brothers." "The Hick," which stars Charles Ray and Bessie Barriscale will be released on February 29.

The Florence Reed feature, "The Eternal Mother," will be released by the United Picture exchanges on April 18. In the supporting cast are Lionel Atwill and Jere Austen. The story combines love, mystery and highly dramatic scenes, it is stated.

Read Signs Important Contracts

Hobart Bosworth and Bayard Veiller in the Deals

PRODUCER J. PARKER READ, JR., has an active program in view judging from the reports that have reached here concerning some of the negotiations that Mr. Read has been party to of late. One report has to do with his signing of a contract with Hobart Bosworth, creator of the "Sea Wolf," whereby the latter has agreed to produce film plays under Mr. Read's supervision.

Bosworth already is occupied with preparations for his first picture for Read, the character of which has not yet been divulged. Irvin Willat will wield the megaphone for the forthcoming release. J. O. Taylor will be camera chief. The scenario was created by E. Magnus Ingleton. The film will be made at the Ince studios in Culver City.

The second announcement is concerned with another contract signed by Bayard Veiller, whereby Mr. Veiller has agreed to do a big play for J. Parker Read, Jr., as a vehicle for Louise Glaum.

Read himself is said to have inspired Veiller with the idea for a dynamic vehicle for Miss Glaum, whose volatile personality evidently captured the fancy of the playwright, for, according to the producer, he has gone deep at the root of a knotty social problem in his Louise Glaum vehicle and, incidentally, has provided the star with a role the like of which she has not heretofore undertaken, neither in character nor in dramatic possibilities.

Though J. Parker Read, Jr., is not yet ready to state the theme of the Veiller story, nor has it as yet been titled, he does acknowledge the fact that he has promised the author one of the most elaborate—as well as one of the most faithful—screen presentations possible to achieve within the proper limits of the scenario.

Hitherto all the Veiller brain-children have been destined, primarily, for the stage. It was Read who convinced Veiller that he should attempt a direct-to-the-screen scenario. And the creator of several of America's finest dramaturgic achievements declares that he feels quite at home dashing out "original and continuity" in Culver City.

The Veiller story doubtless will be a special of exceptional calibre. Read intends to spend as much as $150,000 on the production and is about to sign one of the most capable, as well as one of the most prominently mentioned, directors in the industry.

M. and Mme. Maeterlinck Endorse the Screen

According to reports from the Frohman Amusement Corporation, the motion picture has won the commendation of another artist high in the ranks of his profession. The latest expression of esteem for the "silent drama" comes from M. Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet. Time was, the Frohman Corporation points out, when the picture was generally regarded by the higher-lights with a "tilted nose." Times have changed this attitude. The approval of M. Maeterlinck and the enthusiasm of Mme. Maeterlinck for the motion picture marks another step forward in the breaking down of the old-time barriers against the artistic quality of the screen.

Character Pictures Is Seeking for Talent

Character Pictures Corporation declares that there is a distinct shortage in the motion picture business of girls gifted with beauty and brains, so necessary for success on the screen. While there are perhaps thousands of girls about the studios, the great majority of them have but small chance of being developed into leading players, says the corporation.

The company has started an active campaign in search of youthful beauties, gifted with the qualities fitting them for success on the screen. The girls selected by the company will be trained and schooled, it is stated. They will be given small parts in the start and gradually developed into principal players. The screen is constantly in need of new faces and new personalities, and the public always welcomes them when they fill the demand for the silent stage.

Moreno Directs During Illness of Bowman

Antonio Moreno is directing the fourteenth episode of "The Invisible Hand," his current Vitagraph serial, owing to the sudden illness of Director William Bowman. The episode includes some of the biggest scenes in the chapter play; one requires the star to drive an automobile over a cliff for a sheer drop of more than fifty feet into a river.
